The Serial Glorious

"Give me 'LIBERTY!'"

Is the cry of Exhibitors from Maine to California—from Canada to the Gulf.

"LIBERTY" is beyond question the greatest serial ever produced. The most timely; with all the elements of popularity. A revelation in serials.

Marie Walcamp

Jack Holt—Eddie Polo

20 Mighty Episodes

Thrilling—Patriotic—Sensational

"LIBERTY"

Has created a greater stir among Exhibitors than any picture released this season. The thrilling scenes are laid along the Mexican Border. There is a military atmosphere that will arouse the patriotic emotions.

There is a golden thread of romantic love that charms and fascinates.

"THE UNATTAINABLE"

WITH DOROTHY DAVENPORT & EMORY JOHNSON.

A BEAUTIFUL STORY OF LOVE AND RIGHTEOUSNESS VERSUS TREACHERY AND DECEIT.

FROM THE STORY BY ELWOOD
DIRECTED BY ——— PRODUCED
BY ——— LLOYD B. CARLETON

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

THE Exhibitor who follows blindly the trail of loud claims of superiority which finds outlet in the current trade press, must sooner or later pay dearly for his easy going attitude.

To book a play on the strength of the fleeting and too often fictitious reputation of a "star" under the mistaken notion that that is what the public wants, is to follow a will o' the wisp which will eventually lead to the dismal swamp of commercial failure.

If the star were a real attraction, his or her acting ability would be the basis of the "star" appeal. The BLUEBIRD policy of the "The Play's the Thing" suits the personality of the player to the type of character required, regardless of whether such player's name has ever appeared in electric lights or not.

The result is that the BLUEBIRD play is always strong, worthy, and the basis of fine entertainment, and the acting is far above that of even the most widely exploited star player productions.

These facts presented each week to the ten million readers of the Saturday Evening Post are bringing increased prosperity to Exhibitors of BLUEBIRD Photoplays.

THOMAS O SORIERO
MANAGER

August 9, 1916.

Mr. Edward Thanhousser,
President of ths Thanhousser Film Corp,
New Rochells, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Thanhouser:

The production of The Shine Girl, I rsceivsd last night. I immsdiatsly scrssnsd it before an audisnce of 100 prominsnt Bostonians this morning at ths Theatrs. Had special music to go with it, and it met with an unanimous approval. Personally it is one of the bsst productions I havs seen in a long while. Ths acting throughout was very well done, detail work perfect, photography wonderful. Ths star Miss Glady's Hulstte played ths part of ths Shine Girl to perfsction. One thing that I must mantion about her is that shs is very attractivs and knows how to dress well, which makes hsr very plsasing to ths eye. The picture is one of the clsanest productions I sver saw put togethsr, as thsre is nothing there to offend anybody. It makes a pleasant entertainment for all those who wish to go to a good, clean show, and if you continue making such pictures, you will always find a big market for them, for thsy ars just what the psopls want, and just what the exhibitors also want.

Very sincersly yours,

Thos D Soriero

Manager.

Quit Worrying

When the telephone business was organized, men quit worrying about communication.

When the automobile was put on a practical basis, men quit worrying about transportation.

When Paramount was organized, motion picture exhibitors quit worrying about their service.

Not till Paramount began its distribution of two supreme photoplays a week, 104 every year, did the motion picture business take on a semblance of stability.

Today, with thousands of exhibitors in the Paramount family, a Paramount contract remains the one solid guarantee of the success of a theatre.

With a Paramount contract you too can quit worrying about your program or its continuity through all that may happen next week or next year.

Paramount's stability is your stability and the guarantee that every week you will have two Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco, or Pallas photoplays in your theatre, is the best reason in the world to join the family, and

The SECRET of the SUBMARINE

Presented by American Film Company, Inc.
Directed by George Sargent

"Wednesdays Almost Doubled in Business"

HIPPODROME THEATRE
Cincinnati, Ohio, July 27th, 1916.

I wish to inform you of the success our theatre is enjoying directly from the serial story, "THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE."

Our Wednesdays have almost doubled in business; we ourselves, are interested in the story and we look forward to its coming with greater interest than any feature.

The acting is great and the photography excellent, the story, directing and the settings are far in advance of anything we have ever run on our curtain.

We feel thankful to you for interesting us in this serial and we cheerfully recommend it to all exhibitors that are skeptical of a serial.

Yours very truly,
THE HIPPODROME THEATRE
(Signed) O. J. SYBERT, Mgr.

This virile, patriotic photoplay (in 15 chapters) has proved the greatest drawing card ever shown in thousands of theatres. It gets the overflow profits!

Juanita Hanson, as Cleo Burke, and Thomas Chatterton, as Lieut. Hope, supported by a strong cast, give the screen gripping thrills and smashing climaxes that draw audiences to the edge of the seats, and hold them there till the end of the chapter.

The exciting pen story by E. Alexander Powell, is published in over a thousand prominent newspapers, and read by millions who insist on seeing the film every week.

Mary Pickford Film Corporation

IN announcing the formation of the MARY PICKFORD FILM CORPORATION, I want to first express my gratitude for the co-operation of the exhibitors, everywhere, and also for the generous response of the public in bringing success to my efforts and various creations on the screen. Surely without either no one can have progressed and in my instance our work together has been so full of happiness that it makes doubly treasured the success that has come to us.

IN the selection of scenarios, the casting of companies, the direction, production and character creating of motion pictures I am sure that I have learned something every day and that I will keep on acquiring this knowledge. And that is just why I want to use it to the best advantage in guiding my own company which will now produce all of the plays in which I am to be seen. It is our purpose not only to give every detail of the Mary Pickford Film Corporation our unfaltering direction but to surround ourselves with the best brains, ability and skill in this wonderful art-industry.

IT will be our purpose and endeavor to make most complete, elaborate and art harmonizing productions—each of which is to stand out pre-eminently as a master work. The productions will be the best that are made. Each will have a cast of distinction, a direction of originality and creativeness, fine environment, its own especially written music—all with that dignity, simplicity and artistic ensemble that will make the best in motion pictures and attract the largest and most discriminating audiences. I want the Mary Pickford pictures to be seen in every theatre and play house in the country. We are delighted with the arrangements and broad plan of distribution made by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation which has been formed to handle them.

PROMPTED by your encouragement of the past, and for which I feel that I owe so much to you in aiding me to reach an ambitious attainment, I feel now that with this incentive and with the ever present confidence with which you have approved and admired my work that I can now reach still higher, giving you the supreme of our art endeavor—but always depending on your affectionate interest, for which I am now and always,

Gratefully, Mary Pickford

ARTCRAFT PICTURES

Distributors of the

WITH full confidence the ARTCRAFT PICTURES CORPORATION makes its entry into the film industry announcing that it has been organized to present and distribute film attractions that will evidence the highest attainments of the cinematographic art. For its initial undertaking it now offers to the exhibitor of America the productions of THE MARY PICKFORD FILM CORPORATION, in which will be presented exclusively the greatest artist in the history of the world of amusements.

MARY PICKFORD

No personality is so dominant in motion pictures as that of Mary Pickford. It is the crystalization of magnetism without a parallel in the history of either the spoken or the silent stage.

Every exhibitor knows that the advent of a new Mary Pickford picture means an event in the season of his theatre or playhouse. This has been the unfailing rule.

NOW, heading her own film corporation Mary Pickford with her wonderful art and great experience will bring to these productions a new life, a stronger drawing power and a more lasting charm, being alone and on no programme she will completely pervade the entertainment presented.

...ES CORPORATION

...Best in Motion Pictures

IT is Mary Pickford's desire that these new productions shall be the best ever presented on the screen; they will be limited in number, but unlimited in cost. She will be surrounded by the best brains, skill and creative resourcefulness obtainable in this art industry. Each production will be a master-work and artistic ensemble beyond compare—that will in every detail have the wondrous touch and never failing appeal of Mary Pickford.

IT is the purpose to present the Mary Pickford pictures everywhere. It is her own desire that they shall be seen in every theatre and motion picture house in the land. She comes to you alone with productions surpassing anything yet done on the screen, supporting casts of distinction, master direction—in all a complete harmonizing of every detail of the art in which she stands alone as its most popular and favored star—the incomparable Mary Pickford.

THERE'S a precious quality in gems which can be imitated but not duplicated. Counterfeits don't last: they soon grow dull.

I know jewels: it used to be my business. I recognized the true fire and the light of genius in Clara Kimball Young, the moment I saw her work. Once a gem-judge—always. I put her in a proper setting—at the head of her own company. Her first production is being mounted now by Albert Capellini—"The Common Law," by Robert W. Chambers.

In October you will have an opportunity to contrast the most superb work of her career with "pasty" program performances. Tiffany days are at last dawning in the industry. The reign of the rhinestone is over.

John Wanamaker's Policy Is Our Policy

THE principles which have made him the world's foremost merchant are identical with those, which, in less than a year and a half, have put V-L-S-E to the forefront.

> Founded on economic order and commercial justice, these principles recognize the right of the buyer to select that which suits his purposes best, and to pay for it, according to its individual merit.

There is nothing very startling about these ideas, only the fact that they were not applied in the film industry before.

Their overwhelming acceptance now is proof positive that the business men in this field are just as alert to "fair play" and bed-rock business principles, as in any other.

Blood isn't always thicker than water. "The Kid," for instance, didn't fall in the arms of the man who was her real father, even though they were ladened with riches. Rather, she turned to a down-in-the-hill newspaper man—the only protector she had ever known. But there was a big reason "why," and that makes for a story that grips the attention and the heart-strings.

Man's vengeance—or Fate's?

For the second time Vincent Marbridge comes between John Matthias and the woman he loves. The first time Matthias had forgiven, and the wound had healed. This time the humility, the forbearance, can endure no more. But a greater power seeks out the sinner and strikes the blow for Matthias. It is Fate's vengeance—the reckoning the transgressor cannot evade.

Facts and Comments

IT WILL surprise the many motion picture friends who belong to Rotary Clubs to hear that at the International Convention of Rotary Clubs held in Cincinnati last month a resolution was adopted requesting every Rotary Club to join in a movement to bring about the establishment of local boards of censorships. The object of this resolution is said to be the elimination of "objectionable motion pictures." We know of many an exhibitor and many a film man belonging to Rotary Clubs. As far as we know these clubs are splendid institutions serving a fine purpose and have done much good. All the more surprising, therefore, is this reactionary stand on the motion picture. Civic clubs all over the country are beginning to array themselves against censorship, notably the women's clubs. If any member of a Rotary who is a friend of the motion picture wants to help in a campaign of education the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will be glad to supply him with its anti-censorship literature on request.

FROM a communication addressed to us by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review we are glad to see that the Board is in hearty sympathy with the resolution in opposition to the rentals of film by exchanges to schools and churches without previous consultation of the exhibitor who might be affected by such rental. In the course of the letter to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD Mr. Cocks says "that every letter which goes out of his office and every piece of literature which is written advises cordial co-operation with the exhibitor in the various cities and towns. We are convinced from practical experience that the exhibitor knows his business as no one else in the community and that he can be relied upon to furnish what the public wants and to continue the work long after the social and religious worker has lost interest in actually making the thing go. Our experience coincides with yours that the ordinary exhibitor is a fine public servant and simply needs the support in dollars and cents of his community to give them the very best they desire." Readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD ought to be particularly interested in the joint estimate of the exhibitor by the Board of Review and the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Both know the exhibitor. It is curious in view of the foregoing to find an expression of disapproval in a certain section of the trade press. The section is out of touch and out of sympathy with the exhibitor and therefore suffering from a paralysis of the circulation.

THE proposed co-operation between the producers and exhibitors is now awaiting definite shape. No doubt the executive and administrative offices will be organized in a short time. There is an enormous amount of important work piled up before the new organization. If the producers show the same spirit of unselfishness which was evidenced in the filling of the offices at the Chicago convention the most hopeful view of the future is entirely justifiable.

"YOU cannot force extra money out of your patronage by showing objectionable pictures," said State President Sawyer of Ohio in a recent address to the Brooklyn exhibitors. "Every community has just so much money to spend for amusements. This is an economic condition which admits of no theorizing." Plain simple words which are respectfully dedicated to the earnest consideration of every man interested in showing motion pictures for a livelihood.

* * *

AN esteemed reader and friend of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD in Philadelphia suggests in a letter addressed to us that, first, "every producer should carry a protest on every film, as the censors cannot cut free speech," and second, "every producer should submit to the Board of Review and that exhibitors should refuse to book unstamped productions." This is being done in England today, and in the language of our correspondent, "it will drive out the salacious producer." The writer expresses the hope that the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will take up this question, and we sincerely hope it will.

Hazy Ideas About Art

By Louis Reeves Harrison

AS a matter of self-defense men often scoff at what they know nothing about. Given a good salesman, one who can place a picture in spite of the opposition he meets, the very mention of art starts his risibles. "I suppose it is all right for those who like it, but what is it to me? Give me what the people want, and I will sell the goods. No art for mine." Yet he has an art all his own, the skill that he shows in his particular line of effort. He calls that "business." It is art that he rightly applies his ability to a given purpose.

Given a superior publicity man, one who has acquired a keen knowledge of human nature through an active experience, who has a knack of arousing attention and a large amount of facility in attending to his specialty, he has been known to express good-natured contempt for art in general, though he has cultivated an art in order to further his own ends. The same is true of an efficient business manager who has applied well-established principles of success to the particular line of work in which he is engaged. Yet he may disclaim knowing anything about what is defined in a general way as "art."

A specific use of the word which has come to be vaguely grasped relates very largely to the mediums of expression, both intellectual and emotional, used by creative genius, such as literature, painting, sculpture and the drama, the fine arts that contribute heavily to the pleasure, both spiritual and sensuous, of existence. Though this specific art is usually associated with the idea of beauty by nearly all writers on the subject, a work of beauty may be merely imitative, a copied piece of furniture turned out for purposes of utility only.

Beauty is merely one of the mysterious children of that greater mystery known as Life. What is beautiful to one is not so to another—it is as vague and variable as its parent. It cannot under the circumstances be invariably attached as an essential to art. Beauty might well be called the favorite child of our existence, one that we come to love more and more as our intelligence grows. Always desirable, it is not always indispensable. Art is not, therefore, to be limited to an expression of beauty as some have defined it.

The production of moving pictures is, in a general way, an art, yet it is not art in a finer sense to produce them without high quality of design, conception and execution. It is in this finer sense that the word is oftenest used and most generally understood. We consider the purpose of art as elevating; its function to delve among the mysteries of life and bring forth some refreshing beauty or invigorating truth. We recognize almost intuitively that it requires taste to appreciate ideal beauty and wisdom to separate truth from error, that it requires discretion and constructive imagination to successfully formulate truth and beauty for presentation to other minds, genius.

The atmosphere would be easily cleared if we considered the general production of moving pictures to be a craft and the specific production of what responds to our ideals as an art. I cannot see how, in this elevating sense, there is true art in pictures appealing to morbid desire or low taste. It has become almost an instinct for intelligent people to make some use of the brief interval allotted them on earth which shall be a contribution, no matter how small, to the improvement and refined pleasure of those who live with them and after them.

To deeply feel the charm and meaning of existence and to clearly convey that charm and meaning, to interpret life in all its phases, in all times, and from all points of view is to promote life and often to augment its happiness. Such is the aim of the novel, the drama, the screen story, whether or not there is some splendid doctrine hidden beneath the entertainment. Many a great composition of this kind is, in itself, a propaganda, but the idea is not to get away from the sympathies of those who feel more deeply than they think. The general effect is stronger and more lasting if the mind formulates after the feelings have been addressed. There are many people in a mixed audience whose whole tendency is to feel first and think afterward—if they think at all.

The art of high comedy may make it convincing. That of farce comedy may keep it from being stupid. For characters in the latter to laugh may be stupid—the art is to counterfeit stupidity and permit the audience to do the laughing. People may be easily amused by human weakness, laugh to see a man take himself too seriously. Yet they may be stirred to pity when he stumbles and falls in his effort, when he tries his best to do what is beyond his strength. Human emotions delicately balance between grave and gay—it is art to rightly stir them.

We grasp the art of any medium when we grasp the relations of fiction and truth. Starting with an imaginative conception, the art of portrayal becomes purely that of imagery, the simulation of truth. The imagery is not art when it fails to convince. It fails because there are defects somewhere, in the author's script, in the director's handling, in the actor's interpretation. Art makes for perfection of imagery.

It would save many a student confusion while roaming galleries where the finest examples of painting and sculpture are collected if he kept in mind that art makes for perfection of imagery. It will save many a producer of moving pictures confusion if he will keep the same idea in mind. To visualize a work of the imaginaton so that it shall be recognized as a true example of art does not mean to twist it out of shape to suit this or that star performer. Stars are just as good for billboard purposes if they interpret the story, instead of themselves, and they are not real artists unless capable of such interpretation.

Starting with an imaginative conception, the author builds up interest through characters appropriate for that purpose. When the visualization of interesting stories is attempted, it is art to select types suited to those characters. So far from being art as to be the reverse of it is an attempt to suit the story to the type—it then becomes a mere publicity vehicle, a billboard adjunct, inviting attention to Miss So-and-so, as per our advertisement, but not as an artist.

"When we come upon pictures that sing to us, and yet remain true to the laws of pictures, and lyrics that seem to paint for us pictures, though true to the laws of language, then we meet Shakespearean beauty and partake of that enchantment that is not just life haphazard, but the flower of life, the finest moments of experience, the color of music or philosophy, the quality which nourishes the imagination by giving it food richer than the fare of ordinary experience." "Art is the expression of the zest of living."

Beautiful Things to See

By W. Stephen Bush.

"BEAUTIFUL Things To See" are always welcome in a feature, but let it be proclaimed in every studio with trumpets, etc., that beautiful things to see do not in themselves make a successful picture. It is but too true, as one of my exhibiting friends said to me the other day, that these "beautiful things to see" are frequently used as is the American flag on the vaudeville stage. "Many a poor show has been saved by the American flag." Yes, but many of the shows are too bad to be saved by this impertinent appeal to our national pride. I have seen features—not a few—that had so little punch or story, so little of the genuine element, so little of the thrill that comes with real emotion that even the loveliest settings and the most charming atmosphere were but as beautiful gowns on an ill-favored woman.

A flock of sheep grazing on an ample pasture with sloping hills for a background is ever a pleasing sight, but if it has little or nothing to do with the story it fails of its effect. A baby in the cradle kicking up his legs or happily sucking his thumb will always cause a smile, but there must be some justification in the story for putting it in. A puppy or a kitten playfully cavorting about, a canary in his cage, a handsome collie, a thoroughbred horse are all of them fine subjects for an animal painter and look particularly well and sweet on the screen if they are shown to us in the natural development of a plot or story. The lively antics of a youngster, the roguish smile and the innocent coquetry of a little miss are fascinating, but they must not be depended upon for the success of a feature.

These and similar directorial devices, which as every one of our readers knows we could multiply by the hundred, cannot be substituted for the story and for the dramatic appeal. Moonlight scenes in bewitchingly beautiful gardens, settings that must rouse the envy of the landscape painter, great majestic trees, winding brooks and falling water—all these beautiful things are loved in their proper places and at the right moment, but they will never atone for a poor plot or a disjointed story or for mediocre acting and incompetent direction.

These discoveries are not claimed by me to be original; on the contrary I am only repeating what I hear from my neighbors in the theatre or from exhibitors or friends who are just admirers of the screen and have no financial interest in motion pictures.

"Beautiful Things To See" always make a good picture better; they add to its high quality, but they will not make a good picture out of a poor one. Some one has called these pictures "Rainbow Features"—not a bad definition. The rainbow delights our eyes with marvelous hues painted on the sky, but it fails to satisfy our longing for dramatic entertainment. Some day, perhaps, we will be able to translate even the lofty language of the psalms into the utterance of the screen—nothing seems impossible to the motion picture. The difference—fundamental and everlasting—between the psalmist and the dramatist would not be affected thereby.

The strength of an exhibitor's program is the feature. Perhaps it ought not to be so, perhaps his program ought to be of such even excellence as to make it seem invidious to praise one part of it at the expense of another part. In practice we know that a weak feature is the worst spot on any program. Whence comes the strength of the feature? Solely through its dramatic appeal. If it does not stir one of the great elemental emotions in the human register it is not a feature. All the pretty little by-plays count for nothing in the absence of the big appeal. Of course where "the beautiful things to see" are subordinated to a great strong dominating theme full of dramatic power they are most welcome. The union of the two elements makes a perfect and altogether satisfying feature.

If the exhibitor has to take his choice between a strong dramatic appeal without the pretty by-plays and a picture full of pretty by-plays but barren of any dramatic value I am inclined to believe he will take the former. Beauty in pictures is highly desirable, but dramatic values are absolutely necessary. One is the staff of life, the other represents the luxury of a cake.

Discriminating Exchanges

By W. Stephen Bush.

FROM a large number of complaints coming to this desk and from a hundred conversations with exhibitors I know that a very strong feeling exists among exhibitors against the practice of exchanges discriminating against the exhibitor in favor of theatres belonging to a circuit like Loew's and Proctor's. It is asserted not without reason that the exchange depends for its profits and even for its existence on the average exhibitor who patronizes it regularly winter and summer. When an exhibitor discovers that one of the circuit houses which is taking up motion pictures as a makeshift and substitute in the summer months can get anything it wants from an exchange in utter disregard of his own interests he is naturally aggrieved. Such policy on the part of the exchange is shortsighted and if persisted in it may prove suicidal.

We fail to see where the big house belonging to a large circuit and using more vaudeville than motion pictures is of any particular value to the progress and prosperity of the motion picture industry. Long ago we have described the place where vaudeville is mixed with motion pictures as a "misfit amusement parlor," and with few exceptions the definition still stands. Let us waive that part for the present. The fact remains that in price cutting and in ruinous competition the circuit theatres hold an unenviable record. They aim to destroy the smaller houses in the neighborhood by giving ten acts of vaudeville and a dozen reels of pictures for ten cents. If they succeed in driving out their smaller competitors they of course diminish the number of customers for the exchange and the producer. In spite of this simple arithmetic I know of my own knowledge that in a dozen localities exchanges give the big circuit man the best of it. Especially is this true in the summer time. The circuit theatre with the big seating capacity is coddled and favored at a time when the regular and steady customer of the exchange, i. e., the average exhibitor, is having the hardest struggle of the year.

It might be well for these discriminating exchanges to remember that the exhibitors today are better organized than ever before and that they represent a vastly greater number of theaters in the aggregate than all the mixed motion picture and vaudeville circuits put together. There is talk even now of exerting this power and of convincing exchange managers in a very practical manner of their folly in discriminating against their best patrons.

The idea still prevalent in some quarters that the exhibitor is the "goat" in perpetuum is a rusty tradition in the light of late events in Chicago. Exchange managers and producers will consult their own best interests by stopping this sort of discrimination in favor of the big vaudeville houses. If they don't it is altogether likely that they are due for a rude awakening before the year is out.

Present Status of the Federal Tax Bill

Measure Now in the Senate Which Proposes to Restore the Old Law—Politics May Prevent Such Action

STATUS OF THE FEDERAL TAX BILL.

THE contentions of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States, as stated and advanced by the Moving Picture World, have been upheld by the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, who last week reported to the Senate a rewritten general revenue bill with a provision taxing motion picture and other theaters, museums, etc., which, if a tax must be imposed, is very satisfactory.

The Moving Picture World, granting that the Federal Government found it necessary to levy upon the theaters, already made the prey of all sorts of municipal, town, city, county and state taxes, has always declared that there was injustice even in the so-called war emergency revenue act that went into effect on October 22, 1914, and which has since been reenacted, in that it provided the same degree of taxation for the five and ten-cent shows as for the legitimate houses with admission prices running up into the dollars, and failed to make any allowance for the theater in the small town, open one, two or three nights a week and catering to a very limited patronage. In the proposal of the Senate this latter is modified.

In the report of the Committee it is said that "The House bill imposes a tax of one-half of one per cent. upon the gross receipts from admissions to theaters, museums, or concert halls when a charge of admission is made. Your committee after due consideration believes that the present law is much fairer and more equitable, and recommends an amendment restoring the present law, but for the purpose of bringing about parity of treatment provides that in cities, towns or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the rate of tax shall be one-half of that which applies to cities, towns, or villages having a population in excess of 5,000."

The proposed amendment to the measure as it passed the House of Representatives, reads as follows:

"Proprietors of theaters, museums and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than two hundred and fifty, shall pay $25; having a seating capacity of more than two hundred and fifty, and exceeding five hundred, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity exceeding five hundred and not exceeding eight hundred, $75; having a seating capacity of more than eight hundred, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns or villages of five thousand inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided, further, that whenever any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease."

There is very likely to be a fight upon this amendment when the bill comes up in the Senate for action, as there are many among the Senators and members of the House of Representatives who believe that the exhibitors are getting so rich as a result of their connection with the motion picture business that they can well afford to pay any kind of a tax and many of them. These thoughts will be somewhat dispelled if they will but take the trouble to read and place a proper degree of confidence in the briefs filed with the subcommittee having the matter under consideration. One of the letters which carried considerable weight with the committee, it is understood, is that addressed to Senator Hoke Smith, chairman of the subcommittee, by M. C. Higgins, assistant international president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine operators of the United States and Canada, which includes that branch of organized labor which supplies to the theaters and motion picture houses the stage carpenters, electricians, property men, projection machine and light operators, and working crews traveling with road shows.

"Of our own knowledge," he said, "and the number of men out of employment, or working on part time, we know that the theaters, both regular and picture, are among the heaviest sufferers from war conditions. In many other lines of work not only opportunities for work, but also wages have largely increased, but our members, particularly in the less important theatrical centers, have already been forced to make sacrifices to aid the house manager to keep his theater open. We have gone as far as we can in this and we can not make any further concessions and receive anything like a living wage.

"The old emergency tax of $25, $50, $75 and $100, dependent upon seating capacity, no doubt seems small to you, yet it was the last straw needed to break the hope of a number of small managers. Actually hundreds of theaters and picture houses, places already operating at a loss, gave up the right when they found that new tax burdens were added, and our members employed in them had to look for something else to do."

In conclusion Mr. Higgins asked that some other way of raising funds be substituted and that they be taken from enterprises profiting by war conditions, or at least making a profit under them.

A considerable amount of weight was carried by the letter of the United Managers' Protective Association, by Marc Klaw, president, pointing out the grave discrimination that exists under the bill as it passed the House of Representatives. "The theater, as held by the highest court in this state (New York)," he said, "is a private enterprise, as much as a department store or hotel, with an equal right to operate, without securing Federal, State or municipal sanction. License fees are exacted under the taxing power or police power, but not as a franchise, or in the nature of a special privilege. If, then, revenue is to be derived from the gross receipts of a theater, why not from the department stores and hotels throughout the United States, or similar private enterprises?

"At the present time the theater may pay (a) a municipal tax (in the Borough of Manhattan) $500 a year; (b) the corporation operating the theater must pay the annual state franchise tax on its capital; (c) the county tax on its personal property used in the theater; (d) the real estate tax, if it owns the land, or—as is frequently the case—the tax is part of the rental charges; and (e) the income tax provided by the present bill, entirely apart from the special tax under discussion.

"This bill singles out the amusement industry to bear a burden that is equal only to that cast upon manufacturers of munitions. Proprietors of theaters must pay one-half of 1 per cent. of their gross receipts, no matter what their losses may be in carrying on the theater enterprise.

"In respect to motion picture theaters, the injustice of the proposed tax is just as great as with the regular theaters.

"This bill," it is further declared, "has devised a splendid method of closing a very large percentage of the small motion picture theaters. The provision is not taxation, it is confiscation, and that, too, aimed at a business that does more charity and more substantial good to the morals and well being of the community than all other businesses combined. There would be less injustice in this provision, against which this protest is directed, if it were framed along the lines of the other provisions in the bill, specifying a fixed sum to pay, as is provided for circuses and as the present revenue act provides and as this bill directs in respect of practically every other business (excepting manufacturers of munitions)."

A protest was also entered by the Association of Theater Managers of Boston, Mass., which however, speaks only for the regular theatrical interests and opposes the bill partly on the ground that "the moving picture enterprises, cheap vaudeville and kindred amusements, operated in buildings of comparatively small rental and with a cheap admission, have made serious inroads into the legitimate theatrical business, and as a result, the profits are greatly diminished; so diminished in fact as to result in some instances in a considerabl loss."

Just because the Senate Finance Committee has reported against the Kitchin proposition of one-half of one per cent. must not be taken to necessarily mean that it will be defeated by the Senate with the adoption of the proposed Finance Committee scheme. The whole measure will be the subject of a great deal of discussion and should the latter clause be adopted, the bill goes to conference between representatives of both branches of Congress and it may be that a fight may be precipitated on the section. The House may insist upon its version and to placate it and win other points the Senate may recede from its amendment and the higher tax will result.

It is suggested that exhibitors and State organizations appeal to their individual senators urging them to support the Finance Committee's plan based on the seating capacity of the houses, and as inserted in the Senate draft of the general revenue bill.

"Pop" Lubin Recovers from Recent Illness

Pioneer Picture Maker Getting Out from Under Hands of Doctors—Has No Intention of Retiring from Business

SIEGMUND LUBIN'S face beamed that Tuesday night he came down the stairs to the reception room of the Cosmopolitan Club in Atlantic City. "My boy, I am glad to see you," he said simply and heartily to the World man, and the vigor of the handshake proved more than the statement covered by his words. It was evidence of restored health, of recuperation from the illness that for several months had put him into the care of the doctors. "Yes, I have been ill," he went on, in reply to a question as to his health. "I have had a lot of doctors, not because I wanted them, but to please my family. They have given me a bunch of prescriptions and I take them—and put them in my pocket. You see, I have them here." Delving into his coat he withdrew a varied assortment of ominous looking documents. "I put them where they will do the most good," he chuckled.

Siegmund Lubin.

The pioneer manufacturer is optimistic as to the future of the motion picture industry. "Everything will be all right in time," he said. "It is the great war that has upset everything. It has upset business and it has upset many of us," he added with a tinge of sadness. "Many have lost near ones and dear ones. As is bound to be the case some men are richer, but many are poorer. This awful conflict which none of us could foresee—who would have dreamed of it?—has hit the motion picture business, this great, wonderful business, very hard. We make many pictures in the United States. We may spend forty or fifty thousand dollars on a production, and we must have the markets of the world at large in order to bring back that money and make a fair profit.

"The whole world loves American pictures—they admire the players; no other country brings to the screen such charming women—graceful, petite, intelligent—or such fine men. They have magnetic qualities possessed by the actors of no other nation.

"Motion pictures speak every language; they are universal in their appeal. Of American pictures is this especially true. Where now our markets abroad are cut off, where many manufacturers are sitting back waiting with their spectacles on their ears, the change will come speedily with the end of the war. We can only wait and hope. But everything will be all right in the end. We must have a good, strong organization to guide our steps, to prevent mistakes, to do the right things."

Mr. Lubin referred feelingly to the passing of "Pop" Rock. "You know he sent for me to come to him, and you may be sure had I been physically able I should have gone," he said. "Yes, we were old pals. I used to supply him with films in New Orleans and also for showing around the country. We were together on several ventures in the old days. I remember the fight pictures, the one we staged after the event, on account of the impossibility of making the pictures in the original. I recall during the taking of the scenes some one discovered no betting was going on. Of course it was necessary to lend 'atmosphere.' I sent out and got $250 in one-dollar bills, which we distributed among the extras. And you know $250 was a lot of money to me then. Well," and "Pop" Lubin chuckled, "when we went around to collect the money at the end of the taking of the scenes we couldn't find a soul that had a single dollar of that money. Yes, they bet my money, and I figured I had lost the bet."

Wednesday morning by appointment we met Mr. Lubin for a stroll down the Boardwalk. We had not gone far when the laird of Lubinville suggested he had had an early breakfast and if it were agreeable to his guest he would see what Atlantic City could provide in the way of a luncheon. It was agreeable. The air was cool, there was a drizzling rain, and the great combers were piling in in angry fashion, making for spectacle and for appetite. Our host piloted us to one of the big new hostelries and showed us over the palace that had been thrown into being in twelve months from the time work on razing its predecessor had been begun. Mr. Lubin knows his Atlantic City. He is one of its oldest inhabitants and stanchest citizens. And everybody knows him. He has its history at the tip of his tongue and its interests lie close to his heart. He takes a personal pride in the great playground, the development of which he has followed from its beginning. And coming back to that luncheon: here again was evidence that Mr. Lubin was fine and fit—with the appetite of a boy.

There cropped out in the course of the chat a sidelight on the character of this likable man, whose fatherly "My boy" has been cherished by hundreds of players—and who today are keenly interested in all that pertains to the welfare of their one-time employer. We were speaking of the differences over wage scales between railroad men and managers.

"Why shouldn't the men organize into unions?" said Mr. Lubin. "It's their only chance to get a just return for their work. I am and have been all my life a member of a union. Too many employers are anxious to pay a flat scale for the exceptional man, but seek to avoid paying it to the average or sub-average employe. If they reap the advantage of the unusual worker it is just that they should carry also the one not so rapid but who may do better work."

We spoke of the future. We asked Mr. Lubin if he intended actively to get into the motion picture business again.

"Yes, indeed," was the emphatic reply. "I love the business too much. I shall not get out. In the years I have spent in it I have had many pleasant hours—yes, and many heartaches, too. But in the meantime I am happily situated here surrounded by my family. I have to play with my grandchildren, you know, but there is only one role they will let me carry. I must always be the man with the pistol. Things will come back with a bound when matters in Europe straighten out and there will be plenty of money.

"Will you remember me to all my friends? Tell the boys in New York I shall be with them at the Screen Club ball in November—you know I don't miss that."

As we parted from Mr. Lubin he explained he was going over to the Inlet to meet a friend who had gone fishing in the morning. "I don't believe," he said with his quaint smile, "that he knows how to catch fish and I am going to be at the pier when the boat arrives to make sure that he does not put one over on me by buying his 'catch' in the open market."

Frederick Warde in "King Lear"

Elaborate Production Made by Thanhouser Corporation Will Be Released Through Pathe Exchanges.

EDWIN THANHOUSER announces that the Thanhouser Film Corporation's ambitious Shakespearian production, Frederick Warde in "King Lear," is soon to be released through the Pathe Exchanges.

Mr. Warde is one of the most noted Shakespearian actors of this generation and is famed throughout the United States and Great Britain for his production of notable plays. He considers the Thanhouser version of "King Lear" to be perfect. Mr. Warde's "Silas Marner," produced by Thanhouser, was heralded as a truly superior feature. "King Lear," Mr. Warde believes, is better than "Silas Marner."

The production was directed by Ernest Warde, son of Frederick Warde, who has had long experience as an actor in his father's companies and as stage director for Richard Mansfield. Ernest Warde plays the part of the fool in Thanhouser's "King Lear." Others in the supporting cast are: Lorraine Huling, Wayne Arey, J. H. Gilmour, Hector Dion, Edwin Stanley and Boyd Marshall. More than 2,000 persons were employed in the making of this Shakespearian play, which follows faithfully the original story.

The Projection Editor Discovers an Operator Who Will Never Be Pinched for Speeding

FROM Montreal to Quebec is a beautiful drive, but the jinx overtook us thirty-five miles from Quebec when a punk job of vulcanizing on the rear shoe went bluey and we adopted the Canadian Pacific temporarily.

Next day I called upon the manager of the Empire theater and suggested that he arrange for a meeting of the managers and operators of Quebec's six or seven theaters. I was to call on him again that evening; but, alas, the jinx stuck to me and I drove the go-devil into Quebec at 11:45 that night. Next day was Sunday and all shows closed; also I was tired—so I saw no more of the Quebec theaters, as we left early Monday morning.

Quebec is a beautiful, intensely interesting and quaint old city, and with the aid of Nancy Hanks No. 3, the go-devil, I saw it pretty thoroughly, from the Parliamentary buildings to its ten-foot-wide streets in the lower town. I even butted into the citadel. The sentry was momentarily not quite on the job at the end of the long tunnel entrance, so Nancy Hanks and I shot through and into the whole works—but were very promptly shooed out again, and I suppose was lucky to escape incarceration in the "Hoose Gow." Our innocent countenance, combined with our non-German looks, carried us through, however, and we saw the citadel (fort), or some of it at least.

Leaving Quebec, we entered into what was to us the unknown, but the gasoline heart of the go-devil tackled the task bravely; albeit 800 miles of presumably unsettled, bleak northland lay between us and our return to the good old U. S. A. The road had been variously described as "good," "bad," "impassable" and "fine." But the average French Canadian has just two ways of describing roads, viz., "not so bad" and "not so good," accent on the "not" in both instances. If it is the former you may figure on fair country roads with punk to punkerino spots; if the latter, it is good night shirt for yours. You are up against it for fair. Fortunately, most of the time it was the former.

Added to our other troubles we were entering a country where it was supposed that what few people there were all talked French and no English, or practically none. Well, we started, and one surprise followed another, until at this writing, at Chandler, Gaspe Peninsula, 400 miles beyond Quebec, we are all out of words to express our amazement.

First, everywhere we found someone who could "talk little Anglais," though one day, at Romaniski, we did have quite a time getting anything to eat but at last resurrected a storekeeper who "talked little Anglais" and procured some cheese, crackers and some canned goods which, being opened by the combined aid of strong language, the screw-driver, monkey wrench and pliers, was eaten on the rocks beside the wonderfully beautiful St. Lawrence River where it is about four miles wide.

Second, while the roads were by no means boulevards, still except in spots they were "not so bad," and we made good time, considering. The run, to date, by days, is as follows: 183, 153, 165, 180, 121, 130, 112 and 97, the last not being a full day as we arrived at 2 P. M. The 112-day established a record, however, as we rode 25 miles through the Matepedia Valley in the mountains beside the river over a road which everyone pronounced awful and advised us to ship around. It certainly was awful, all right, and then some. Mostly it was two narrow, deep ruts with a sort of path between and grass from one to two feet high. Occasionally there were mudholes from four to eight inches deep and no way around. Much of it was through dense timber, some with sheer mountains from the left rut almost straight up, with a ten to fifteen-foot drop to the boiling river three feet from the right rut, with loose rocks on the center path. There were times when the go-devil plunged and bucked like a bronco, but we had no spills, and when we finally got through to Matepedia, Nellie, my daughter, remarked very solemnly, "Well, Dad, you can certainly qualify for a tight rope rider now."

But the surprise of our young life was that, except for the 25 miles through the mountain pass of the Matepedia Valley, which was entirely a wilderness, the country is all fairly well settled; the farms look well kept and prosperous, and the country is beautiful, surpassingly so along the St. Lawrence River and the south shore of the Gaspe Peninsula.

At River du Loup (pronounced "River du Loo," meaning wolf river) we visited a moving picture show where the operator was performing wonders with an Edison Model B, using (imagine it) a film tank instead of a take-up. But alas, neither manager nor operator spoke any English worth mentioning, so we looked at the show and let it go at that. The titles were English and a man down front translated them into French.

At Chandler the brother of the editor's wife owns and manages the "Opera House" where a moving picture show is given every night. A Simplex projector is used. The picture is as good as one would expect under the circumstances. Current is 110-volt A.C. through an Edison economy transformer.

At Chandler I received letters advising that our visit to St. John, N. B., is to be made the occasion of high jinks among moving picture people, but of that I will tell you later.

From Chandler we went to Gaspe (by train, the roads being too sandy for navigation), which is sixty miles northwest, at the extreme point of Gaspe Peninsula and in the same latitude as the north end of Newfoundland. In this beautifully situated little northland city we found a "movin' picter show" and at fifteen cents per were permitted to enter the "theater," occupy one if the the pine benches and watch the murder, assassination and complete butchery of a photoplay which was certainly old enough to be killed. The "operating room" consisted of a 6x6 foot (about) pine lumber inclosure and therein was an Edison exhibition model projector which had probably been voting at presidential elections for some time. The "show" consisted of the Metro production "Cards," a military film and a superannuated Charlie Chaplin. I have, as you know, often roasted that abomination, the speed fiend. Well, it was the opposite here. The speed was probably 45 feet per minute and the characters floated through their parts with languid ease and gracefully undulating movements. There were only seven (7) stops to repair breaks in the film or lost lower loop during the whole show. A young chap, armed with a flashlight, presided over a player piano down front and when a new roll was needed he would search for it in a pile of music directly under the screen, the aforesaid flashlight "doing things" to the picture meanwhile, as he was not at all particular where he pointed it.

The screen consisted of an unhemmed sheet of muslin stretched, not on but in front of the wall. I suggested that they border the picture with black, to which the following naive reply was made: "I guess that would be all right, but you see the picture ain't always in the same place."

Honestly I did not know so many things could be done to a poor, innocent, unoffending photoplay in so short a space of time, but outside these few things the show was all right.

Richardson at St. John, N. B.

Sidelights on the Visit, by the Wife of an Exhibitor Host.

TO ALL motion picture fans the most interesting event of the summer season at St. John, N. B., was undoubtedly the visit of F. H. Richardson, Projection Expert of the Moving Picture World. For days beforehand a small group of booking men might have been seen winding their way to the Imperial theater, where metings were held to discuss ways and means of entertaining the distinguished guest.

Realizing that Mr. Richardson, as head of his profession, is a very important person, it was a matter for debate, whether he would care to be treated as President Wilson, Henry Ford, or merely as a human being. It was not until the boys got a good look at his cheery face that the matter was finally settled. Needless to say the "human being" won the day.

When Mr. Richardson arrived in St. John, on Saturday, August 12, he was met by Walter H. Golding, Steve Hurley and William C. Smith. Had it been more widely known that such a charming little daughter accompanied Mr. Richardson every man in town would have been down to greet him—or her?

That evening, after the last performance at the Imperial, Mr. Richardson occupied the stage and managers and operators from the Maritime Provinces gathered to listen to his able address on "Better Projection." Dense indeed must have been the man who came away feeling that he had not profited by the lecture. Incidentally Mr. Richardson gave the theater managers a little much needed advice upon the folly of giving too lengthy a show. An innocent bystander may be pardoned for hoping that it will be well digested. Strange to say it is the bigger theaters that err in this respect.

It is due to Mr. Richardson that managers and operators of the Maritime Provinces have now decided to organize. There are altogether too many unauthorized censors around for the welfare of the motion picture business, and unless some such step had been taken an unhappy state of affairs must have ensued. Quite recently a professor in the College of New Brunswick distinguished himself by declaring that over fifty per cent. of the pictures shown in these Provinces are "immoral," "unmoral" and "disgusting." This is the final judgment of a gentleman who proclaims himself a "neutral" regarding this form of amusement, and the managers are now wondering what adjectives he would have used had he really been an enemy.

It is such idiocy as this that has to be combated, and it is only by organization that it can be done.

The chairman of the St. John Board of Censors, Dr. Bridges, is a very learned and fair minded man, but his position is made very disagreeable on account of unfair criticism. While the subject of forming a society has often been broached, it remained for Mr. Richardson to convince the managers and operators of the wisdom of the step.

After the more serious business connected with Mr. Richardson's visit had been accomplished, everyone adjourned to the "Imperial" lobby, where a very dainty buffet luncheon was served.

On Sunday, August 13, the party went up the river on the tug "Lord Kitchener." The session of the night before was such a late one that more than one member of the crowd only had time for breakfast between the acts.

Mr. Richardson, as guest of honor, was the life of the party and had any of the Keith people heard the duologues between Mr. Crawford and Mr. Richardson there would now be entirely new headliners at this famous Broadway house. Steve Hurley also gave one of Robert Service's poems and proved himself to be something more than an amateur. Those present included Managers N. V. Gastonguay, Orpheus Hall, Halifax, N. S.; G. J. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; F. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; M. Herschorn, Imperial theater, Halifax, N. S.; A. E. Wall, chief Board of Censors of Nova Scotia, N. S.; Roy Holman, "Happy Home," Alberton, P. E. I.; S. W. Dimock, theaters at Campbelton, Dalhousie and Athol, N. B.; Jas. F. Cripps, Digby, Middleton, Annapolis and Shelburne, N. S.; C. A. Walfield, Bridgewater and Lockeport, N. S.; J. J. Gaudet, Summerside, P. E. I.; A. A. Fielding, Princess theater, Truro, N. S. The St. John men were: Stephen C. Hurley, Unique.; Gilbert D. Sweeney, Palace; A. B. Farmer, Star; Wm. C. Smith, Empress; Fred. K. Trifts, Gem; W. C. McKay, Opera House; W. H. Golding, Imperial; F. G. Spencer, Lyric, Unique theaters and Opera House. Operators: A. J. Mason, Imperial, St. John; Samuel Buchanan and Arthur Farmer, Jr., Star, St. John; Thos. Daley, Gem, St. John; T. A. Prince, Palace, St. John; Geo. Rothweil, Gaiety, Fairville; Timothy Fuller, Empress, St. John; Harold Currie, Unique, St. John; Fred. M. Betts, Lyric, St. John; J. J. Merriman, Gem, Fredericton, N. B.; Jack Fenety, Unique, Fredericton, N. B.; Merrill Mills, Imperial, St. John; Ralph Thorne, Lyric, St. John. Exchange men: Jules H. Wolf, Metro Mgr., St. John; W. R. Golding, Metro, St. John; C. M. Crawford, Mgr. Fox Co.; G. A. Margetts, Mgr. Universal; R. Allan Christie, Universal; Arthur Callan, Universal; Miss K. J. Dishart, Universal; Triangle, F. H. Trifts, Mgr.; Louis Rosenfelt, Mgr. Famous Players, St. John, N. B.; Jos. Kauffman, Famous Players; Jos. Lieberman, Famous Players; Reginald March, J. J. Crossman, Pathe Co.; St. John, J. N. Golding, Jr., Arthur Kathleen Golding, F. J. Fitzgerald, A. W. Phillips, Geo. Seely; Unique theater, Arnold Holder, Harry Martin; Lyric theater, Gilmour Armstrong, Ralph Thorne. Honor guests: F. H. Richardson, New York, and Miss Nellie Richardson.

Taking everything into consideration Mr. Richardson can probably say that he has never been more enthusiastically greeted than at St. John, N. B., and he left us with the understanding that he would return soon. We want to see him again—for he's a jolly good fellow. DORA M. SMITH.

SERIAL FILM COMPANY ENLARGES STUDIO.

William Steiner, general manager of the Serial Film Company and supervising director of "The Yellow Menace," announces that his company has added a new exterior glass covered studio and doubled the stage space of the interior studio in its plant at Cliffside, N. J. These additions make it possible for four producing companies to work at the same time. In addition, the laboratory has been enlarged through the building of a new drying room in which one hundred and fifty thousand feet of film can be dried in half an hour.

Pathe Releases for Week Beginning Sept. 3

An Interesting Program With Which to Open the Autumn Season.

FOR the week of September 3, Pathe offers an interesting program with a two-reel reissue; two reels of "Grip of Evil"; a Luke comedy; another Florence Rose Fashions Number, and a split-reel scenic. "Good Pals" is a reissue in answer to an increasing demand for reissues of Pathe's famous earlier two-reelers. It features Marguerite Risser, a very popular member of the Old Pathe Jersey City stock company.

The "pals" are a Southern Colonel and his daughter and their collie "Shep." The story concerns the treachery of the Colonel's own cousin, who when the report arrives that he has been killed, uses the fortune belonging to the daughter and forces her to work as a servant. The dead returns very much alive and the story has a happy ending. "Shep" has a "star" part, and with remarkable canine cleverness keeps the ball of suspense rolling to its thrilling climax. The proof of the punch in this two-reeler are the many requests for its reissue.

"In Bohemia" is the title of the eighth of the "Grip of Evil" series. To study another phase to his question, "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?" John Burton lives among a group of struggling artists posing as a man of humble means. He finds that "art for art's sake" is but an artificial pose and "Bohemia" but a state of mind and the almighty dollar is the King of Art. "In Bohemia" is full of action and the intimate side of so called Bohemian life in the artists' colony contains much local color.

"Luke Joins the Navy" is another screaming slapstick comedy made by the Rolin Co. Luke as a jackie will coax laughs from the grouchiest. The majority of scenes are taken aboard a U. S. man-of-war and besides being a corking comedy the scenes on board are very interesting.

"Week End House Party at Betty Young's" is the third of the Florence Rose Fashions. Betty entertains a host of fashionable guests. Costumes of the hunt, charming creations for afternoon teas and evening gowns of great variety and splendor are shown throughout the reel, which will create much interest among the "women folks."

"Picturesque Havana" is a splendid scenic of one of the world's greatest seaports. Picturesque Spanish buildings, Morro Castle, the harbor where the Maine met her tragic end and many other picturesque spots combined to make a scenic of exceptional merit.

"Picturesque Ghent" finishes out the program. Ghent, Belgium's provincial city of Flanders still preserves much of its medieval characteristics. The turreted church of St. Nicola, the beautiful carved monument of Bauvens and other historic edifices make an excellent scenic.

Wednesday, September 6th, brings Pathe News No. 74, and No. 75 on Saturday, September 9th.

CHANGES IN PRECISION MACHINE STAFF.

Announcement is made by the Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex projector, that J. E. Graef has resigned as acting general manager of the company, and will devote his time to his personal affairs. E. M. Porter, a well known motion picture man, succeeds to the vacancy. Mr. Porter is a brother of Edwin S. Porter, and has been engaged in the exchange branch of the business for several years. It is also anonunced that Edwin S. Porter, who has been closely associated with Frank Cannock, the inventor of the Simplex machine, will take an active part in the management of the company in the future.

THE SMALLEYS PROVIDE MORE BLUEBIRDS.

Lois Weber and her husband, Phillips Smalley, who have been towers in strength to the Bluebird programs, have prepared three releases to add to the five features they have already supplied to the series. "Saving the Family Name" is scheduled for release Sept. 11, and later on "Idle Wives," screen version of James Oppenheim's novel, and "Wanted, a Home," original with Lois Weber, will be presented. Mary MacLaren will be featured in all three of these subjects and in "Idle Wives" both of the Smalleys will play.

MacDONALD TO APPEAR WITH FEATURE.

Wallace MacDonald, leading juvenile to Mary Miles Minter in the American production "Youth's Endearing Charm," will appear at the initial showing of that picture in Marcus Loew's New York theater, Broadway and 45th street, New York, on Monday, September 4th. Mr. MacDonald, who possesses an exceptionally fine baritone voice, will render a few vocal selections in connection with his appearance.

Work Started on Pickford Films

Famous Star at Her New York Studio—Artcraft Pictures Corporation Is Formed for Distribution of New Company's Product.

FOREGOING a summer vacation, Mary Pickford is now at her New York studio working on the first production of the newly formed Mary Pickford Film Corporation, whose product will be handled by the recently organized Artcraft Pictures Corporation, of which Walter E. Greene is president. The distributing concern is capitalized for two million dollars and will establish exchanges in Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta, Dallas, San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Kansas City, Detroit, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh and the principal cities of Canada. The headquarters of the allied companies have been opened in suites of offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

It is the purpose of Miss Pickford and her associates to make a limited number of productions each year, but expenditures will be governed only by the artistic requirements of the pictures, for the policy calls for photoplays at once elaborate and ambitious with the famous star always the outstanding attraction. John Emerson, for many years prominent on the stage, and more recently a picture director with a number of Triangle successes to his credit, is working with Miss Pickford on the first production. It is understood that in addition to creating the leading roles, the head of the new corporation will take an active part in supervising the production of each picture.

Mary Pickford.

Mr. Greene, president of Artcraft, which will handle the Mary Pickford productions alone and not as a part of any program, is known throughout the industry as one of the early motion picture men instrumental in finding a market for independent pictures. Locating in Boston, he is credited with having opened the first independent exchange in the country. Later he moved to New York and became connected with various picture enterprises before his association with Paramount. Speaking as president of the new organization, Mr. Greene said:

W. E. Greene.

"No personality is so dominant in motion pictures as that of Mary Pickford, who is the crystallization of magnetism without a parallel in the history of either the spoken or silent stage. Every exhibitor knows that the advent of a new Mary Pickford picture means an event in the season of his theater or playhouse. This has been the unfailing rule in every instance in the past.

"Now heading her own film corporation, Miss Pickford with her wonderful art and great experience will bring to these productions a new life, a stronger drawing power and a more lasting charm. Being alone and on no program she will completely pervade the entertainment presented, making its attractiveness all the stronger. It is the purpose of the Artcraft Corporation to give these pictures the best distribution that any screen productions have ever received."

Miss Pickford's sentiments are expressed in the following statement: "First of all I want to express my gratitude for the co-operation of the exhibitors everywhere, for without their interest we could attain but nought. To the great throng who have been good enough to make up the patrons who have seen me in the past I can but express my heartfelt thanks. Surely without either no one can have progressed, and our work together has been so full of happiness that it is doubly treasured.

"For the Mary Pickford Film Corporation it is our purpose to surround ourselves with the best brains, skill and ability possible, so that we may have art harmonizing productions which will stand out as master works. We want the Mary Pickford pictures to be seen in every theater and playhouse in the country, and we are delighted with the broad plan of distribution made by the Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

"Prompted by your encouragement of the past and for which I feel that I owe so much to you in aiding me to reach an ambitious attainment, I feel now that with this incentive and with the ever present confidence with which you have approved and admired my work, that I can reach out still higher, giving you the supreme of our art endeavor; but always depending on your affectionate interest for which I am now and will always be grateful."

Important Business Changes

New Viagraph Company Absorbs Lubin Company and the V-L-S-E Is the Latest Report—Selig, Essanay and Kleine to Combine.

THE principal topics in New York motion picture circles during the past week were the changes which were taking place affecting the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies, allied for some time as the V-L-S-E for the purpose of obtaining a better market for their features. Rumors have been rife for several months to the effect that Selig and Essanay contemplated withdrawing from this distributing organization. These stories became more persistent when Ben B. Hampton appeared in the field representing capitalists allied with the American Tobacco Company. Then came the actual purchase of the Vitagraph Company by the men whom Hampton represented and word of a proposal by the same interests to buy the Lubin Company. It was also hinted at the same time that Mr. Hampton had options on the plants of the Selig and Essanay companies.

On Thursday, August 17, an unofficial announcement was made by persons in position to know the facts that the V-L-S-E organization had been formally dissolved by the withdrawal of the Selig and Essanay interests and the absorption of the Lubin company by the new Vitagraph organization. Inquiry at the offices of V-L-S-E failed to elicit a positive acknowledgment of this action, but it was stated that official announcements would be issued on the subject September 1.

When the question regarding the truth of these rumors was asked Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, and Mr. Hampton, these gentlemen refused to discuss the matter, but they did not deny that such was the case.

Selig, Spoor and Kleine in Combination.

The withdrawal of the Selig and Spoor interests from the V-L-S-E gave color at once to the rumors which had been floating about to the effect that a combination was to be formed by them with George Kleine, whose very efficient exchange organization would give them the outlet for their product. The situation was further complicated by stories to the effect that the three Chicago firms, Selig, Spoor and Kleine, were about to effect a union with the newly formed Success Films Corporation. While none of the principals would confirm these rumors, it is known that E. S. Bradley, representing the capitalists interested in Success, was in Chicago in conference with Messrs. Selig and Spoor regarding the details of the matter.

Mr. Bradley left Chicago on Tuesday, August 22, and it was expected that he would have something to say upon his arrival in this city. But up to the time this edition of the Moving Picture World went to press nothing definite had been given out for publication.

BETTY HOWE ADDED TO CAST OF "BEATRICE FAIRFAX."

In addition to Harry Fox and Grace Darling, other prominent screen stars will appear with these two in certain episodes of "Beatrice Fairfax," the photo-play series of the International Film Service, Inc. The first of these co-stars will be Miss Betty Howe.

The N. A. of M. P. I. Elects Officers

New Organization Chooses William A. Brady for President and J. E. Brulatour for Treasurer.

ON THE morning of August 10th at the Hotel Astor the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held the first election of officers, which resulted as follows: President, William A. Brady, elected by 20 out of 24 votes cast; J. E. Brulatour, treasurer; Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, Minn., first vice-president; Adolph Zukor, second vice-president; Don J. Bell, third vice-president; Hiram Abrams, fourth vice president; Arthur James, fifth vice president, and Frederick E. Eliot, executive secretary.

Mr. Eliot, who had been prominently identified with the automobile industry and with the "Safety First" movement, but who has had no previous connection whatever with the film industry, was proposed by Walter W. Irwin after the latter had been elected chairman of the executive committee. No other candidates were given a chance to present their claims for the office of executive secretary, though there were several within the ranks of the industry, among them such men as Paul H. Cromelin and Samuel Spedon.

The meeting at the Hotel Astor was attended by twenty-four directors out of thirty, the following men being present: E. A. McManus, W. L. Sherrill, Don J. Bell, Patrick A. Powers, Otto Kahn, "Wid" Gunning, J. E. Brulatour, Adolph Zukor, Frank Rembusch, E. E. Philips, Walter W. Irwin, Peter Jeup, Frederick J. Herrington, William A. Brady, J. H. Hallberg, E. L. Levine, W. Stephen Bush, Paul Gulick, A. F. Tugwell, Thomas Furniss, Maurice A. Choyinski, Hiram Abrams, Richard Roland, Arthur James.

There was an exchange of compliments between Walter W. Irwin and Samuel Trigger, after which the election of officers was proceeded with, resulting as described. William N. Seabury, who also represents the Motion Picture Board of Trade, was elected general counsel of the organization.

After the elections had been finished Mr. Irwin made a speech, in the course of which he dwelt on the great power which, in his opinion, the new organization was likely to exert in the field of politics. He said the main object was to impress the political candidates with the power of the screen. He himself had never voted any but the Republican ticket, he said, but hereafter he was going to be guided by the interests of the industry first and foremost. He thought, he continued, it would be a splendid thing if through the action of the combined film interests it were possible to carry the state of New York for the gubernatorial candidate of one political faith and for the Presidential candidate of another political faith. Such a feat, in his opinion, would make the politicians sit up and take notice.

"If," said he, "we can do this then we can go into Pennsylvania and ask the political leaders there for a repeal of the censorship law; in fact, we can then have anything we want from such men as Penrose and Oliver and the Nicols and Vares of Philadelphia. I believe that the authors and promoters of the Cristman-Wheeler Censorship Bill in this state ought to be singled out for defeat and that a lesson ought to be administered to Ahern of Brooklyn, who stood sponsor for another censorship bill in the State of New York."

Mr. Irwin, as well as other speakers, emphasized the need of funds. Nothing is in the treasury of the new organization now, as all the subscriptions heretofore secured are conditioned upon the collection of the sum of forty thousand dollars, of which, so far, scarcely one-fourth has been subscribed. It was stated informally at the meeting and in the lobbies of the Hotel Astor that large sums of money might shortly be expected from prominent producers who have so far held aloof from the new organization. It was likewise claimed in a general way that the producers now belonging to the organization will enlarge their original contributions.

The following men were appointed members of the Executive Committee: Walter W. Irwin, chairman; Adolph Zukor, Arthur James, J. E. Brulatour, S. H. Trigger, L. L. Levine and Louis F. Blumenthal.

The local branch of exhibitors entertained the out-of-town exhibitor-directors at an informal but very joyous dinner at Feltman's on the night of Thursday, August 17. The matchless master of ceremonies, Isaac L. Hartsall, surpassed himself in the arrangements of this social affair, which was voted a huge success by all present.

CINEMA CLUB RECEPTION.

The Cinema Club of Bronx County, Local No. 2 of the Exhibitors' League of America, will hold their third annual reception and entertainment at Hunts Point Palace, 163d street and Southern boulevard, on Election Eve.

Gaumont Single Reels

Three Very Good Specimens Are Scheduled for Week of September 5.

THE three single-reel releases from the Gaumont studios for the week of September 3 are "Reel Life," the Gaumont scenic and animated cartoon, and the Mutual Weekly. "Reel Life" No. 18 features the cruise of the New York Yacht Club under the title of "A Day with the Yachtsmen." It gives one an excellent idea of the palatial steam yachts and the fast sailing vessels which comprise the fleet. Another part of the film is devoted to pictures of a plot of ground in the city under intensive cultivation. It clearly proves that dwellers in cities can keep down the cost of living no matter if they only have a few square yards of earth to cultivate. The third part of the reel presents one of the popular episodes which are pictured from stories in "Life," the humorous weekly. It is called "What Would You Do If——?" This time the question has to deal with a jealous husband who returns home to find his wife in another man's arms. After he shoots her he discovers that she is not his wife, as he has walked into a house next door to his home. The spectator is left to answer the question for himself.

"See America First" will present characteristic and entertaining pictures of Mauch Chunk and the anthracite coal regions in the vicinity of Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, Pa. So much is read about the work which is done in the Pennsylvania coal fields that the pictures should prove of wide interest. One of the most entertaining of the series of views shows a trolley trip upon which panoramic views of great beauty are obtained. .

On the same reel with "See America First" is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer. It is a regular release with the scenic. Mr. Palmer is devoting his pen to topical subjects, which have created a great vogue for these Gaumont Kartoon Komics.

The third single-reel release of the week as a Mutual picture from the Gaumont studios is The Mutual Weekly.

New World Film Boston Manager

STANLEY W. HAND, who has been connected with the World Film Corporation for the past year and a half, has been promoted to the managership of the Boston office of the World Film, effective August 7. Mr. Hand was formerly a newspaper man, drifting into the sales department of the Ingersoll Watch Company and from there to the South Bend watches in which field he gained prominence and became eastern representative for the South Bend people.

Stanley W. Hand.

Believing there was a greater future in the film game, Mr. Hand joined the sales forces of the World Film Corporation March 22, 1915, being affiliated with the New York and Boston offices. Was made manager of the Boston office June 15, of the same year, then transferred to New York City as assistant sales manager.

While in the New England territory, Mr. Hand made a great number of friends, and his square deal manner of doing business soon got him the nickname of "Billy Sunday" Hand, the sobriquet first being applied to him by Manager Arthur Davis of the Nashua, N. H., theater, who claims that Hand is the squarest dealing salesman who ever sold him a picture.

With his vast acquaintance in the territory, when the World Film Corporation found it necessary to add a live wire manager to their Boston office, "Billy Sunday" Hand was sought out and returned to his former post, where he assumed his new duties August 7.

Standardizing Travel Pictures

C. L. Chester Proposes to Bring Them Up to the Level of Feature Films.

C. L. CHESTER, the executive head of C. L. Chester, Inc., of 200 Fifth avenue, New York, is about to issue the first really high class series of this sort, and will put them out at the rate of one reel a week to exchanges throughout the country, beginning with the first release on November 6. Six months ago he engaged three of the leading scenic cameramen, trained them thoroughly for the work, and as a result already has 54,241 feet of new negative. His idea is to bring the travel film up to the standard of the big up-to-the-minute features, and instead of taking scenery haphazard, every scene is being carefully planned in the office before the cameraman goes out. Light conditions receive as much attention as they do in any of the feature films and neither time nor expense is being spared.

C. L. Chester.

"While the cost of the feature films," said Mr. Chester yesterday, "has advanced from a dollar a foot to anything from five dollars up, in the last few years, the average manufacturer gasps at the idea of spending more than from thirty-five to sixty cents a foot for the travel stuff. Now, everyone knows the public likes good, wide-awake, well-made travel film, and yet much of the material supplied to the exhibitor is so poor that he uses it for chasers to empty his house. Years ago, I made most of the travel film for the Edison Company, the first organization to go into the travel stuff extensively, and made, with the aid of two cameramen, the very successful South American Travel Series for Paramount. In the past no time or thought has been devoted to the travel film, either before or after the cameraman left the office.

"In our work every picture will be carefully brought out and ninety per cent. of the scenes planned in the office. I have myself visited twenty-eight countries with a motion picture camera and have lived on every continent, except Australia. I know the weather and the light conditions thoroughly. In taking a feature film's exteriors the most minute calculation is made as to the exact time for the best light effect. Perhaps it may be 11.15 o'clock in the morning. Exactly at that moment the scene will be taken. We will be just as particular.

"I have been fortunate in securing as cameraman three of the best motion picture photographers in the industry. They are Victor Miller, W. D.Runcie and Raymond Agnel. Miller was with Pathe for many years; Runcie with Gaumont for several years, and Agnel made many of the best scenic and industrial films turned out by the Paris Eclair."

Mr. Chester, although he has had such a wide experience, is only 39 years old. He is a native of Iowa, and while a student at the Iowa State University, he assisted the professor of physics and chemistry and thus became interested in the chemistry of photography. He went in for original work with the camera and made several important inventions for the photographic art.

VERHALEN WITH PARAMOUNT.

C. J. Verhalen, until recently connected with Harry Raver's motion picture enterprises, has joined the publicity and efficiency staff of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, and has been assigned to the Minneapolis exchange. Mr. Verhalen's work is along the line of the new publicity scheme of Paramount whereby each exchange controlled by that company will have its own press agent on the ground to help exhibitors in the exploitation of pictures. Mr. Verhalen's long experience in publicity should enable him to render valuable assistance to the patrons of the Minneapolis office of Paramount.

V-L-S-E Gets "The Fall of a Nation"

Prparedness Spectacle to Be Marketed by the Organization Which Made "The Battle Cry of Peace" Famous.

BELIEVING that there is more public interest today in the subject of preparedness than ever before, and that this interest is certain to increase, rather than diminish, because of the fast-growing realization that the nation's real danger will only begin when the war in Europe is over, the V-L-S-E has just completed a contract whereby "The Fall of a Nation," Thomas Dixon's wide-famed screen message on this vital topic, will be released through that organization.

The arrangement was prompted, not only by the desire of the Big Four to further the propaganda for Preparedness, in which it has played such a conspicuous role with the release of such films as "The Battle Cry of Peace," "The Nation's Peril," "The Hero of Submarine D-2," etc., and thereby maintain the exceptional business which such productions have brought to exhibitors everywhere, but also by the desire of Mr. Dixon to provide the widest possible channel for the dissemination of this message, and at the same time to effect this dissemination in the quickest possible manner.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, in announcing the acquisition of this extraordinary production, said: "The successes achieved by exhibitors everywhere during the past year have proved beyond question of doubt the value of the big film as an added stimulus to business. Particularly have the Preparedness films been unusual in their drawing power. When we were approached by Mr. Dixon and his associates upon the question of distributing his plea for adequate preparedness, we found ourselves in a very happy position to consider the proposal, because of our experience and success in serving the exhibitor with other big productions of a similar character."

Mr. Dixon, in talking about his decision to release "The Fall of a Nation" through the V-L-S-E, said: "I consider this production the accomplishment of my life. Entirely apart from the material returns to be derived from the widest possible exploitation of the picture, I am vitally concerned in placing its message before the greatest number of people—and to do this quickly—when it will be most timely. The political campaigns are on. The time to strike, both from the standpoint of the best interests of the propaganda, and of the exhibitors, is the present."

"The Fall of a Nation" will be released by the V-L-S-E on September 18. An adequate number of prints have been provided to insure a quick and thorough distribution of the production.

With it, of course, there will be available the specially prepared orchestral score by Victor Herbert, which contributes so materially to the appeal of the picture.

Lottie and Jack Pickford Rejoin Famous Players

Will Appear in Important Roles in Forthcoming Productions of That Concern on the Paramount Program.

TWO interesting additions to the Famous Players forces were made this week in the persons of Lottie and Jack Pickford, sister and brother of the celebrated Mary Pickford, respectively. It was in "Fanchon, the Cricket," in which Mary Pickford starred, that her sister Lottie appeared as the sister. Jack has been seen in several Famous Players productions, both in support of Mary and of Marguerite Clark. With the latter he appeared in "The Pretty Sister of Jose," playing the role of the star's brother with great success.

With Mary, Jack has appeared in "A Girl of Yesterday," "The Commanding Officer" and was last seen in "Poor Little Peppina" in which he did a great deal of clever character acting in his portrayal of the young Italian lad, Beppo, who assisted Peppina in escaping from the plantation on which she was practically a prisoner.

Since his appearance in "Poor Little Peppina," Jack Pickford has been starred by another large producing concern and has proven a conspicuous success.

Lottie Pickford, who has been in retirement since starring in a sensational serial photoplay, is now at work in support of Louise Huff in "The Reward of Patience," which is being staged under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. In this picture Miss Pickford plays the "heavy," a society girl who weds an engineer because her mother wants her to, and then proceeds to flirt outrageously wtih another man with whom she is infatuated. "The Reward of Patience" is scheduled for release on the Paramount Program September 11th.

Astra In the Front Rank of Producers

Under the Leadership of Louis J. Gasnier, It Boasts of the Services of Some of the Best Artists Among Picture Makers

TO KEEP pace with the rapidly-growing activities of Pathe, the Astra Film Corporation, under the direction of Louis J. Gasnier, president, has, in the six months of its existence, built up an organization that places it in the front ranks of the independent producing companies.

The Astra Company has just completed "The Shielding Shadow," Pathe's latest fifteen episode serial which will be released October 1. Work has been started on a new military serial written by Guy McConnell and Geo. B. Seitz, which will feature Pearl White, supported by one of the most popular actors in the country. Within two weeks, Mr. Gasnier expects to start work on still another serial, which will be adapted from "The Double Cross," the great literary success of Gilson Willett. Two famous stars have been engaged for this serial.

But the activities of the Astra Company have not been confined to serials. Five features have already been produced for Pathe's Gold Rooster program—"Arms and the Woman," featuring Mary Nash; "The Test," with Jane Grey and Lumsden Hare; "The Romantic Journey," with William Courtenay and Alice Dovey; "Kick In," with William Courtenay and Mollie King, and "May Blossom," with Pearl White and Hal Forde. "The Challenge," Al. H. Woods' melodramatic success is now being produced.

Associated with Mr. Gasnier, who was formerly general manager of Pathe Exchange, are George B. Seitz, author of "The Iron Claw," and one of the most successful scenario writers in the country; George Fitzmaurice, who produced "At Bay," "Via Wireless" and "New York"; Edward Jose, who produced "The Iron Claw," and "The Light That Failed," and Donald Mackenzie, who, with Mr. Gasnier, produced "The Perils of Pauline" and "The Shielding Shadow," and also the well-known Gold Rooster Plays "The Galloper" and "Mary's Lamb."

"In line with the policy of J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, we are adding to the forces of the Astra Company some of the greatest directors and some of the best-known actors in the country today," said Mr. Gasnier in discussing his plans. "We have also in mind constantly the importance of good stories. The Astra controls the rights to a number of literary and dramatic successes and we have also made arrangements for original scripts.

"The better class of motion pictures being produced today have educated the public to expect higher and higher standards. They will turn out to see a famous star or a celebrated stage success in pictures, but if the production is poor, the picture will not succeed. We consider good directors of paramount importance and are proud to have associated with us such men as Mr. Fitzmaurice, Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Jose. Mr. Fitzmaurice is now adapting 'The Challenge,' our latest A. H. Woods play. He has completed four features for the Gold Rooster program. Mr. Mackenzie recently completed the last episode of 'The Shielding Shadow,' and will start to work next week on a new Pathe serial with two prominent stars.

"Mr. Jose's latest production, 'May Blossom,' with Pearl White, I consider his greatest work. Mr. Jose, it will be remembered, produced 'The Iron Claw,' and some of the great Gold Rooster plays, including 'The Beloved Vagabond,' which was hand-colored, and 'The Light That Failed,' which has not yet been released. Mr. Jose started work on a new serial which will feature Pearl White.

"In the selection of stories for Pathe serials, the strength of the story is the prime consideration. The day has passed when a lot of disconnected 'stunts' can be thrown together and called a serial. Of course, 'stunts' are all right when they are logical and fit in with the action of the story, but it is not necessary to depend upon them for the success of a serial. In 'The Shielding Shadow' and our two new serials, we have relied upon the sustained interest of the story. The public will come back week after week to follow the development of the plot, and not to see an earthquake in one episode, a shipwreck in another and a fire in a third."

Among the stars who will appear in Astra productions under the Pathe banner are Leon Bary, Cooper Cliffe, William Courtenay, Grace Darmond, Alice Dovey, Paul Everton, Claude Fleming, Hal Forde, Jane Grey, Lumsden Hare, Ralph Kellard, Mollie King, Mary Nash, Florence Reed, Norman Thars, Madeline Traverse, Marie Wayne, Niles Welch, Pearl White, Suzanne Willa, Theodore Friebus and W. T. Hinckley.

This is a list of stars that any concern in the business might envy, and yet the Astra is only six months old!

EDITH STOREY'S NEW HOME READY.

The culmination of a long term of anticipation has come to Edith Storey in her removal to a fine new home which has just been completed for her at Eaton's Neck, near Northport, Long Island. The Vitagraph emotional star is as happy as a child over her domicile, which is to be an all-year-round residence for her.

General Film Vitagraphs

Three Offerings for Week of September 2—An Exceptional Broadway Star Feature.

"A FOOL and His Friend," the Vitagraph Broadway Star Feature on the General Film program for Saturday, September 2, was produced by Director William Wolbert with a capable cast of players of Vitagraph's Coast Division headed by Webster Campbell, Corinne Griffith, Jack Mower, Louise Owen, Otto Lederer and George Davis.

Scene from "A Fool and His Friend" (Vitagraph).

It is one of the best offerings the Western Vitagraph Company has ever turned out and in view of its numerous successes this is saying a great deal. The settings are perfect and photography excellent. Agnes Johnston is the author of the story, which deals with the infatuation of a married man for a prominent dancer and the gratitude of a street waif he adopts, and who, in later years, becomes the competent secretary of the man who befriended him. He fails in his efforts to save the man from his fate, but marries the widow whom he learned to love.

"The Fair Fare," is a single part comedy which tells how a newly-married woman gets her husband to take her sightseeing, in and around Seattle. Many beautiful scenes showing the harbor of Seattle, Mount Rainier, North Pacific Highway, and other places of interest are depicted. The photoplay was written and produced by Frederick Hiller.

A comedy, "Love and Trout," from the Bay Shore Studio makes up the balance of the week's releases. It comes from the pen of Josephine Lovett and was photographed under the direction of John Robertson. Shirley Moore as a special game warden gains the consent of an objecting father to the marriage of his son. William Lytell, Jr., plays the part of the son. Thomas Keog as the father and Julia Dodson as his ward assists in the laugh-making.

Selig Shows "Masked Marvel"

In Ninth of the Athletic Series—Bicycle, Polo and Rowing Exhibitions Pictured.

THE "Masked Marvel," the wrestling champion who created such a sensation during the recent wrestling tournament in the Manhattan Opera House, will appear in the ninth release of the Selig Athletic Series, to be released through the V-L-S-E on August 21.

The "Great Unknown," whose identity was shrouded in mystery for months, will be seen in a finish match with Joe Wallace, of Chicago, after which he will reveal his identity by removing his mask.

Frank Kramer, of East Orange, N. J., the king of them all on a bicycle, who has held the sprinting championship of the world for a number of years, will appear in a one-mile sprint, which was taken at the Newark, N. J., Velodrome.

An innovation in the series will be the appearance in this release of a spirited pony polo match between the Westmorland and the Washington, D. C., teams. Despite the prodigious size of the field each play is seen by the audience.

Another novelty is a demonstration by Miss Dulcie Hall, Australian physical culture expert, of jiu jitsu methods and holds for the benefit of women and girls. This instruction is said to be invaluable to women who have had encountered mashers, especially in New York City.

The annual regatta between Yale and Harvard is also included in this release, as also is a three-cushion billiard match between Joe Capron, of Chicago, and Frank Hahman, of Minnesota.

Brady Regards "Specials" as Poor Business

Head of World Film Believes That Programs Should Contain the Best a Company Can Produce.

CONCERNING the production policy of the World Film Corporation, to which part of the operation of that concern he has been devoting a large percentage of his personal attention for several months, William A. Brady, director general of the company, has this to say:

"It very soon struck me upon entering the motion picture field that 'preparedness' as a watchword would be even more useful here than anywhere else in business life and I have proceeded consistently along this line. The result up to the present moment is that we have fifteen pictures finished, edited and ready for the screen. It would be a simple matter for us to release all these tomorrow if we were so disposed, or such an act fitted in with our plan of business.

"But," continued Mr. Brady, "of course nothing of the sort is to be thought of. Our plan was undertaken and carried to its present stage solely with the idea of making it a sure thing that we would always be in a position to deliver to distributors on the day and at the hour specified. It is a practical impossibility under present conditions for the World Film to be caught napping.

"The list of completed plays includes 'The Rail Rider,' with House Peters starred and Ethel Clayton featured; Marie Dressler in 'Tillie's Night Out;' Lew Fields in 'The Man Who Stood Still,' Alice Brady in 'The Gilded Cage' and 'A Woman Alone,' Robert Warwick in 'Friday the 13th,' Ethel Clayton in 'Should She Have Told,' House Peters and Gail Kane in 'The Velvet Paw,' Frances Nelson and Arthur Ashley in 'The Revolt,' Gail Kane in 'The Scarlet Oath,' Robert Warwick and Gail Kane in 'The Heart of a Hero' (in the stage version of which, written by the late Clyde Fitch, and called 'Nathan Hale,' the star part was acted by N. C. Goodwin), Ethel Clayton and Holbrook Blinn in 'Husband and Wife,' Frances Nelson and E. K. Lincoln in 'The Almighty Dollar,' and one other.

"In referring to these photoplays I am reminded of a letter which I received a day or two ago from a well known concern in Boston, as follows:

" 'The thought has struck me that possibly you will release as a special production not on the World program the picture, "Friday the 13th." My understanding is that it is to be in extra reels. If that is the case and you desire to release it, may we be one of the applicants for the New England rights or the world rights for same?'

"Naturally, it is extremely pleasant to learn that one of our regular program plays is regarded in this light, but neither 'Friday, the 13th,' nor any of the other World Film productions will go out as a special release. All will have their regular places on the World program. I am unalterably opposed to any other system of doing business.

"I want the confidence of the small town exhibitor as well as the man who runs the biggest theater in the country. I want him to know that if he is due to get a World Film release next Wednesday, or six months from next Wednesday, it will be there and will represent the very best effort that is in us. I am quite satisfied, and the company is quite satisfied to take the profits as they come, year in and year out, on a fair basis of charges, without following any get-rich-quick scheme that must inevitably increase the exhibitors' expense two, three or even four times over.

"Put this down as a certainty: The World Film Corporation will never weaken its program by issuing special releases. And when you have put it down, go and bet on it."

GOFF RETURNS FROM TRIP.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the V-L-S-E, returned to New York last week from a tour of the Big Four branches in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis, where conferences were held with the sales forces of these four cities.

In Cleveland, Mr. Goff made the transfer of managers, in which C. A. Meade, former manager at Dallas, succeeded C. E. Shurtleff, who resigned. The assistant general manager started the ball rolling for an even better and more productive administration in the Cleveland branch than any that has gone before.

Essanays For September

Formidable List of Subjects Announced by President Spoor.

GEORGE K. SPOOR, president of Essanay, has just announced the company's September releases. Besides one of the best features on the market they include a strong assortment of short reel subjects, one, two and three acts in both comedy and drama.

All of Essanay's greatest stars appear in these photoplays, including Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Richard C. Travers, Sydney Ainsworth, Ernest Maupain, John Lorenz, Harry Dunkinson, Edna Mayo, Nell Craig, Warda Howard, E. H. Calvert, Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew, Edward Arnold and Eugene O'Brien.

The first September release is "The Higher Destiny," scheduled for the 2d, and it includes in the cast Warda Howard, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Gertrude Glover and Patrick Calhoun. It is a strong drama with stirring heart interest, of a man who loves, who neglects his wife, and finally repents. "The Pacifist," released on September 5, is a truly humorous comedy, based on one of the topics of the day. It shows how a man who is always fighting for peace finally wins out by fighting with his fists. It features Harry Dunkinson, one of the strongest comedians to be seen on the screen.

On September 6 Essanay offers Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 15, by Wallace A. Carlson, a caricature on the leading men and events of the day. "A Million for a Baby" is the three-act offering of September 9, a strong drama featuring Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, Lillian Drew and John Lorenz. On September 12 comes a two-act drama, "The Greater Obligation," featuring Edward Arnold.

Dreamy Dud, one of the humorous cartoons by Wallace A. Carlson, reappears on the screen on September 13. On September 16 there is a three-act drama, a stirring love story, entitled "The Woman Always Pays." Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth take the leading roles. Miss Drew and Sydney Ainsworth are also presented in a strong two-act drama, "When Justice Won," on September 19.

A Canimated Nooz Pictorial, No. 16, appears on September 20 and on September 23 there appears one of the best three-reel offerings of the month, "The Way of Patience," featuring Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain and Darwin Karr.

In the last week of the month, beginning with September 26, there is a two-reel comedy drama, "Peter the Hermit," featuring Nell Craig, Harry Dunkinson and John Junior, a Dreamy Dud on September 27, and a three-reel drama on September 30, "Twin Fates," featuring Sydney Ainsworth, Edmund F. Cobb and Virginia Bowker.

Essanay's five-act feature for the month is "The Return of Eve," presenting Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien. This is a stirring and artistic drama, its intense dramatic situations set in one of the most beautiful and picturesque spots of untamed nature; contrasting the simple and wholesome passions of primitive man with the foibles of modern society.

CIRCUS STORY FOR ANN PENNINGTON.

After her very successful debut in "Susie Snowflake" it was decided to star Miss Pennington in a circus story to be called "The Rainbow Princess" which is being staged under the direction of J. Searle Dawley. In this picture Miss Pennington plays a little waif who has been adopted by the wife of the proprietor of a circus and is forced to do a great deal of the mean work around the place in addition to learning to do tricks with the animals. Of course there is a lover among the men in the troupe but "The Princess," realizing that he is not quite sincere in his attentions, has the good sense to refuse to accept his attentions. She later proves to be not at all the waif that she was thought to be and—but the story is one to be seen on the screen.

The production of this photoplay at this particular time has caused many unexpected difficulties to be placed in the path of Director Dawley, because of the strict quarantines which have been placed upon itinerant citizens because of the paralysis plague. As a result of these numerous obstacles, Mr. Dawley was forced to arrange with one of the circuses which was on Long Island to have it apparently disband and travel back to New York in small units, with the Famous Players studio as their rendezvous. Then the tent was set up in a large vacant lot on the west side and the scenes were taken.

Miss Pennington, who is a remarkably clever athlete and is a trained acrobat, has already done some very startling feats in the "show" and she predicts that she will accomplish even more before the end of the picture.

First McClure Pictures

A Series of Five-Reel Feature Plays Is Announced Each Complete in Itself—"Seven Deadly Sins" the Title.

PRODUCTION plans have progressed so rapidly during the last few weeks that the McClure Publications feel warranted in lifting the veil of secrecy that has covered the titles of the forthcoming McClure Pictures, and in making known the plan of production.

The closing of contracts with McClure Stars and the production of the pictures in which they are to star is rapidly going forward. Nance O'Neil and Charlotte Walker have been added during the past week to the McClure program. These, with Ann Murdock and Holbrook Blinn, will appear in the first pictures of our new super-series of seven five-reel dramas, entitled "Seven Deadly Sins."

While issued as a series each McClure play will be complete in itself. For instance, the first McClure play, in which Ann Murdock, the Frohman star, is to appear is called "Envy." The second one, in which Holbrook Blinn is the most important player, is called "Pride." Charlotte Walker is to play "Sloth," Nance O'Neil "Greed," and so on until all of the "Seven Deadly Sins" have been portrayed on the screen. The continuity of interest is further strengthend by the appearance in each play of a pair of young lovers played by these sterling young actors, George LeGuere and Shirley Mason. Each play is to be complete in itself and will stand on its own feet, but all seven form a group that can be advertised together.

To facilitate immediate production, McClure's has arranged with Thomas A. Edison, Inc., for the use of its studios in the Bronx. Director Richard Ridgely, assisted by Director Crossland, are now actively at work on McClure Pictures, the entire studio being given over to McClure work. It is stated that so long as the supply of studio space around New York City exceeds the demand, McClure's will take no steps to erect a new studio of their own. Several propositions are under consideration for the use of studios in California for the winter work of the McClure organization.

Ivan to Increase Production

Company Engages New Director, New Stars and Contracts for Stories by Famous Authors.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made with a prominent director, who will shortly sever his connection with one of the largest film manufacturing companies, to direct all-star cast productions under the Ivan banner. Announcement as to this director's identity will be made shortly. Ivan Abramson, director general of the Ivan Company, who has produced the Ivan pictures of the past, will continue to act as director general.

The Ivan scenario department has been increased by obtaining the services of Victor de Villiers, the well-known photoplaywright as editor-in-chief. The Ivan Company has also purchased several original scenarios by L. V. Jefferson, and is corresponding with other well known authors with a view to acquiring the screen rights to popular books and plays.

Contracts have been entered into and negotiations are pending with prominent screen artists and performers of the legitimate stage to portray the various roles called for in some of these new screen plays which will be placed in production shortly.

In order that there may be no let-up of productive efforts during the winter season, arrangements have been completed whereby the Ivan Film Productions will have a studio in Los Angeles. This plant is located at 2500 Alessandro street, and here productions to be released through the Ivan exchanges will be made under the personal supervision of W. A. Norton.

At the present time, Ivan Abramson is completing "Her Surrender," an original photodrama written by himself and enacted by a cast composed of Anna Nilsson, Rose Coghlan, William H. Tooker, Harry Spingler, Wilmuth Merkyl and Frankie Mann.

ROLIN COMPANY MOVES.

The Rolin Company, makers of the Pathe "Luke" comedies, are moving from Hollywood to their original location on the high hill between Los Angeles and Hollywood. The new home is being gone over carefully, new wiring for lights, projectors, etc., being put in, and a large enclosed stage is under construction. The building which is now to be used for offices and dressing rooms, is an old-fashioned mansion which has long been one of the landmarks of the city. The new studio will be ready for occupancy within two or three weeks, when a third company will be put on.

Universals for the Week of August 28.

Four Special Features and a Host of Other Attractions Make Up a Pleasing Selection—Red Feather's "The Folly of Desires" Leads Off.

FOUR special features are released on the Universal Program during the week of August 28. First comes the five-reel Red Feather "The Folly of Desires," written by Alice and Claude Askew and Edward Kurnblaueh and produced by George Loane Tucker.

Next in importance is the Universal Special Feature Carter DeHaven in "He Becomes a Cop," a two-reel episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series. The latest episode was written and produced by Wallace Beery, and besides Mr. De Haven, Robert Milash and Margaret Whistler also play prominent roles. In this episode Timothy has some amusing adventures in a moving picture studio.

Third in the list of Universal Special Features for the week is Ella Hall in "The Heart of a Show Girl," a two-reel William Worthington. Franklyn Farnum appears in support of Miss Hall and the cast also includes Mrs. Muir and Helen Wright.

The fourth Universal Special Feature is the third two-reel episode of "Liberty," the new 41-reel Universal serial entitled "American Blood." Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo and Jack Holt play the principal roles in "Liberty," which was written and produced by Jacques Jaceard. G. Raymond Nye and Bertram Grassby also play prominent parts in the serial.

On Monday, August 28, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean are seen at their best in "The Terrible Turk," a Nestor one-reel comedy written by Harry Wulze and produced by L. W. Chaudet. Fred Gamble appears in support of the principals.

King Baggot in "The Chance Market," a three-reel society drama, is the Gold Seal Feature of Tuesday, August 29, Irene Hunt and Frank Smith appear in support of Mr. Baggot, who wrote and produced the picture. Others included in the cast are Jack Ridgeway and Howard Crampton. On the same day Ed Sedgwick plays the principal role in "A Lucky Leap," a Victor comedy written by Harry Wulze and produced by Roy Clements at Universal City. Mr. Sedgwick is supported by Nell Bennett, Evelyn Nesbit, Andrew Arbuckle and Harry Griffith.

On August 30 Dan Russell cavorts about in "The Right Car but the Wrong Berth," a two-reel L-Ko in which Katherine Griffith and Vin Moore also appear. There will be no Laemmle release on August 30th. Number 35 of the Universal Animated Weekly will be released on this date.

The Victor release for Thursday, August 31, will be replaced by the Universal Special Feature, "The Heart of a Show Girl," and there will be no Big U release on this date. Under the Powers brand the Dr. Dorsey educational picture, "Japan's Gateway to the Temple of the Gods," will be released on August 31.

"The Call of the Past," an Imp two-reel underworld drama featuring Agnes Vernon, will be released on September 1st. In this picture, which was written by Harvey Gates and produced by William Lowery and Charles Mack, Miss Vernon is supported by Kingsley Benedict, Frank Brownlee and William Lowery. On the same date Edward Hearn and little Elizabeth Jaynes, the champion child diver of Universal City, play the principal roles in "Little Brownie's Bravery," written by L. Canfield and produced by C. S. Elfelt. Appearing in support of the principals are Cameron C. Coffey and Arthur Allardt. There will be no release under the Nestor brand on September 1.

On September 2, "The Desert Rat," a Bison two-reel drama featuring Romaine Fielding, will be released. "The Desert Rat" was written by Gertrude Mason and produced by Mr. Fielding. There will be no release under the Laemmle brand on September 2. William Franey and Gale Henry furnish the fun in the Joker comedy, "The Elixir of Life," which will be released on September 2, and was written by Harry Wulze and produced by Allen Curtis. Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti appear in support of the principals.

There will be no release under the Rex brand on September 3. The Big U feature for the day will be "The Song of the Woods," a drama written by Olga Printzlau and produced by Elfelt in which Raymond Nye and Vola Smith play the principal roles supported by Marc Robbins and Charles Gunn. On the same day William Garwood and Lois Wilson play the leads in "Arthur's Desperate Resolve," a Victor comedy written by E. J. Clawson and produced by William Garwood. Alfred Allen, Edwin Brown and Edward Brady appear in support of the principals.

Selig Completes "The Crisis."

Churchill's Famous Story Said to Have Been Produced in Pictures With Great Exactness.

"THE CRISIS," the wonderful story of American patriotism, written by Winston Churchill, has been filmed as a spectacular film drama in twelve reels by the Selig Polyscope Company. The production will be released in the near future.

William N. Selig considers "The Crisis" as one of the most elaborate and expensive film dramas ever made in this country and the verdict of the few who have been fortunate enough to see private presentations of the film bear out Mr. Selig's assertion.

An interesting innovation in connection with "The Crisis" is that there is not a single detail in the film but that closely follows Mr. Churchill's great book dealing with the crisis in American history. Also, a majority of the scenes are filmed on historic ground, in localities called for in the book, including St. Louis, Mo., and Vicksburg, Miss.

The battle scenes in "The Crisis" are very spectacular and engage the services of the entire membership of the Mississippi National Guard including officers, etc., who staged the siege and defense of Vicksburg right on the ground where the historic engagements occurred over half a century ago. Although thousands of men, horses and equipment are engaged in the scenes of Civil War battles yet these scenes are but a small part of the drama and are just sufficient to carry along the logical action.

Historical scenes in and near Vicksburg, including the Vicksburg court house and slave market, are shown in all historic detail. Beautiful Southern homes, right in the heart of the romantic Southern country, so frequently described in the book, are shown together with the historic Carvel homestead.

Not the least important item in connection with "The Crisis" is the introduction to filmland of a new and startlingly realistic Abraham Lincoln enacted by Sam D. Drane. Too often historic characters are burlesqued and cause a loss of valuable atmosphere, but Drane's characterization of Abraham Lincoln is both dignified and convincing and not only does Drane resemble Lincoln, but the Great Emancipator's every little personal characteristic has been studied and faithfully portrayed. Even Lincoln's old dispatch box was loaned by the War Department for this Selig film play, which proves the care that was taken in having every detail of the drama correct as to atmosphere and history.

The cast of the play is worthy of especial mention and includes George W. Fawcett as "Judge Silas Whipple," Matt B. Snyder, as "Colonel Carvel," Bessie Eyton as "Virginia Carvel," Thomas Santschi as "Stephen Brice," Eugenie Besserer as "Mrs. Brice," Frank Weed as "Eliphalet Hopper," Marshall Neilan as "Clarence Colfax," Cecil Holland as "General Sherman," Sam D. Drane as "Abraham Lincoln," Will Machin as "Captain Lige Brent," Leo Pierson as "Jack Brinsmade," and others. Every member of the cast was selected with the type in view and all do full justice to their roles.

Colin Campbell was selected by Mr. Selig to direct the production of "The Crisis" and film authorities who have seen the play pronounce it his greatest and most artistic effort. When it is recalled that Mr. Campbell produced "The Spoilers," "The Rosary," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," etc., his latest and most massive production will be awaited with great interest.

"The Crisis" will be released with a special musical score that is now completed by one of this country's foremost musicians. An unusual publicity campaign is being planned and the presentation of this film will in every way be in just accordance to its artistic worth. Announcement of the release plans for "The Crisis" will be made in the near future by Mr. Selig.

SEVERAL NEW STARS FOR BLUEBIRD.

Although against the policy of Bluebird Photoplays to make and advertise "stars," the necessity is realized that exhibitors must have "names" to bill, and to that end several additional leading ladies have been signed for the stock company. Dorothy Phillips will soon appear under Director Joseph De Grasse in "The Place Beyond the Winds"; Ruth Stonehouse has been directed by Wm. Worthington in "Spring Song"; Cleo Madison will appear in "The Chalice of Sorrow," directed by Rex Ingram, and Grace Carlyle will have Robert Leonard as her director in "The Eagle's Wings." The September releases name Edith Johnson, in "Behind the Lines," and Elsie Jane Wilson, in "The Evil Women Do," as new stars in Bluebirds.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

What Is the Matter with the Industry?

IT HAS been no secret for some time past that the moving picture industry has been suffering from the effects of over-production and reckless competition, to which may be added the lack of business co-operation among the great producing companies, in whose care the welfare of the industry has been committed for the time.

On the charge of over-production one has only to consider the fact that feature productions, costing many thousands of dollars each, are given only a one-day showing in most of the photoplay theaters in the country. At the outset the exhibitors had it in their power to guide the public in their demands; but unbusinesslike competition between some exhibitors, who sought to outdo each other in the matter of programs, soon led to extravagant demands from the public, and in the effort to meet these demands a burden too heavy to be borne was placed on the producers. At the same time the exhibitors have not benefited, but are, themselves, also losers.

The great world war has added to the producers' burden, as it has reduced the demand for the American product in the foreign market, fully 75 per cent. in most instances. Thus the quality of the output had to be sustained in a contracted market, with the result that profits have been confined to small margins, or wiped out altogether.

The introduction of new capital, furnished by men who looked on moving pictures as the source of unlimited wealth, has made matters worse, as it has led to reckless competition between producers and to a still larger output. Rentals of films were necessarily lowered in order to find a market, and when accounting day came around it was found that instead of dividends being declared a deficit had to be met.

To add to the burdens of the industry the "star" system became the vogue, and unheard of figures were paid to secure the prestige of a name. Even said business men have catered to the whims of the public as they would to the conservative call of a dependable following, and increased rentals have been charged exhibitors, who, in turn, have increased the prices of admission, so as to meet the huge, outrageous figures paid the "stars."

This looks very much like the exploitation of a great industry, instead of assisting in its healthy, conservative development. If the makers of moving pictures can arrange to get together once in a while to consider the welfare and future of the industry as a whole, I believe the near future will show better results for themselves and for exhibitors, and for the entire industry.

Loyalty to an industry on the part of those engaged in it is as necessary to its success and permanence as loyalty to a nation by its citizens is necessary for its perpetuity. There is no place for disloyalty in either case.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Sol Lesser, accompanied by Mrs. Lesser and J. Samuels, director and attorney of the All Star Features Distributors Company (Mr. Lesser's organization), arrived in the city from the Pacific Coast on Sunday, August 13, and proceeded to New York Tuesday, August 15. While here, Mr. Lesser purchased the Australasian rights to "Where Are My Children?"

Robert T. Kane, of Kulee Features, Inc., paid us a pleasant call one day last week. Mr. Kane has been traveling extensively through the middle west, disposing of the state rights features owned by his company, and he reported excellent conditions, notwithstanding the hot weather. This speaks well for the care taken to keep the interior of moving picture theaters cool, as in some cases the mercury was over 106 degrees.

It was a great surprise to learn that Kathlyn Williams, for many years Selig's leading star, of world-wide celebrity, has joined the Pallas-Morosco forces on a long-term contract.

H. H. Buckwalter, George Kleine's hustling representative in Denver and Salt Lake City, is now impressing on his numerous patrons the need of changing the current of their programs by booking a series of Kleine travelogues, the first series consisting of six reels.

"The program is classy, but not exactly classical," says Mr. Buckwalter in a well gotten up circular. "Not a bit of the 'sameness' of other travelogues. No war stuff, but six happy picnics, just like a vacation when your boss pays all expenses and you are in millionaire company."

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Manufacturing Company, informs me that on August 16, at the National Dealers' Service conference held in the Hotel Sherman, this city, he appeared and gave to the advertising men and sales managers present some valuable facts and figures concerning actual moving picture advertising which has been accomplished, and he also gave a general outline of the possibilities of moving pictures as an advertising medium. After the conference, all the members present in the city visited the Rothacker Film Manufacturing plant, where half a day was spent in learning how moving pictures are made to advertise.

Wesley Smith, in charge of a camera crew of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, returned to Chicago recently after completing a twelve weeks' tour of the southwest, where he secured special scenic pictures. During his trip, Estes Park and various other Colorado show places were also comprehensively filmed. Another camera crew, in charge of Harry Birch, is at present in Canada handling a big industrial contract there.

Edward Linden, in charge of another camera crew, left Chicago last week on a trip through Yellowstone Park, after which he will cover the entire Pacific Coast and the Canadian northwest. Mr. Linden will be gone about two or three months, and during that time he is expected to secure about 20,000 feet of represented scenic films, as well as attending to several industrial contracts which the company has on the Pacific Coast.

T. H. Miller, with his crew, is at present taking care of some special photoplay work in Kansas City, Mo., and W. B. Klingensmith is now working in Chicago on a big civic picture that will show the advantage of Chicago as a summer resort.

E. H. Philippi, sales manager of the company, recently returned to Chicago, after having made an exhaustive tour of inspection of the various agent's offices of the company throughout Ohio and Michigan.

H. R. Paxton, for several years connected in an advertising capacity with the International Harvester Company of America, and for the past two years advertising manager of that company at Terre Haute, Ind., has been appointed publicity manager of the Famous Players Film Service, Inc., in Chicago. As explained recently in an article in the World, a publicity department will be conducted in connection with each exchange office of the Famous Players Film Service throughout the country in order to benefit the exhibitor and the company itself. In Chicago the publicity policy will be to help the exhibitor, by arranging publicity and plans designed to attract more of the better class of moving picture theater-goers to houses showing the Paramount service.

Dr. Joseph A. Jerger, of Waterloo, Iowa, has been in Chicago for the past ten days completing arrangements and buying a camera outfit, which he will take with him on a 34,000-

The first night we went down town to see the picture show with Bill Russell, Charlotte Burton, his leading lady, and members of Russell's bachelor household consisting of Baron Edward A. Kauffman, scenario writer de luxe, and wielder of the sympathy pen; Harvey Clark, heavy man and delineator of characters, and George Ahearn, you always mistake the "A" for an initial. However we went to the Palace theater on the main street, which is one of the most popular in town. Here we met Captain McGuire, the owner and manager, who is the Tally of Santa Barbara, and who is one of the best known exhibitors in his city. He is the original showman of the town. He opened the first successful picture house in 1909, called La Petite, and ran in a vacant store for three years, then moved up into the big business district and opened the present house. He enjoys a fine business, having 650 chairs. Music is by a big Fotoplayer, and projection is by a Simplex and a Power. He shows Metro, Monday and Tuesday; Mutual, Wednesday and Thursday; World, Friday and Saturday, and mixed on Sunday, with the usual Chaplin picture and a Secret from the Submarine, to fill out the bill. Captain McGuire says business took a great jump when the American opened its studios, because interest was stimulated in the pictures and business increased about 75 per cent.

Next morning at the studio we met George Wight, head of the publicity bureau, and also editor of scenarios. Harold Hoadley, son of the immortal "Pop" Hoadley, scenarioist, writes most of the publicity news. Mr. Wight said that, for the benefit of script writers, his department was in need of five-reel feature stories. Recently the Flying "A" stopped making short pictures, hence the change in demand. He is not much interested in material sent in by outside writers, saying that Uncle Sam is being enriched more than anyone else. However high class comedy dramas, straight dramas, and in fact anything good from a well known writer will receive attention.

Edward Sloman is making a picture, "The Shadow," by William Lippert, screened by Clifford Howard, and starring Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen. We will tell more about the studio and other exhibitors next week.

UNIVERSAL STUDIOS BUSY.

This has been a busy week at Universal City. With close to forty companies exposing film along the thousands of feet of stage, and out on various locations, the output is very large, and releases demand much footage. Saturday Director A. W. Rice with his company, headed by Jane Bernoudy, returned from a several weeks' trip to Bear Valley where they filmed a series of mountain pictures. They went at first to the highest mountains to do a single picture, but the scenery was so beautiful, and they liked working there so well that they lengthened the stories, and continued camping out and shooting many magazines of film on their stories. Jane Bernoudy plays the leading parts, with George Pearse playing opposite. Miss Bernoudy is the girl in front of the camera, while her director is leaning against the tree just behind her, George Pearse is at the extreme left.

"HAZARDS OF HELEN" COMPANY TRANSFERRED TO GLENDALE.

The "Hazards of Helen" Company which until recently has been producing at the Hollywood studios of the Kalem Company have transferred to the Glendale studios this week, leaving the Hollywood plant for the producing of the "Ham Comedies." Lloyd V. Hamilton, now directing these comedies, finds the studio none too large for this work, as the stories being written for these comedies called for more elaborate settings than in the past. A large tank is now being built for water scenes and additional traps are being built into the stage, one with a hydraulic hoist with sufficient power to raise an entire set. As Kalem's railroad station "Lone Point" is near the Glendale studios this transfer will facilitate the work of the "Hazards of Helen" Company.

"Ham Comedies" Company and a number of extra players leave this week for Arrow Head Springs where they will make a one-reel story under the direction of Lloyd Hamilton, entitled "Ham and Mud." The story is written by Hamilton and Duncan, a roaring farce about mud baths, and the company will remain at Arrow Head Springs a week to make the necessary scenes at this suitable location.

Messrs. Hamilton and Duncan received the other day from Hirao Shokai, an exhibitor of Yokohoma, Japan, two gorgeous kimonos of silk crepe, ornamented with the Kalem trade mark embroidered in blue silk. "Ham and Bud" are very popular with the patrons of Mr. Shokai's theater and this Oriental exhibitor writes that a "Ham Comedy" night is set aside every week when elaborate souvenirs are given away to the public. Slap stick comedies appeal to the peoples of the far East, and there is always a great demand in Japan and China, we have learned from visitors to these countries, for American films.

DIRECTOR CABANNE LEAVES FINE ARTS.

William Christy Cabanne, the well known Fine Arts director, has resigned his position with the Fine Arts Film Company, and Wednesday this week entered a contract with the Metro Picture Corporation.

Mr. Cabanne has been employed to direct a $500,000 serial for Metro which will require several months to stage.

So far the title of the nature of the big serial has not been divulged by the Metro Corporation, but it is said that rehearsals on the big film production will start very shortly.

Mr. Cabanne will direct Francis K. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and will leave immediately for New York, where the serial will be filmed. It is probable that as soon as the Bushman-Bayne serial is completed, the Quality-Metro Company will be brought to Los Angeles, where future pictures will be made.

Mr. Cabanne has won considerable fame as a director since joining the Griffith Company, and the step upward is seen by his friends as recognition of his remarkable ability.

INCE PLAYERS HAVE GOOD TIME.

It would seem that life with Thomas H. Ince players at Culver City was "just one grand picnic." Hardly had the Kay-Bee stars recovered from their "million-dollar outing," at Catalina Island the other week than Business Manager E. H. Allen staged another grand affair in Topanga Canyon.

Leaving the Culver City Plant early in the morning the picnickers drove in automobiles to the heart of beautiful Topango Canyon. Hunting, fishing and hiking used up the morning hours and after that came the big spread, voted the record-breaking best ever.

Various athletic sports closed the day's fun. Among those present were:

Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Enid Markey, Margaret Thompson, Clara Williams, Margery Wilson, Reginald Barker, Walter Edwards, George Fisher, Charles Giblyn, Jack Gilbert, William S. Hart, Robert McKim, Charles Miller, Charles Ray, J. Barney Sherry, Jerome Storm, Monte M. Katterjohn, Lanier Bartlett, Superintendent of Production Dave Hartford, Mrs. Hartford, Business Manager E. H. Allen, Chief of the Art Department Irvin Willat, Cameramen De Vinna, Betx and Warren, and Publicity Manager Kenneth O'Hara.

NEW STUDIO TO MAKE MUTUAL.

With three studios on the Pacific Coast making Mutual pictures, another plant will be in operation within a short time where five and seven reel features, under the direction of Harry Pollard, formerly of the American Company, will be filmed. Mr. Pollard is backed by a Santa Barbara millionaire named Osborn.

Recently Mr. Pollard made a picture at San Diego called "The Pearls of Paradise" as a test film. This was submitted to the Mutual Company and found to be just what it wanted, and it was because of the success of this picture that Mr. Pollard was given a long-term contract to produce features for Mutual.

Miss Marguerita Fischer, Mr. Pollard's wife, will be featured in a great number of the pictures, and it is planned to turn out about twelve a year.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

The Smalleys have now completed James Oppenheim's story "Idle Wives," and will from this on direct independent of each other at Universal City.

Lois Weber, who in private life is Mrs. Phillips Smalley, will start production this week on a five-reel photo drama entitled "Devotion," with Mary MacLaren as her featured player. Arthur Forde will remain as Mrs. Smalley's assistant director.

Phillips Smalley will produce a story written by Brand Whitlock, former minister to Belgium. The name of the film play is "The Girl That's Down."

Director Ben Wilson, who takes the part of an Indian in "The Last of His Race," took a 20 foot tumble from a cliff at Pine Crest near San Bernardino this week while engaged in a struggle with his assistant director, Thomas Walsh, who was playing the part of an Indian guide. The two men fought to the edge of the cliff when a rock gave way under them and they both dropped into the river below. Fortunately neither was hurt and the incident added considerable thrill to the story.

The torpedo boat destroyer Farragut while lying off the port of San Pedro was riddled with shots from bow to stern this week, the shooting being done by a battery of motion picture cameras belonging to a Universal company who used the warship as background for some of the scenes in the three-reel photoplay "Honor Thy Country."

Permission to obtain the use of the Farragut had been secured by General Manager Davis, who wired Secretary of Navy, Josephine Daniels, requesting that the Universal be accorded the desired privilege. Secretary Daniels sent his consent at once and in addition wired Capt. Hudson, Commander of the destroyer to assist the Universal Company in every way to make the scenes aboard the vessel as effective as possible.

Carter de Haven and a large company of Universal players under direction of Wallace Beery spent several days last week at Catalina Islands, filming scenes for one two-reel and two one-reel comedy features. The company secured some wonderful water scenes and many laughable situations for the three stories.

Gretchen Lederer, one of the most popular young women at Universal City, assisted this week in the formation of a German Woman's Club of Los Angeles, the aim of which is to help the needy and sick among the German population of our city. Miss Lederer was appointed financial secretary of the organization.

What is said to be the largest court room setting ever built for the screen was completed this week at Culver City under the supervision of Art Director Robert Brunton, and is now being used by Director Walter Edwards for scenes in a new Triangle-Kay-Bee play by John Lynch, in which Frank Keenan will appear as the star. The setting covers a floor space of approximately 3,000 square feet and has a seating capacity of nearly 400. It is reproduced from photographs of one of the handsomest Supreme Court rooms in New York City, and is declared to be absolutely accurate in every detail of its construction.

Alma Reuben has been engaged to play the leading feminine role in support of William S. Hart in a new Triangle Kay-Bee drama, written by J. G. Hawkes. Miss Reuben is familiar to Triangle patrons from her splendid work with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Halfbreed," a recent Triangle-Fine Arts release.

Geraldine Farrar will take the part of Jeanne d'Arc in a great film drama now being produced by the Famous-Players-Lasky Company, at its Hollywood studio and on the Lasky ranch in San Fernando Valley. It is being directed by Cecil B. de Mille. The supporting cast includes Theodore Roberts, Fred Wilson, Marjorie Daw and many other well known Lasky players.

Thomas Meighan has returned to the Lasky studios after spending his vacation in the East with his wife, Frances Ring. He will shortly start rehearsals on a new production.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison have been at Lake Tahoe filming scenes in a new Metro film play called "Mr. 44." General Manager Fred Balshoffer expects two more of his companies from the East shortly. These will at once begin work at the Hollywood studios, at 1329 Gordon street.

The Clune Motion Picture Company which has been working for many weeks at their studio on the corner of Melrose and Bronson avennes filming a ten-reel screen version of Harold B. Wright's well-known story, "The Eyes of the World," sent their players and directors last week with an extensive camp equipment to the San Gabriel Canyon. The company is expected to be gone for nearly a month and the final scenes of the story will be taken on these locations far away from the traveled highways and reached only by stage and mule back. Truck loads of camp equipment and food stuffs made up a regular caravan. Films taken on these locations are being sent daily on burrows to a waiting automobile at the nearest point on the road and rushed to the studios for development. Donald Crisp the producer of "Ramona" is the General Director of this big feature.

Captain F. E. Kleinschmidt, the well known explorer and cinematographer, arrived in the city Saturday last week from San Francisco. We are informed that W. H. Clune has bought the rights for California, Nevada and Arizona for Captain Kleinschmidt's European war pictures. They will be seen at the Auditorium next Monday.

Declining the services of a substitute and refusing to allow a dummy to be used, Bobbie Dunn, popular Keystone actor, one day this week jumped from the top of a five-story building into a plaster mixer. The plaster mixer was formed around a hidden pit less than six feet deep and eight feet square. Cement had been thrown on the water to add to the realistic effect.

Hand over hand up the fire-escape of the shaky skeleton of the structure went Dunn. When he took his position on the top of the building ready for the hazardous dive the crowd below pressed closer, amazed and breathless.

Dunn lost no time on the crest of the building. Smilingly he waved to a group of inmates. A moment later his form shot out into the air. There was a splash and speculation was intense until his head was seen to come to the surface of the water filled pit. His reappearance was greeted with shouting and cheering.

Lloyd V. Hamilton completed last week a rather elaborate and extremely funny one-reel Kalem comedy. The story tells of "Ham's" attempt to capture a $50,000 prize for a substitute for gasolene. "Bud" is the substitute and when after pushing a six cylinder touring car with the capitalist, who has offered the prize, his charming daughter and "Ham" in it over numerous hills he falls in an open manhole and starts for the ocean, via the sewer route, "Ham" regrets all his abuse of his partner and starts for the ocean to rescue him. A round tank 8 feet high and 20 feet long was built at the Hollywood studios for the interior of the sewer scenes, and two fire hose were used to get the rush of water through. A similar tank was built at San Pedro at low tide to show "Bud" and the officer arriving at the ocean. Ethel Teare is the fair damsel that plays opposite the enterprising "Ham."

Two World Film Dramas

House Peters is Star of "The Rail Rider," a Paragon Production—Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton in "Husband and Wife."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

"The Rail Rider."

THE attractiveness of the first reel of this picture and the dramatic force of a number of scenes in subsequent reels assure the popularity of one of the very best of recent Brady-made productions. "The Rail Rider" is general in its appeal; children will enjoy it, so will their elders; whereas the normal boy, who classes locomotive engineers among the most fortunate of men, will find the picture an unqualified delight. An engineer is the hero and very handsomely is he rewarded for doing even a little more than his duty. In almost no time at all he advances from a place at the throttle to a desk beside that of the president of the road and he wins the president's daughter in the bargain.

How all this happens makes a decidedly interesting story, the first part of which was photographed on a picturesque single-track railroad running through a mountainous country. House Peters plays the engineer, who is not averse to repairing the track when the train is held up by a washout. And instead of being credited with resourcefulness in meeting an emergency, he is charged with disobeying orders and suspended by a mysterious power in the railroad management known as "B." Coming on top of other arbitrary rulings, the incident is enough to stir the discontented employes to action, and as their representative Jim Lewis goes to the executive offices in New York.

It appears that the manager, not the president of the road, is to blame for the unfair treatment, and when the manager disappears with the company's funds, Lewis starts on his trail. He makes almost as able a detective as he did an engineer; the absconding official is caught and the honest employe is suitably honored. The love interest in the picture is slight, but sufficient for a story of the kind. Director Tourneur's production is smooth, and Mr. Peters makes the engineer a most genial, likable man. Zena Keefe is pleasing in the conventional role of the president's daughter, whereas others in a wisely selected company are Bertram Marburgh, Harry West and A. Harrington.

"Husband and Wife."

The excellence of the cast in this version of the stage play by Charles Kenyon is conspicuous. With Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton in the leads, assisted by such able players as Gerda Holmes, Emmett Corrigan, Madge Evans and Montague Love, it is not surprising to find a performance above the average, while Barry O'Neill's production reveals taste and discrimination in emphasizing the essential points of a quite complicated plot concerning the involved affairs of an extravagant wife and a husband lacking in moral courage.

For photoplay purposes, the story in "Husband and Wife" was not an ideal selection; too much depending upon dialogue which must be brought out in sub-titles; but, in the main, the difficulties were overcome. The theme is familiar enough, but there is a certain freshness in the treatment that greatly benefits the picture. For instance, instead of the customary extravagant wife who deserts her husband in favor of another man, we have a wife who is willing to have it supposed that she is eloping, merely to facilitate a divorce, and all the while she is really faithful. Then, too, the man in imminent danger of figuring as co-respondent, is far removed from the conventional villain. He frankly loves Doris, yet is determined to maintain an honorable position, and is so magnanimous, in the bargain, that he contributes half of the money needed to keep the husband out of jail, after bank securities have been misappropriated.

Social ambition, thoughtless extravagance and the weakness of a man forced to live beyond his income, all figure in this very well acted drama of modern life, which, if not remarkable, is rather an improvement on the average offering of its type.

"The Parson of Panamint"

Dustin Farnum Is Starred in a Pallas Picture of Fine Quality —A Story with a Sympathetic Note.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WITHOUT casting any reflections on other productions of recent issue, it may be confidently asserted that it is some time since exhibitors have been offered a Pallas picture so thoroughly good in all respects as "The Parson of Panamint," written by Peter B. Kyne and directed by William D. Taylor, with Dustin Farnum in the title role. It scores on practically every point that contributes to a popular photoplay. There is a very human story, easily followed and interesting; the atmosphere of a western frontier town is caught to perfection, the characters are deftly drawn and in the leading role, that of a parson typifying muscular Christianity, we have Dustin Farnum, as virile and manly an actor as the screen possesses. It will be a cold audience, indeed, that does not applaud "The Parson of Panamint."

When the story opens there is nothing left of Panamint but heaps of rubbish, the remains of what was once a thriving town. Old "Chuckwalla Bill" tells the tale of the rise and fall of the community—how when he was elected mayor on a platform calling for a church, a schoolhouse and a jail, he went to San Francisco in search of a parson and returned with Philip Pharo, and how the hard-hitting preacher proceeded to introduce practical Christianity in Panamint. The liveliest place in town and the rendezvous of the most genuine people, is a combination dance hall and gambling house conducted by Bud Deming. The parson shocks his congregation when he refuses to treat Bud and his pals as irretrievably lost souls, and he horrifies his flock still more by playing roulette and winning the ownership of the place.

Finally the break comes and it finds Philip Pharo on the side of the reformed gamblers and drunkards. Expelled from the church, he uses the saloon for Sunday services and continues to be a helpful friend, until he sacrifices his life in saving the man who did most to injure his reputation. The fire scene in which Mr. Farnum climbs to the belfry of a burning church is highly spectacular; but the real appeal of the picture lies in the sound characterization and the adroit mingling of pathos, drama and comedy. Credit goes to Pomeroy Cannon and Howard Davies for natural acting, also to Winifred Kingston for her portrayal of "Buckskin Liz." The subtitles are always in keeping with the tone of the story.

"The Crimson Stain Mystery"

"THE Crimson Stain Mystery" is made of the material that insures the success of the serial film production, the chief essentials of which are the marvelous impossibilities that thrill the nerves and fire the imagination. The public are interested either in stories that are vividly realistic, or in those that are weirdly impossible, but which move consistently and boast of highly melodramatic situations. Coupled with this is artistic finish in staging, and competent players and types that fit the situations. Occasionally there must be a newness of theme.

In the present instance there is an impression that something new has been attacked. To be sure, we have had the man of mystery before, but in no instance that the reviewer can recollect have we had him with eyes that on occasion resolve themselves into veritable balls of fire on the screen, nor have we had the work of science constituted to develop genius in the subject treated go so far astray as to germinate gangs of criminals. We must admit that the subject is a tremendously strong one, and that handled by Albert Payson Terhune no tricks have been lost.

The foundation of the serial is an experiment upon which Dr. Burton Montrose, a scientist, has spent years of his life in studying out. The disappointing result of this experiment, as stated above, is the delight of one Pierre Le Rue, he of the eyes of the crimson stain, whose pleasure is to strangle, and rob, a ringleader in all sorts of outrages and crimes. Under his spell Montrose is forced to make use of his discovery to instil criminal instincts into the secret agents of La Rue.

The first two episodes are entitled, respectively, "The Brand of Satan" and "In the Power of the Demon." The featured members of the cast, a strong one by the way, are Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin. The serial is being directed by T. Hayes Hunter.

"Sporting Blood"

Interesting Fox Melodrama Full of the Atmosphere of the Race Track and With Exceptional Views of Running Horses.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

PERHAPS a race track picture in which the heroine is no innocent rosebud, but shows her "sporting blood" by an action somewhat questionable—in this case she bets herself against $10,000 that a famous horse will fail in a race—is closer to life and by so much the more acceptable. Her brother had been dabbling in race track bets with money borrowed, sub rosa, from his employer and was that much to the bad and likely to go to jail. The "man higher-up" had ruined the brother and tries to ruin the heroine, and it is with him she makes the bet.

She and her mother have a horse at home that looks exactly like the famous racer, and she and the hero, whose sister the "man higher-up" has actually ruined, switch horses. The villainess, a former favorite, but now cast off by the "man," dopes the supposed racer, making the heroine's victory doubly sure.

The theme of the picture is the woman's duping a villainous man by his own tricks. It has been skilfully worked up with qualifying circumstances to heighten the moral tone of the situations, and seemed markedly pleasing to the audience at the Academy of Music in New York City where it was shown.

Dorothy Bernard plays the heroine with her usual ability and has Glen White, as able an actor, opposite to her in the hero's role. The "man higher-up" is played by De Witt C. Jennings. The best things in the picture are the realistic and beautifully photographed personal touches, scenes and scraps of scenes, in which the supporting cast often carries away much credit; and with these must be included the sets and backgrounds, especially the race track views that are often fresh and truly interesting. It is a picture filled with good things. Bertram Bracken directed it.

"The Footlights of Fate"

V-L-S-E Feature from Book by Louis Joseph Vance, "Joan Thursday," with Mark MacDermott and Naomi Childers—Holds Well.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson

THE latest Blue Ribbon Vitagraph, made for the V. L. S. E. program and called "The Footlights of Fate," can safely be commended without reserve as a more than ordinarily interesting picture. It is just entertainment, merely a story told, but it keeps in pretty close to the true relationships of life and actual experience. It satisfies the spectator that it resembles reality. Yet the high quality hangs as much and perhaps more, on character delineation by the players as on the author's conception or the producer's arrangement. One sometimes, not often, wishes he could hear what the players are saying, and this is the picture's most noticeable weakness. One or two of the lesser characters don't really live at all times, or seem not to be when compared with the work of the others around them who are ringing true to life.

It is not a romantic love story, but that of a young woman of charming personality, played by Naomi Childers, who sacrifices love to art and becomes a great actress. It is taken from Vance's book, "Joan Thursday," and in the early scenes Joan, as a pretty shop girl, feels the sting of the city's curse and has to leave her job for the usual reason—a goatish floorwalker. Her father, played by William Shea, one its best characters, is a man of education brutalized by drink and gambling. She finds him not sympathetic. Trying for a chance on the stage she at first has to shiver in the breath of cold hard luck, but makes a friend in a young playwright (Mark MacDermott) who carries the part with his usual assurance of touch and pleasing presence. Another excellently played character is his aunt, who is stepmother to an heiress. The playwright loves this rich girl, but her millions keep him back and the villain runs away with her.

Joan is to fall into the clutches of this villain later till the final denouement frees her to continue her bright career, but in the meantime she has many trials and experiences that give us glimpses of stage life in New York. Also she has had to choose between the stage and a chance to marry the playwright.

Frederic Warde, the Thanhouser star, who is on tour, lecturing on the drama, has found Vermont an ideal location for scenes for "The Vicar of Wakefield," which will be Mr. Warde's next Thanhouser picture.

"A Lesson in Labor"

Two-Reel Lubin Melodrama Written by Robert E. Rinehart and Directed by Paul Powell.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A STRUGGLE between capital and labor is the foundation of this two-reel photoplay; but the author has seen fit to work out his theme in a highly improbable manner. This does not mean that the picture is not interesting. In place of being treated realistically, however, "A Lesson in Labor" wanders off into the field of romantic adventure and asks the spectator to accept a situation that never happened in real life. John Seward, a young mill owner, on the death of his father, issues an order that all employes over fifty years of age must be discharged. Terry Walsh, the son of one of the men so affected and himself an employe of the mills, determines to get even with Seward. The mill owner is engaged to a wealthy young woman and invites her and her mother for a cruise on his yacht. Walsh has obtained a position on the boat. He drugs Seward, tosses him into a small boat, puts the fiancee in with him, lowers the boat (unaided, while the yacht is in motion), lands on a deserted island, and forces his employer to do the physical labor for the party—after giving him a good beating. The young man learns his lesson, forgives his task master, takes back his old hands and earns the respect of his best girl

Everything that takes place on the yacht and the island is merely the invention of the author, but this does not detract from the moral effect of the situation. When Walsh knocks his boss down and then gives him a dose of his own medicine, the treatment is obviously the correct one, and we are ready to applaud the spirit of the scene, if not the means by which it is brought to pass. The picture is competently acted by L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, George Routh, Adelaide Bronti, Melvin Mayo and Sydney Hayes.

The direction is open to criticism at several points.

"The Mishaps of Musty Suffer"

Harry Watson, Jr., Performs Many Amazing and Amusing Stunts in the First Three Comedies of the Second Series Filmed by George Kleine.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

AND now comes Harry Watson, Jr., in the second series of "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," to entertain us under the guidance of Director Louis Myll in a somewhat different type of comedy that makes us laugh whether we will it or not, and afterwards makes us rub our eyes to find out why we did laugh. Indeed, these "whirls" of Musty Suffer defy analysis, for, like soap bubbles, they vanish when subjected to it.

"Blow Your Horn" is the title of the first comedy, and we first catch sight of "Musty" taking an old bicycle out of a cartful of scrap-junk. This "bike" has a comical look about it that stamps it at once as being a fit companion for "Musty" in his pranks. He is looking out for a job, and he stops his wobbly machine in front of an office which bears the sign "Boy Wanted."

Here he is given a job as messenger boy by the cadaverous old owner, and appears in the discharge of several assignments that excite the mirth of the spectator. "Musty" has nobody at home in his upper story, so on his first mission we see him saw his way out of a room with a bundle of laths, because he hasn't the sense to see that they can be taken through the door sidewise, though not lengthwise. On his second trip he is kind enough, while on his way, to take charge of a perambulator for a pretty nurse who spies a policeman nearby, and is much surprised when a husky, bearded patient raises his head from under the sun-hood and yells "Rock me you big bum, rock me." "Musty" does "rock" him—with good-sized boulders that he finds on the road!

The final incident in "Blow Your Horn" is a triangular affair, as "Musty" and two other boys—bound together apparently in Siamese-twin fashion—are sent out from the office to carry pieces of heavy scantling from a lumber yard to some other point. They come in contact with a policeman on the way, are pursued by him and fall over a precipice, at the bottom of which we see them slowly recovering, without a bone being broken! Miss Della Connor appears in this "whirl" as "the lady fair."

"While You Wait" is No. 2 of this second series of George Kleine comedies. "Musty" is on the look-out for a job and haunts an employment agency, the manager of which is impersonated by the old favorite, H. H. McCollom. This is a very funny and most ingenious comedy. Where Director Myll gets his very original ideas is a mystery. They might come from Nightmareland, so strange are they.

In this whirl "Musty" fills the positions of the maid, butler and gardener in the same house, all at the same time. You can guess the lightning changes he is obliged to make, the great difficulties he must overcome, and the fun of it all. It ends in a scene that would do justice to bedlam for conception.

"Showing Some Speed" is the third of the new series. "Musty" has returned to his work as a messenger boy. One of his easy tasks is to carry a cooking stove to a certain home. When he arrives at the address he finds the door locked and everybody out. Nowise dismayed, he pulls up the lower sash of one of the windows—all the time nursing the stove as if setting it down would make it catch a cold—and enters. Still holding the precious stove to his breast, he unlocks the door, passes out of the window, enters through the door and places the stove in the room. Then he locks the door, wipes his grimy hands on the lace curtains of the sitting room and exits through the window, which he then carefully closes.

After this feat he shows great weariness on getting back to the office. He lies down on the bench and sinks into slumber so deep that bell and steam whistle fail to awake him, and it is only when the manager rains down on his head a deluge of tinware and other high-sounding articles that he comes back to workland. But the shock has bent him double and he is obliged to get straightened out in a carpenter's shop, where he is stretched as if on an inquisition table.

The close of this whirl is a scream. "Musty," head first, is used as a battering ram by gamblers, who mistake him for a stranger who has just cheated them at cards. We see them drive him through a brick wall and throw him head foremost through the breach. But "Musty," much disfigured, still shows up, ready to appear in Whirl No. 4.

The release of "Blow Your Horn" will be made early in September.

"Rolling Stones"

Famous Players Adaptation of Selwyn Story Marked by Unusual Comedy Touches—A Good Picture.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

THERE are distinct comedy touches in "Rolling Stones" as it comes to us in the adaptation by the Famous Players of the stage success of Edgar Selwyn. In the production Del Henderson makes his Paramount debut as a director and Marguerite Courtot her Paramount entrance as a leading player. Mr. Henderson comes from the Keystone studio, where for a couple of years he has been guiding the making of comedies. That in that length of time he should have absorbed the atmosphere of that hilarious institution is a natural supposition. Likewise, too, is it perfectly natural to assume that in directing a dramatic subject his mind, trained in comedy channels, is quick to grasp those opportunities for a short, sharp chuckle that escape the observation of men accustomed to working along more sombre lines. That just this has happened in the making of "Rolling Stones" is apparent to even the casual observer. The result is more than worth while; it is a novelty, and one the development of which, if its working out be permitted, should bring something distinctly new to the screen.

for type as well as for ability. Miss Courtot is opposite him as Norma Noggs, the daughter of the boarding-house keeper. Denman Maley is Buck Rider, the crooked adviser of Dave. Alan Hale is Braden, the beneficiary with Norma of the candy-maker's will. Gretchen Hartman is Mrs. Braden. W. J. Butler, veteran player, is Mr. Branigan, the landlord, and Ida Fitzhugh is Mrs. Branigan. Russell Bassett is the old lawyer. Then there are the two "hard customers" seated by the side of Dave—Kid Broad and Tammany Young. They are convincing enough to please or to disturb any one.

"Rolling Stones" is a fast moving story of the underworld and of ordinary honest everyday human beings. "High life" it touches not; its absence is unnoted. The tale is of the reclamation of a young man who goes to the end of his rope, takes advice that is not wholesome, comes under the spell of a good young woman, and at the vital moment elects to travel the right road. There are situations containing a wide variety of elements—of straight drama, of melodrama and of comedy. The melodramatic features stand out—for instance, the battle in the candy factory and the chase over the roofs. And on the dramatic side there is nothing better than the situation covered by the moment Dave hands his week's pay to his ex-pal Buck and bids him make his escape.

planatory title; no need, in fact, for more than the customary presentation of the characters, after which the plot advances with all the necessary clarity and speed.

Given the right sort of a scenario, and he has it here. Director James W. Horne knows how to bring a melodrama to the screen without losing any of the possible thrills. Even for a picture actress trained in an exacting school, Marin Sais is an extraordinary equestrienne. She gallops through this picture with all the assurance of a circus rider, and most of the men in the cast would have no difficulty in qualifying as cowboys. By the very nature of the story, reckless riding becomes an important factor in creating thrills. Barbara is captured by the "unchained tigers"—a picturesque title for convicts escaped from jail—and carried far into the wilderness, while her father and a company of soldiers follow the trail left by the fleeing band. Being mounted on cowboys' horses, the convicts lead their pursuers a merry chase before they are caught.

The swift scenes, replete with action, are just the thing for a melodrama of this description, whereas the playing of Miss Sais, True Boardman and Frank Jonasson merits favorable comment.

"Tangled by Telephone."

Ivy Close and Arthur Albertson carry this farce-comedy through in high spirits, the situations resulting from a young dentist's neglect of professional duties after an office telephone makes communication with his devoted bride all too easy. First one patient, then another is deserted at a critical moment of treatment, and as matters go from bad to worse there is no end of a rumpus toward the close of the reel. Robert Ellis is responsible for the script and the production, which make first rate entertainment.

"The Secret of the Box Car."

Well up to the standard so long maintained in the "Hazards of Helen" pictures, the latest production by James Davis, from a scenario by E. W. Matlack, is worth viewing. The story opens with a bank robbery and it is not long before the robbers, in making off with their loot, reach Lone Point, where the intrepid girl operator is ever on the watch. After a series of struggles in, or on top of moving freight cars, Helen effects the capture of the fugitives.

The picture is based on a story by Elwood D. Hemming, which follows the fortunes of a fascinating chorus girl into the West, where, at a way station, she misses her train, is offered the hospitality of the home of Robert Goodman, evidently owner of a sheep ranch, and his mother; and later, when a formal letter of discharge reaches her from her manager, she becomes one of the Goodman family, and eventually the wife of Robert. Many feet of film are taken up with scenes of individual beauty on the sheep ranch, and the final turn in the lane comes when Robert is summoned by a New York drug company for the purpose of buying his formula for curing sheep of a sickness contracted through eating a certain poisonous weed. At this point of the story the mother of Robert falls and injures herself, making it necessary for his wife to precede him to New York, where she falls in with old companions. Later in the home of a certain clubman, who has sought to win the chorus girl of other days, known in her set as "the unattainable," Robert is shot. Miss Wehlen has the role of Helen Pettingill, the daughter of a farmer who strikes oil and who brings her and her mother, socially ambitious, to the city. Pettingill on a "toot" brings home with him a chauffeur, Stanwood, a second son of an earl earning his own living in America. In self-defense the father introduces his friend as the Count Terlitte. Mr. Gordon has a fine role, that of the chauffeur who needs no coaching in society's ways. By his poise, his judgment and skillful interpretation he remains the center of interest through the course of the story. Charles Eldridge as Pettingill gives a finished performance—a good actor and a good part. William Davidson is the false earl. Harry Neville is Dugan, a crooked employe. Then there is an unnamed detective who looks and acts his part.

"The Pretenders" is an interesting picture and should contribute a good number to the Metro program.

"The Narrow Path"

Five-Reel Red Feather Release Features Violet Mersereau As East Side Girl Who Climbs to Fame.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS production, written or adapted by Catherine Carr and directed by Francis J. Grandin, relates almost the same story as that of a recent Red Feather release entitled "The Heart of a Child." The main difference between the productions is that "The Heart of a Child" was enacted by an English cast and produced in or near London, while "The Narrow Path" pictures the life story of an East Side girl and has American settings throughout.

Violet Mersereau does appealing work in the part of Bessie Allen, daughter of poor and unfortunate parents. She dances in the crowded streets, to the delight of the whole neighborhood. Her father and mother both die violent deaths and she goes on to live with two orphan friends. Then comes an accident, which brings her to the hospital and wins the interest of Mrs. Latham and the wealthy young man whom she is later to wed.

The story is an entertaining one and well worked out, though it will not strike observers who witnessed its predecessor as fresh in plot. There is a little variation in the latter scenes, some of which are taken at Asbury Park.

Niles Welsh plays the hero, a rich young man named Shirley Martin, who at first desires to toy with the girl and later learns to love her. Others in the cast are William J. Welsh, Nellie Slattery, Anthony Merlo and Clara Beyers.

"The Whirlpool of Destiny"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features Flora Parker De Haven in Story of Life's Tribulations.

THIS five-reel subject begins with two separate plot threads, one following the fortunes of a city girl, daughter of an habitual drunkard, and the other the career of a wild country youth who comes to the city. In the course of the story these two meet and fall in love, working their way to happier conditions. Eugene B. Lewis and F. McGrew Willis wrote and adapted the story and Otis Turner directed the production.

It will occur to many observers that the scenes move with a certain abruptness and lack of continuity. This is perhaps accounted for by the two stories moving along simultaneously, each demanding about equal interest. Because of this divided state of things there is a lack of dramatic effect at times. At the same time many of the incidents are unusual in themselves. The death of the girl's father, while not an essential feature, is shown in a realistic manner.

Perhaps the best feature in a pictorial way are the rural scenes, taken on a big ranch. The glimpses of vast herds of cattle and hayfields under cultivation make a good background for this end of the production.

Flora Parker De Haven plays the daughter of the drunkard in a satisfactory way and Jack Mulhall is pleasing as the dissipated youth who reforms and weds the girl. The signing of the pledge and other features are handled with a certain melodramatic sentimentality. The production as a whole is not unusual, but has some elements of strength.

Triangle Program

"Gretchen the Greenhorn," Five-Reel Fine Arts by Bernard McConville and "The Thoroughbred," Five Reel Ince by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"GRETCHEN THE GREENHORN" might have been written with the requirements of the Fine-Arts Company in mind, but it rises above the mere vehicle for a star into realms of true story interest, the only thing that will hold an intelligent audience through five reels. It is well constructed and well handled, all the character being accorded natural opportunity. It is a complete and well-rounded production, each role nicely typed and acted, but all this adds to the praise which will be accorded Miss Dorothy Gish for her charming performance. An actress is not a star who has to have a play written for her—she is simply an attractive young person who does not know how to act. Miss Dorothy comes much nearer being a star in a well-balanced comedy like "Gretchen" than she would in a mere vehicle. She does wonders with her part, showing maturity in her impersonation and a new little sweetness all her own.

She is Gretchen, bright, hopeful, radiating goodness in a gentle and girlish way, a pure feminine type. She comes from the old country to join her father, a skilled and optimistic engraver, and she shares his fortunes and misfortunes with fortitude. He becomes the innocent instrument of a counterfeiting gang, while his daughter falls in love with a charming young Italian. These three are drawn, one by one, into a net spread by the counterfeiters and the engraver and Gretchen decoyed aboard a mysterious ship, where the spurious bills are made. Their rescue is made possible by keen-eyed little children they have helped, and so the story finds its way through melodramatic adventure to a graceful and happy conclusion.

"The Thoroughbred."

"The Thoroughbred" brings Frank Keenan new opportunity to display his varied talents, and he makes an interesting old Southern gentleman of the horse-racing type, but Gardner Sullivan has barely maintained his own as a consistently good author of screen stories. The exact material used has been employed over and over again until the element of suspense is almost entirely eliminated. We know in advance, where there is a racing horse and a track involved, that the race will bring financial relief in an emergency, in this case to lift the time-honored mortgage. The only uncertainty removed, why sit through five reels to see the hero embrace the heroine? He is in this case a young clergyman who has so successfully preached against horse racing as an incentive to gambling that he has influenced the passage of a bill against the sport which would not have been passed had the sport been kept clean. The same young clergyman secretly advances money to enable the old gentleman to win a big contest and wins the daughter as his reward. The best thing that can be said of the story is that it is picturesquely told.

On Biograph Program

"Strongheart" and "The Wedding Gown" Scheduled for Reissue—Pictures in Three and Two Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

ON the stage, Robert Edeson will always be associated with the character of Strongheart; in the screen version of the once popular play, the role of the Indian is filled by Henry Walthall, a member of the Biograph company when this picture was made. He gives a telling performance in a three-reel production that should draw well on the General Film program. "Strongheart" is one of the few stories of college life that rings true. It has atmosphere in abundance and there is enough variety of characterization among the members of the football team, in danger of being defeated in the crucial game because the signals have been disclosed to the opposing players. The concluding reel contains some effective drama, whereas the preceding reels are interesting in picturing the life as it is supposed to be enjoyed by college athletes.

The cast reads almost like the roster of the Biograph company of bygone days. We have Blanche Sweet, Lionel Barrymore, Alan Hale, Gertrude Robinson, Antonio Mareno and others; but there is never any question about who is the star of the production. Mr. Walthall makes a most sympathetic person of Strongheart. He assumes the appearance and manner of an educated Indian without being guilty of exaggerations, and in the final scenes, played with Miss Sweet, he is notably successful in expressing feeling.

Another biograph reissue announced for the latter part of September is "The Wedding Gown," a two-reel drama in which the plot is simple and in which the characters are finely appealing. It is a study of rural temperament, beautifully acted by Gertrude Robinson, Marshal Neilan and Kate Bruce. As the time approaches for the marriage of a pair of youthful country lovers, the mother of the prospective bride prepares a wedding gown, intending to give it to the girl as a surprise. But while visiting an aunt in the city, the young woman concludes to marry a wealthier man, a purpose that probably would have been carried through had not a sight of the gown made by her mother awakened true feelings. She returns to her country lover.

NEW DATE FOR GRIFFITH OPENING.

Positive announcement has been made in the offices of D. W. Griffith that the date for the New York opening of the new Griffith production of "Intolerance" at the Liberty theater will take place on Tuesday night, September 5. The original intention, as previously announced, was to open on August 22, but it was found that owing to delayed orders the theater cannot be made ready until the first week in September. Mr. Griffith is planning extensive improvements in the Liberty theater, with a view of introducing many innovations in the way of advanced projection for his forthcoming spectacle. The manufacturing plants cannot deliver the mechanical appliances before the last week in August.

AUTHOR OF "FANTOMAS" SEE PICTURES.

One of the two creators of Fantomas, the master of crime, has been visiting in America. Marcel Allian, who wrote the great French detective novels in collaboration with Pierre Souvestre, has just sailed for France after seeing the entire "Fantomas" series, as the pictures will be released by Gaumont through Mutual. While he had seen them when they were made at the Paris studios, he lost none of his enthusiasm for them when he saw them edited for the American market.

W. Christy Cabanne Joins Metro

W. CHRISTY CABANNE, for seven years associate director with D. W. Griffith, has signed a long time contract with the Metro Pictures Corporation. His first work on the Metro program will be the direction of Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in their new serial, as yet unnamed, which will be released by Metro in fourteen episodes in two reels each. Director Cabanne, who is in Los Angeles, will leave for the East immediately, and will begin work on the first Bushman-Bayne feature the early part of September.

W. Christy Cabanne.

Director Cabanne, like D. W. Griffith, is still a comparatively young man, but is dean of the producers associated with Griffith. Mr. Cabanne produced the first Mutual masterpicture, "The Great Leap." He was also selected to make the first Triangle feature, "The Lamb," with Douglas Fairbanks in the stellar role. This was Mr. Fairbanks' debut in motion pictures.

Director Cabanne was born in 1888, and was educated at St. Rose Academy and the Culver Military School, at Culver Lake, Ind. He went into motion picture work in 1910, playing leading roles with the old Biograph company. Subsequently he appeared with the Majestic, and assisted in the direction of pictures there. From the Majestic he joined the Fine Arts forces, and afterwards went with Director Griffith to Triangle.

Among some of the best known features produced under the direction of Mr. Cabanne are "The Great Leap," "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Absentee," "Lost House," "Enoch Arden," "The Martyr of the Alamo," "Double Trouble," "The Failure," and others.

At the conclusion of the Bushman-Bayne serial Director Cabanne will produce five part Metro features in which this stellar combination will be starred. Mr. Cabanne is now working in Los Angeles on the final scenes of "Diana of the Follies," in which Lillian Gish is starred.

E. V. MORRISON WITH SHERRY'S EXCHANGE.

The latest move of Wm. L. Sherry in carrying out the general Paramount plan of co-operation and advertising for the Paramount houses is the installation of a brand new department for the express purpose of conducting local advertising campaigns centered about each theater. E. V. Morrison, long known to the trade through publicity and advertising work, but best known to the exhibitor as originator of the business report system known as Manager's Screen Reports, has been engaged to conduct this department.

The establishment of the new department is in keeping with the Paramount's recent inaugural of local advertising managers for each exchange. Mr. Morrison's position is a new one and will supplement the general advertising done by the Paramount Company and the subsidiary companies releasing through the Paramount. His duties will be those of co-operating with the exhibitor in all local advertising work and bringing the fruits of the general advertising to bear right down on the individual house to the greatest extent possible as well as creating new press material to suit local conditions.

EAGLE FILM ENGAGES PRESS AGENT.

The Eagle Film Manufacturing and Producing Company announces the engagement of Benj. S. Garetson to have charge of its publicity department in the future. Mr. Garetson, at present, will have his headquarters at the Chicago office, but expects soon to move to Eagle City, near Jacksonville, Fla., where the Eagle company has its studios and where it is engaged in the production of a number of comedy series to be released through the Unity Sales Corporation.

Cutting Down Expenses.

EVIDENTLY the high cost of white paper is making itself felt. Many programs have been discontinued and others have been reduced. Paper is going up all the time and only this week we paid 13½ cents for a standard paper that for years sold for ten and the bill was rubber-stamped with a statement that the prices were subject to change without notice. Another increase is promised in the fall. Any increase in any expense hits hard on a business where the takings are comparatively small. To help make matters worse, the infantile paralysis scourge is spreading and where it strikes it hits hard on the amusement business. It is not alone that the children are barred, but parents fear to expose themselves to a contagion that they may take home to their children. But because business is bad is only another reason why increased effort should be made to improve that condition. It is no time to stop advertising, but the very time to advertise more and to advertise more intelligently. If you feel that you cannot afford to keep your house program going, and you know that it has done your business good, sit down and think things over. Perhaps you already have about all the foreign advertising the program can possibly stand. Then you cannot take in more advertising, but can you get more for what you are already carrying? If yours is a good vehicle for your business it is a good vehicle for the neighborhood business; better in many ways than the daily paper and worth more than the daily paper rate. Talk it over with your trade advertisers. Tell them you must drop the issue unless they help you meet the increased cost. This should not mean more than another ten cents an inch a week and most advertisers, if your program does them any good, will be willing to pay the increased cost knowing that it is a matter of real importance and not merely a device to get more money out of them. If your program is such that it does not pay either you or the outsider, make the program better. As a rule the fault does not lie with the program idea but with the program that is produced. It is not sufficient merely to get out a program. It must be a good one; one that people want to see. There are certain publications that we would ask for were we cut off the list. We like to see them each week. It is merely a matter of knowing how, and knowing how is merely studying the needs of the patrons and catering to that. The best way to cut down expense is to increase the revenue, then the expense pro rates at a smaller percentage and you have really cut it down.

Nomenclature Note.

William Lord Wright of the Selig Publicity staff signs himself "Bill. Lord Wright." That comma makes a heap of difference to anyone who notices it. Bill Waltmasons a little in the last Paste Pot and Shears but some of his feet limp, but the same thing is now and then noticeable when he cuts the lines into lengths. Bill is not wholly a poet even if he does wear the right sort of a tie.

Not the Way.

The Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has tried to solve its binding problem by not binding at all instead of side stitching. This is not quite the way out. But the paper is read no matter what form it comes out in for it is solid meat. We wish we had space for a recent editorial article, but it would take more than a half page and half pages are scarce. In substance it takes the patron by the hand and goes over the entire situation with him, leading off with this paragraph:

> Isn't it about time for us to come to a showdown on this matter of amusement service? We think it is. For the intelligent public the time has passed when pictures were pictures regardless of subject, cast, photography or projection. Motion pictures today occupy much the same commercial position that any other commodities do. You can be just as completely gold-bricked in your motion picture entertainment as anywhere else, but—if the shoeman sells you a bad pair of shoes you never go back for a little more of the same; if your clothier works off a bum suit on you, in the future you trade elsewhere. Why don't you apply the same rule to your amusement purchases?

With an intelligence that many if not most manufacturers lack, it points out that with a poor script only a poor play can result. Then it argues that production must be good, that all contributing factors must be good and then gets down to the real issue with the statement that a bonehead exhibitor with poor projection can set all this at naught. It does not suggest the identity of the bonehead exhibitor, but leaves that to be inferred and goes on to show that the Lyceum program it up to date. It takes the New York papers of the previous week, tells the films showing at the Broadway houses at fancy prices and points out that much of the material is booked at the Lyceum, where it will be shown with equal care for a ten cent price against a "dollar down" scale. There is nothing vicious about the article, no suggestion that the competitor at whom the story is aimed is not in their class. The opposition is not mentioned. They tell what good pictures are and why good pictures can be made bad. They give facts in clearly defined phrases and leave the reader to judge for himself. Some years ago Mr. Guimond wrote us that he had the town to himself and was preparing then against the inevitable opposition by giving the best show he could get. Now that he does face opposition, he does clean fighting. He makes his eight sheet work long and hard for the house and yet he keeps it dignified.

And here is another paragraph, this time from the editorial column. It is a good argument against the coupon ticket, though there are arguments as good in favor of the combination. If you copy forget that two-dollar price. It was blown into perdition even before the Triangle opened its two-dollar houses:

> We feel compelled to state to our good patrons that we do not offer "as an inducement" twelve tickets for a dollar, or even eleven. We are showing you 25-cent pictures for 10 cents, NOT 5-cent pictures for 8 cents. Facts are facts and when we say we have the highest-priced and best program obtainable we only state a fact that will be substantiated by anyone acquainted with the motion picture business. The Lyceum program is shown in all the largest theaters in New York and other Metropolitan centers at prices ranging from 25 cents to $2. The Strand, Rialto, Triangle of Brooklyn, Academy of Music—in fact, all of the biggest theaters catering to the motion picture public—show Paramount, Triangle and Fox pictures. If a saving of 2 cents appeals to a motion picture patron more than high quality in program and projection the Lyceum is really not the place to bring this patronage. Two cents will buy a picture of George Washington with gumstickum on the back, but it wont purchase much of anything else. Instead of reducing prices why not give stamps as souvenirs?

Personally we like the coupon ticket idea on the general argument that people who have a book of tickets will use them up faster than if they had to plank down the admission in cash each time, but we aim to give material for both sides of an argument, and this is good material for the antis.

Into the Papers.

Lee L. Goldberg, of the Mary Anderson, Louisville, Ky., has moved his eight-page program over into the photoplay page of the Courier-Journal. Instead of the house program he has been running, he takes a four-column space each Sunday and runs the paper there. R. B. Wilby, when he was in Selma, turned to the daily paper when he stopped the Academian, but if we remember correctly he got the space in return for the editorial work, and the scheme did not pan out well, as he was handicapped to some extent. In a place the size of Louisville and with a house that makes a more than local appeal (and the Mary Anderson is one of the real theaters), perhaps the Sunday issue is a better place, but for a locality theater or even for a larger venture, there is an intimacy about the house program that does not carry over into the Sunday paper. And on the other hand this move permits the house to monopolize what is really a general photoplay page, since it takes half the space. Interest in the department is increased by the offer of two tickets to all who send in material that is used in the

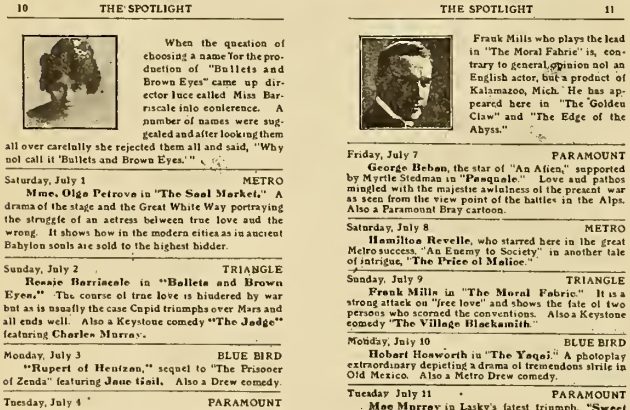
The sentiment is excellent, but the lady author is no poetess.



We will be obliged to Mr. Goldberg if he will tell us how the return shows up. Does this form of publicity show a better return on the investment than the house program?

Changing the Calendar.

Monday is generally one of the worst days of the week, and we cannot imagine why Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, permitted his printer to wish two Mondays on him only a day apart, but two reeent pieees of billing read: "Monday, July 15th," and "Monday, July 17th." It would be better business to turn a Monday into a Saturday instead of making a Saturday into a Monday. And the printer has too mueh Old English type.

Another Spotlight.

Spotlight seems to be a favorite name for house publications, and it is the title adopted by Clayton L. Matson, of the Orpheum, Fort Madison, Iowa. The first number is just to hand and is a sightly offering, sixteen pages and eolored cover, 3¾ by 7 inehes. The first issue is called the "Blanehe Sweet Number," suggesting the dedication of each issue to some favorite player whose likeness appears on the front, with a brief history as the leading story. The program runs for the month and the seeond half of the issue is given to the itemized program, a spaee at the top carrying a eut of some player to lead the reader over to these pages. This is not new, but it is an always ɡood deviee. The

10 THE SPOTLIGHT

When the qneation of choosing a name for the production of "Bullets and Brown Eyes" came up director Ince called Miss Barriscale into conference. A number of names were suggealed and after looking them all over carelully she rejected them all and said, "Why nol call it 'Bullets and Brown Eyes.'"

Saturday, July 1 METRO
Mme. Olga Petrova in "The Soul Market." A drama of the stage and the Great White Way portraying the struggle of an aetress belween true love and the wrong. It shows how in the modern eities as in ancient Babylon souls are sold to the highest bidder.

Sunday, July 2 TRIANGLE
Rensie Barriscale in "Bullets and Brown Eyes." The course of true love is hindered by war but as is nsually the case Cupid triumphs over Mars and all ends well. Also a Keystone comedy "The Judge" featuring Charles Murray.

Monday, July 3 BLUE BIRD
"Rupert of Hentzau," sequel to "The Prisoner of Zenda" featuring Jane Gail. Also a Drew comedy.

Tuesday, July 4 PARAMOUNT
Hazel Dawn, the beautiful Paramount star in "The Feud Girl." A stirring tale of conflict and love in the Kentucky mountains. Also a Paramount Pictograph.

Wednesday, July 5 TRIANGLE
John Emerson and Bessie Love in "The Flying Torpedo." How an eccentric writer of detective stories foiled the enemies of this country and made possible the use of a novel means of defense. Also a Keystone with Wm. Collier, "Wife and Auto Troubles."

Thursday, July 6 FOX
Robert B. Mantell and Genivevo Hamper in a strong dramatic production "The Spider and the Fly."

THE SPOTLIGHT 11

Frank Mills who plays the lead in "The Moral Fabric" is, contrary to general opinion not an English actor, but a product of Kalamazoo, Mich. He has appeared here in "The Golden Claw" and "The Edge of the Abyss."

Friday, July 7 PARAMOUNT
George Beban, the star of "An Alien," supported by Myrtle Stedman in "Pasquale." Love and pathos mingled with the majestic awfulness of the present war as seen from the view point of the battles in the Alps. Also a Paramount Bray cartoon.

Saturday, July 8 METRO
Hamilton Revelle, who starred here in the great Metro success, "An Enemy to Society," in another tale of intrigue, "The Price of Malice."

Sunday, July 9 TRIANGLE
Frank Mills in "The Moral Fabric." It is a strong attack on "free love" and shows the fate of two persons who scorned the conventions. Also a Keystone comedy "The Village Blacksmith."

Monday, July 10 BLUE BIRD
Hobart Bosworth in "The Yaqui." A photoplay extraordinary depicting a drama of tremendous strife in Old Mexico. Also a Metro Drew comedy.

Tuesday July 11 PARAMOUNT
Mae Murray in Lasky's latest triumph, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs." All-star cast including Tom Forman and Horace B. Carpenter. Also a Paramount Pictograph.

layout is suggested by the reprodueed pages. Where the program runs a full month it will be better to use the Ruffner program in the middle pages. This is a program that takes in the double page as one and lists each attraction in a line, giving the date, the day, the title, the making company and the star. Generally it is set in a six or eight point, according to the space. Here it would have to be a six point, but this is plenty large enough. Where possible, the titles should be set in full face and the stars in italies. This will eat up two pages, but it will be spaee well spent. In general the program is very complete, with a list of musieal selections for the month, a general time tablo that stands good unless changed in the daily advertisement, bits about the players, some taetful allusions to the excellencies of the Orphoum and a very genial greeting editorial. Mr. Matson can write as though he liked to, because he has a message, and he can make that front page editorial the most useful part of the publication if he follows this greeting with house talk in the same eordial and natural strain. But three pages of the twenty-four are given to the outside advertising, front and back inside eover, and page fifteen, and the back eover page is reserved for the house. The initial issue carries this on the baek cover page:

> Presenting Popular Players > and Pleasing Pictures to > Partieular Patrons.

If the printer has any poster type in his eases he might try a two or three-ineh condensed wood "P" to eover all that alliteration and serve as the single initial.

It is not generally known to exhibitors that wood type is sold by the letter and not in fonts. It has to be ordered some time in advance, as a rule, but if a letter is frequently used, the order can be sent in. Most printers have wood type catalogues and all ean get them. The general eharge runs about a cent a line per letter. A six-line (one inch) letter eosts six eents. Wood type will not stand the abuse that metal will, but will last a long time with care, and often it will be found handy to order wood type for special uses. A very small font of metal type in the large sizes is costly, but in wood each letter is sold singly and if you order a one-inch Lyrie you do not have to buy a font costing several dollars, but get it for thirty cents. Cut this out and make a speeial note of it against the time you may have special need. You can get a plain but distinctive wood letter; have your printer set up the name and give you a good blaek proof on white paper and with one of these as eopy have the local electrotyper make a set of bloeks giving this distinetive type in one two and three-column widths, that your house name may always be set in the same face. It will not eost much and it will be worth what it eosts.

Getting baek to Mr. Matson again, we wish he would put us on the permanent mailing list. We think he is going to do things.

Built His Own.

D. S. MeEaehern, of the Franklin, Ensley, Ala., sends in a photograph of his advertising and writes:

> I inelose a photograph of our combination cage and pantomime wagon, interehangeable panels. It is bright red, trimmed with gold and blaek, with yellow running gear. I built the body entire, earved the words "Franklin Theater" by hand, did all the painting and finishing, ineluding the sign work. It is a strong, well-built wagon and will last for years. I use it every day exeept Sunday, advertising all features. Small bells are used to attraet attention. Anyone with a fair knowledge of tools ean build one.

That "anyone" is rather optimistie, but the idea is distinetly good whether you do it yourself or have it done for you. Billboards are good, but here is a perambulating billboard that ean cover the entire town and in a small town or neighborhood the wagon is aetually looked for in the eourse of time. You trim up the wagon to suit the pictures on progrem, but the wagon is always the same if the decorations is different.

And, by the way, what has become of S. A. Arnold, the first man to have a "eage" for a lion pieture? If Mr. Arnold is still in the audienee will be please make himself known?

Going Up.

The Cameraphone, Pitsburgh, after due trial, finds that it cannot make money with their present program and priees. They have put the admission up to fifteen eents in the evening with ten cents for the kiddies and they make announcement of the ehange in this model paragraph:

> After two months' trial with a large attendance we find that it is impossible for us to give the present quality show at 10 cents admission and pay expenses. We know that the Cameraphone audienees enjoy the Wolff Symphony Orchestra Music because we have had a larger summer business than ever before and we believe they would prefer paying the small additional price rather than forego the musie. The pieture business of East Liberty is largely confined to two hours in the evening and at ten eents admission we simply lose money even with crowded houses at night. Our afternoon priees will remain as usual, 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children.

The Cameraphone was for long a ten cent house, but with an argument like that we believe that few will complain. Paste the item up against the time you may desire to use it yourself.

Preparedness.

Watervliet, N. Y., had a preparedness parade the other day and the offieial program carries but one full-page advertisement—that of the Sans Souci, "The Strand of Watervliet." It is a nieely displayed program for the week, but on an issue of this sort, falling into many strange hands, it would have been better had part of the space been given to general talk of the house, perhaps an openiɡ line on preparedness leading into the argument that the Sans Souci is prepared to entertain and telling why its film offerings are entertaining. One novelty is the use of a box at the side of eaeh day; not for the date, but for the name of the brand, the dated day forming a part of the box with the title of the story. This is a new use for the side box and it is good where brands rather than stories are featured.

For a Mailing List.

F. H. Mertens, of the Imperial Airdome and Apollo and Regent theaters, Jersey City, sends in a program for the airdome. The usual cut on the front is replaced for holiday week with an American flag. It is a three by five four-page issue, with the program nicely lined up on the two middle pages. It gives merely the titles, but these are well displayed and the whole thing is neatly done. Mr. Mertens runs a get-acquainted coupon on the back for one issue and in regard to this he writes:

> The coupon on the back was not intended to draw out any extra crowd this week, as we are ordinarily opposed to price cutting, souvenirs or bargains of any kind. Our object was to get a mailing list, and though this is but the second day of the week we already have 150 good names so far. What do you think of the idea?

In substance the coupon reads:

LADIES' SPECIAL

"Get Acquainted" Coupon

This Coupon Will Not Be Accepted From Children

There are many ways of working up a mailing list, but most all of them are based on a coupon of some sort which must be filled in, and this get-acquainted coupon serves the double purpose of getting the names and drawing strangers who can be made into regulars. That they come—even at half price—shows them to be interested. The succeeding programs will do the work.

The Photoplaywright

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Please Note.

PHOTOPLAYWRIGHTS who wish to order a copy of the new edition and who live some distance from New York will save considerable delay if they will address their orders to The Moving Picture World at the Chicago office, Schiller Building, or the Haas Building, Los Angeles, according to their location. Arrangements have been made to ship books from these branch offices the same day the order is received, and the delays incident to the parcels post will be avoided on the shorter haul, while there is also some gain in the time of travel of the order itself.

Keystone Comedy.

Here are two more gems from the Keystone studio where not all the comedies are filmed. One author writes:

> The enclosed plot is yours for only $3. Trusting that you will accept same for I wish to get it off my hands.

Another sends under separate cover a comedy and explains:

> I have the writing of the comedy divided into scenes. I figure that the camera will remain in one position throughout the scene, and this will be easier for the director. Each phrase that has quotation marks around it signifies that this remark shall be shown on the screen. For example, in scene six Fatty says, "Can you beat it?" These add humor to the comedy and help the audience to catch the spirit of the adventure.

Quite unnecessarily the author adds that he knows nothing of writing plays but has merely worked along his own lines—yet he expects to make a sale.

Contests.

A correspondent sends us a copy of a letter sent to the conductors of a script contest. In the opening paragraph he announces that he has a weakness for contests, wherefore he looked up the terms of the contest in question. Later he says:

> Suppose I do hit upon an original idea which is valuable. I have a slim chance of winning one of the larger prizes and you reserve the right to purchase at the market rate, which would appear to be less than ten dollars.

The writer seems to supply his own answer. If he can write really good stuff he is foolish to enter a contest where any script not winning a prizo may be purchased at the company's valuation. He has a right to stay out of the contest, but not the right to require the contest to be remade to suit his ideas of what a contest should be. Contests are generally run to get advertising or to get good scripts at a fair average price. They are seldom purely charitable schemes, much as that fact may surprise the correspondent.

All of this has been repeatedly told in this department. Why not make a permanent note of it.

Form.

Threo letters this week ask minutely about the form in which plays should be written, and a fourth inquirer sends in a new style which she is willing to adopt if it is a newer stylc than the form in which she learned to write.

Thore is no such thing as an exact aud definite form. Any form is good provided that it is clear and simple. In the Third Edition of Tcchnique of the Photoplay there are given photographic reproductions of several stylcs of form used by well-known writers and the student is advised to study theso and select that which suits him best if he does not liko the form used by the author. As a general thing numbers should bo in the margin and not between scenes, merely because they aro easier to locate and check up, but no editor is going to turn down a script becauso Roman instead of Arabic numerals are used or because sub-title is preferred to leader or the reverse. Some people write the so-called "backhand," and others practice the upright or slant writing. It does not follow that any in the threo classes are poor writers because the inclination of their letters differs from the other forms. All threo are proper so that the writing is elear. It is the same way with photoplay form. Anything is good that will enable you to tell your story and that form is best that enablcs you to present it most clearly. If you have mastered a certain style, it is absurd to lose your advantage in learning another style. Stick to that which you have. Give your time and your thought and your energy to the idea. That is what you have to offer. The form is merely the wrapper of the package and should be good form for the same reason that you pay more for an air tight box of soda crackers than you do for the bulk article.

A Poor Script.

Somewhat unusual is the request for a "very poor" script. This comes from a student who thinks that by comparing her action with the deficient scenes she can better her own work. We scarcely think so, but even were it possible to obtain poor scripts, there would be required so many styles to show all errors that the collection would become too great. If ever she gets access to any editorial office she can see them in infinite variety, btu perhaps a study of dont's may help others.

Perhaps the simplest form of a bad script is that in which the author mistakenly thinks that paragraphing means scenes. He writes something after this fashion.

> Jim, a poor but honest young man, loves a beautiful girl named Marie, whose parents are very wealthy and do not want him to marry her on that account, so they decide to get married anyway.
> One day she met him in the park and they went to a minister, who married them; then he took her home to his mother and they all started to live together.
> But Marie was not used to living with a poor family and she got very tired of sweeping the floors and riding on street cars and seeing her friends go by in automobiles, so one day she meets Henry, a rich man she used to love.
> Henry urges her to fly with him, and she does.

This sort of thing is generally sent in with the remark that it is properly divided into scenes, though generally that type of author writes it "devided."

Another form is too casual. It runs:

1—Bill is happy at home. His mother loves him very much.
2—One day he left home for the city.
3—He took the train.
4—He arrived in the city.
5—He went up the street.

This runs on and on. The suggestion for the action is there, but the specific action is lacking. This is more helpful than the other style, but it is too crude. An editor wants to see more than this, and he wants the action to have life. Sometimes he gets too much, as when an author says:

> 14—Room—This is a drawing room with lots of pictures on the wall and a piano and a center table with some chairs and an arm chair. There is a carpet on the floor and on this a fur rug. Billie, a young girl about seventeen years old, is seen sitting in one of the chairs when this scene commences. She is the same girl that we saw a picture of in Jack's room when he was there. She starts up as though she heard the door bell ring. Then she smiles and begins to powder her nose. Then her mother comes in and tells her Jack is here. She stands up and puts the powder rag away. Then Jack comes in and goes over to Billie and shakes hands. Then the mother smiles to show she approves of Jack and goes back to the kitchen. Then Jack looks around to make sure she is gone. Then he kisses her. Then Jack and Billie sit down and begin to talk.

That is all there is of that scene, and it is plenty. Compare that action with this:

> 14—Room—Billie on—hears bell ring—furtively powders her nose. Mother ushers Jack in—he greets her—Mother beams approval and exits—Jack looks after her—kisses Billie—they sit and chat.

This gives the director all he needs and suggests the full business of the scene. Thinking it over, it would seem that it is better to study good action than to laugh at poorly prepared stuff, but please remember that not all model scripts are good action.

Get the Idea.

When you sit down to your machine to write a story just remember that you are uudertaking to entertain several million people. You would not go before an audience of fifty with an illy prepared speech. Why dash off your message to millions?

Projection Department

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 153.

What would you regard as an extreme practical distance from screen to back row of seats? Why?

Must Be Recoated.

Allen Jenkins, Roanoke, Va., asks:

> Is it possible to repaint (bronze) a gold fibre screen? If so, will you advise what method is pursued for a screen 9½ x 12½ feet. I have a gold fibre screen which is wiped and dusted each week, but seems dull. Use great care in cleaning it. The texture of the screen is in good condition and I would like to dispose of it if the surface can be put in good shape.

No, I would not advise you to attempt to refinish the screen surface. Presumably it is guaranteed for five years, and if it is not standing up it is up to the manufacturers to make that surface good. If they refuse to do it, then the only thing you can do is to send it to the manufacturers and pay them for recoating it. If you try it yourself I don't think the result will prove satisfactory.

Not a Nickel for Repairs.

New Mexico sends check for Handbook and question booklets and says:

> We are using a Simplex machine, which has given constant service for a year, during which time we have not expended one nickel for repairs, and on fairly good film it is noiseless. The mechanism is perfect. I am, however, unable to get a light that suits me, and have had the matter up with manufacturers of optical equipment, who have failed thus far to solve the problem to my satisfaction, therefore I am appealing to you. I am at present using a Gundlach-Manhattan projection lens of 4 inch E. F. Have a 3½-inch lens with which I have never been able to get a picture in focus all over. If the middle is sharp the edges are out, and vice versa. I have, however, discarded the shorter focal length lenses and am now out of the notion of using them. My present trouble is a little blue in the lower right-hand corner of the picture. With the condensers set as they are at present I can entirely remove it by pinching the spot down so that it merely touches the corners of the aperture plate, but this causes the corners of the picture to grow dark. I have had several sets of condensers, of which the following have proven best. A meniscus lens with the back surface having a curvature of one diopter, or 39.39 inches, and the front surface having a curvature of 6¾ diopters, a focal length of 5.8 inches. Subtracting the minus from the plus, we get 5¾ diopters as the focus, or 6.8 inches. With this lens I use a bi-convex in front, each side of which is 2¾ diopters, or 14.13 inches, making a total focal length of 5½ diopters, or 7.15 inches. I use a Simplex aperture shield, and with this equipment in place, the cone on the Type O lamphouse is in contact with the shield. The arc also burns within 3 inches of the meniscus lens. I get a great deal of light with this arrangement, but the little blue which I cannot eliminate. I have the following lenses which I have tried and found to be inferior. One bi-convex of 3 diopters each side, or 6½ inch focus; one plano 4¾ diopters, or 8.25 inches; one plano 5 diopters, or 7.85 inches. I have tried these in every known combination, and have been unable to eliminate the little speck of blue. We use a Hallberg motor generator and have a model booth.

As to the blue spot, have you tried moving your lamphouse further back? I think very likely that is your trouble, though why the spot should be in the lower right-hand corner instead of the center I really cannot say, unless your lens system is out of line, see Pages 113 to 146 of Handbook. Suppose you try moving the lamphouse and report results. If you cannot get it any further back, make it loose and set it back temporarily. You must understand, my brother, that the distance of the lamphouse from the aperture cuts a big figure. See Plate 4, Figure 45, Page 116, of your Handbook. Incidentally, I would suggest to operators that they draw out Figure 45 to full life size, on the wall of the operating room, if space can be found. Then by drawing a line parallel to the lower horizontal rule at the top edges of the condenser lens, they can use a straight edge and instantly find out the precise diameter of the light ray at any distance back of the aperture with the condenser lens in any given position.

For the information of the great mass of operators, I would say that diopter is a term opticians use when they speak of lens curvatures. I don't understand the application of the diopter very well myself, though maybe you can dope its meaning out from the figures given.

At Last.

At last the editor of this department has finally made up his mind as to precisely what is wanted, and what is practical to obtain, or very nearly obtain, in the way of a lens system for the projector. It sums up as follows: First: A condenser of standard E.F., preferably a meniscus-bi-convex, which will produce a spot 1½ inches in diameter, with the arc 3½ inches from the rear lens, and a distance of, say, 16 inches from the face of the front condenser to the film, with an aperture lens, which will parallel the light ray beyond the aperture. I have finally come to the conclusion that all this is practical, and have sat down carefully right square in the middle of the adoption of this particular thing, and it's going to take some mighty heavy artillery to budge me one iota from that position, the only disturbing element being the necessarily variable crater diameter.

Heretofore I have carefully refrained from expressing any fixed opinion as to what ought to be done, but have gradually been gathering together a mass of data on many things in connection with this matter, until the data thus secured has become sufficiently positive on all points to convince me that the scheme is at least approximately practical.

With this sort of arrangement only one focal length of condensers would be used; lamphouse would be placed a certain set distance from the aperture; the arc would be the minimum distance from the lens (this is the only point open to question. Some might advocate less than 3½ inches, but I don't believe it is practical under all conditions) and we would be enabled to use objectives of smaller diameter, thus bringing about the ideal condition from any and every point of view. The only added light loss, or cost, would be the cost of installation of the third lens and the small amount of energy absorbed by and reflected by it.

And there you are. I have pitched my tent, thrown up fortifications, trained machine guns, and am prepared to defend my position. Now get out your hammers, and get busy, remembering only that I am a little uncertain as to what we can do with the crater-diameter element.

McCook, Nebraska.

F. C. Smith, McCook, Neb., says:

> Am sending you a little device of my own manufacture; also want to ask a question or two. Have been operating for eight years, and would like to become a member of the I. A., joining some local near here. Omaha, however, seems to think I am out of their territory, and Denver refers me to some one in San Francisco, therefore, you see, I am up a tree. Maybe you can straighten me out. The little device enclosed is a guide roller for the top of the Power's Six A gate. The ones furnished with the machine do not stand up very well, so I got busy and made these; also a pair of grey cast iron. Have used one pair of each on my machines for more than two years, and they are as true and nice as the day I put them on. Your light ray dope was certainly very fine. Am also sending a couple of slides of my own make. If anyone cares to know how to make slides, I will be glad to start them right. The slides I have made are as easy as making a Velox Print.

I don't like to call you a pervaricator, Brother Smith, but I am darned if I ever found the making of such excellent slides as you send to be "easy," though, perhaps, it is due to my ignorance; in fact, I presume it is. The gate roller is very well made indeed. It consists of a copper supporting holder, upon which is mounted a gate idler somewhat differently made from the regular Power's. Instead of the shaft extending through the supporting ears, two set screws go through and engage a corresponding indentation in the end of the shaft proper. This shaft carries two rollers made of what seems to be red insulating used in electrical work—fibre board. These are separated by a hollow copper shaft, and there is the usual steel spring, with a collar and set screw, at one end.

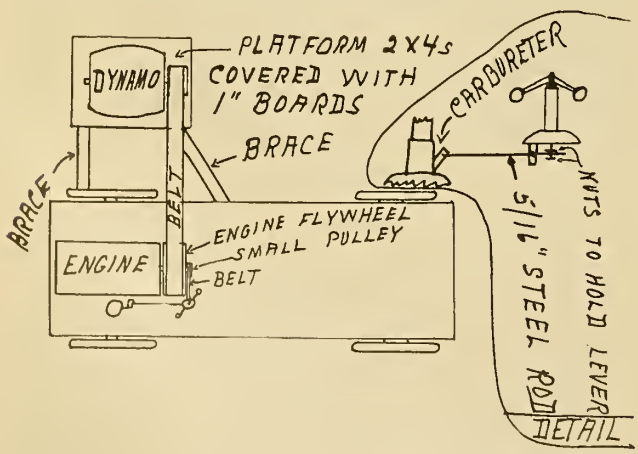
As to the territory you are in, I would suggest, Brother Smith, that you write the I. A. headquarters about that, addressing The International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes, 107 West 46th St., New York City, and mark the letter for the attention of Mr. Higgins or Mr. Leomaster.



Automobile Outfit.

R. L. Kittel, Hartville, Mo., writes:

I will now give the information about my auto electric light plant. Note you have had nothing like it in the department, hence it may benefit some of your readers. I use an Overland car, the engine fly wheel of which is used as a belt wheel. I set my dynamo beside the auto, about 7 feet from it, on a frame of 2 x 4 timbers floored with inch boards, which holds the dynamo in perfect line. Have used the outfit for six months, and have had no trouble with it, except one five minute stop to tighten the belt. No stop caused from engine heating, or anything like the trouble the usual plants give. The engine is a 30 h. p., but I have it speeded down to about 10 h. p., or less, so it runs with ease. I use the governor from a 10 h. p. steam engine. It rests on floor of auto just in front of the front seat. It is connected to the butterfly valve of the carburetor, and regulates the speed perfectly. I use a light spring on the lever connecting same, it being about 3 feet long. Enclosed find explanatory sketch of top view of whole outfit. The light spring on lever is only to take out slack of lever workings. The lever is fastened on lower end of governor stem by two nuts, a hole being punched in end of lever to receive same, or hole could be drilled in butterfly lever. I made a wood block and shoved in shaft-hole of fly-wheel to carry a belt pulley for the governor. This pulley must be small, its diameter being according to size of governor. A smaller governor may be better, as I had to make the weights of the governor smaller and lighter to give more action. The main shaft of auto is, of course, disconnected, so that the gearing is not running. This saves the wearing of the gears. It runs very smoothly. I cut a hole in side of auto to run top belt through, and removed the dust pan to make room for lower belt. The outfit can be arranged so as to make a quick change for running auto on road again, but I have not moved it as yet, so have not perfected the quick change, though I will this summer. Am preparing to rig up another outfit like this, but will use Buick, No. 1 Model, 2 cylinder, chain drive, and on this the dynamo will set under the back seat. This will make the best quick change outfit, as the only alteration necessary will be to disconnect the chain and put on the belt for the road, and vice versa. The Overland auto is an old model of the planetary transmission type.

Sorry I kept you waiting so long, but I wanted to give the outfit a thorough test first, and then the difficulty was to explain it fully on paper. My children are now successfully operating the outfit at Weaubleau, Mo., without me. I am running a 6 h. p. plant here at Hartville, consisting of a 2 cycle Caille engine and 3 K. W. 110 volt Westinghouse dynamo., and it's a dandy outfit, too, but of this I will have to write in the next letter, if you think it of any benefit.

Now I come with a question. Yesterday started the show with plenty of carbon to finish, and after running one film, the lower carbon was too short to finish, and I let the upper carbon down long enough to complete the show. The polarity seemed to have changed and burned the lower carbon too fast instead of the upper one. The only thing I noticed different was the dynamo being somewhat wet, but I did not think it would change the polarity. When I set the upper carbon down, the polarity became correct again and the upper carbon burned instead of the lower one. There is no hurry for the answer, as it gives sufficient light to run show if it should occur again.

Glad to have your description, Friend Kittel, and am sorry its publication was so long delayed. For using auto power for permanent location the plan looks all right, and your governor scheme certainly is ingenious and worthy of study by those using automobile power for such purposes. I don't quite understand what you mean by "speeding down to ten horse power." You may mean that you so set your governor that the engine develops only ten horse power, but is that the best way to do it? Maybe so, because it probably would eliminate considerable friction and heating. As to what caused the effect you name, I don't know. Certainly, if you have correctly set the matter forth, it could not be change of polarity, because I think that could not possibly happen with the generator running and generating current. Can anyone offer a solution of this matter?

Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The editor is in receipt of an invitation to attend the first meeting and become a charter member of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. The call for this meeting is sent out by C. Francis Jenkins. The meeting was to be in the Oak Room, Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., July 24th, 25th, and 26th. The call reads as follows:

Every industry has its society of engineers, an association of men who are responsible for the form of structure of the mechanisms used in their trade, and it is an axiom that their meetings are productible of inestimable good to the whole industry. The time is ripe for the establishment of a society of Motion Picture Engineers, as is evidenced by the lack of fixed standards in the industry, the direct cause of the loss of more than a hundred million dollars last year alone. The society will stand in practically the same relation to the motion picture industry that the Society of Automobile Engineers does to the automobile business, or the Society of Electrical Engineers does to the electrical trade, etc., and whose respective recommendations are so carefully considered before promulgation that they are now universally accepted as authoritative. The organization of the Society of Automobile Engineers brought order out of chaos in the automobile trade, and it is reasonable to suppose that the establishment of fixed standards in motion picture mechanisms will do as much for the motion picture industry. Will you kindly advise if the organization of a Society of Motion Picture Engineers has your approval, and whether we may expect you at the organization meeting.

I deeply regret that I was not able to attend this meeting as I had planned a trip up through Montreal, and Quebec to Point Gaspe, returning via Nova Scotia, via the Go-devil route, of course, with my daughter on the chicken roost.

There certainly ought to be some such organization, though whether it can best be handled in this way, or through a committee of the proposed-to-be re-organized Board of Trade is open to question. Personally, I am inclined to believe the society offers the better means. As Brother Jenkins sets forth, the lack of fixed standards is the direct cause of the loss of a tremendous sum of money each year. Whether it will reach $100,000,000 or not I cannot say, but there is reason to suppose the figures are within the facts.

To have the proper moral effect it will be necessary that the society be made up of representatives of all classes of the industry, particularly including all manufacturers of apparatus.

If you ask me what is it that needs standardizing, my reply would be to ask what does not need it? But the securing of the adoption of a standard is very muchly something else again. However, as Brother Jenkins has pointed out, the Society of Electrical Engineers and the Society of Automobile Engineers brought order out of chaos and forced the adoption of standards which have saved incalculably large sums of money, besides giving to the purchaser a far, far better machine and greatly improved service. What has been done in those industries surely can be done in the motion picture industry, therefore this department extends to the proposed Society of Motion Picture Engineers, or any other body which bids fair to accomplish the desired result, the right hand of welcome.

Shutter Wrong.

George Homer, Benson, Minn., writes:

The following may sound very easy to you but is quite difficult and important to me. I have travel ghost which I have been trying very hard to eliminate. It seems to me my machine must be tight somewhere, though I cannot find out at what point. Have a brand new Power's Six B, which has only been used for little more than a month. When framing rod is up the streaks are down, and when the framing rod is down it is just the opposite. It has a specially made lens.

Apparently your trouble lies in the fact that your shutter blade is too narrow, or you have the shutter set at the wrong distance from the lens—or both. Anyhow it is practically certain that the shutter blade is too narrow for the light ray at the point where the shutter is set. Presuming that you have a copy of the third edition of the Handbook, as you certainly ought to have, I would refer you to Figure 63a, page 145, and the text matter on page 146. I would also suggest that you cut the light ray in front of the objective lens with a piece of metal or cardboard at different distances from the lens. Unless you have a very short focal length lens you will find the point where you don't see the edge of the card moving across the screen at all, but the screen just simply gets dark all over at once, or two shadows come together like the blades of a pair of shears. If you do find this point, that is where your shutter should be set, or as near that point as you are able to get it, and very likely if you can reach this point with the shutter you will find that the travel ghost will disappear. It is possible, however, that due to mechanical limitations of the machine, you will be unable to set your shutter at this point, in which case you will have to use a wider main shutter blade. If the machine is tight and there is a grind it will probably be found to be in the toggle gear, in which case I would recommend you to Instruction No. 22, page 499 of the Handbook; also Instruction No. 23, same page.

Nitrogen Lamps for Projection.

J. M. London, Travis Theator Company, Traverse City, Michigan, says:

> Can you give us any information with regard to the use of nitrogen lamps instead of the electric arc for the projection of pictures? We are at present using A. C. and getting good results, but can get D. C. from the same company. They don't care to go to the expense of running the line if there is a fair prospect of the nitrogen lamps replacing the arc in the course of six months or so.

No, I don't think there is any chance at all of the nitrogen lamp replacing the electric arc for the projection of pictures, at least for a good while to come. This may be qualified, however, by the statement that the nitrogen lamp may be found commercially practicable for use in small towns where a brilliant illumination is not required, and where economy in current consumption is absolutely imperative. Up-to-date my observation of the nitrogen lamp for projection has been that it takes practically as much skill to operate it as it does to operate the electric arc, and the result is not anywhere near equal, though the current consumption is only 600 watts. Of course no one can say what may develop, but I don't believe your light company need worry about the nitrogen lamp for quite some considerable time.

He Comes Again.

S. M. Crocker, Louisburg, N. C., says:

> Here I come again for help. Am using two Powers' Six A's, with a 102 foot throw, and a 12 foot picture; 15½ inches from aperture to front condenser, and have a ghost in the center of the picture. Have a 6½ and 7½ inch condenser combination, with the 7½ next the arc. Am using 60 amperes through a Fort Wayne. Would the meniscus-bi-convex lens help me? If so, would you tell me what size to get? Have been using Speer carbons for some time, and they are excellent. I have been on the job, "behind the gun" for seven years, and the Speer is the best yet. Wish we could have the pleasure of listening to your talks on projection, as I know we would all be benefited. If you ever come down this way, please don't forget the good, old North State. As a whole, we have pretty good projection around here, though there is still room for improvement. In closing I will extend my best wishes to yourself and the department.

In one of the coming issues you will find the itinerary of the southern and western trip I will make next winter; also you will note that towns off the regular route will be able to secure the lecture on certain terms, though that, of course, would not apply to a place where it would only be possible to get half a dozen or so managers and operators together.

As to your ghost, why, your condenser is too close to the mechanism. I would refer you to Table 1, Page 141 of the Handbook, copy of which I presume you have, or if you haven't, you ought to have. Supposing your lens to be 1⅝ inch in diameter and the back focus 3½ inches. Looking down the left-hand column, we find 1⅝, and then move out to the right until we come to 3.53, which is very close to 3½ inches. Looking up at the top we see there should be 21 inches between the apex of the front condenser and the aperture with two 7½ inch condensers. I don't, of course, know the diameter of your objective, but it is a pretty safe bet you ought to have two 7½ inch condensers with a considerable distance between the apex of the front condenser and the aperture. That is all I can tell you until I know the back focus at which your objective works and its exact diameter.

Take-Up Tension.

I would like to caution operators with regard to the take-up tension of some of the new model projectors. Take the Powers Six for example: Its take-up tension arrangement is a great improvement over the old style, but operators should be very careful not to set the tension too tight, because with the large-diameter friction wheel, and the consequent large friction service, if you jam the spring up tight there will most likely be serious injury done to the film; the sprocket holes may even be cracked at their corners. The same thing applies to some other new types of take-up tension, and is a matter which is of considerable importance. When adjusted right the take-ups work very good indeed, supplying very satisfactory tension, but like all other things, they are susceptible of abuse. Watch your take-up tension, no matter what type of take-up you have, but this is particularly true of the newer ones.

New Film Mender.

M. H. Granholt, Long Beach, Cal., is the inventor of a film splicing device that he is placing on the market, working model of which he has sent for our inspection.

This little device is simple, comparatively inexpensive, and will aid very greatly in the making of a really good splice, in that it compels the proper matching of the sprocket holes, and supplies even and ample pressure to the splice. It also supplies a perfectly clean cut in trimming the film. The device is about 12 inches long by 3 inches wide, the mechanism being mounted on a hard wood board. It should, I think, be a very acceptable, low-priced addition to the operating room equipment.

Worth Twice Its Price.

Raymond Brown, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> Received copy of Handbook a few days ago; also both the first and second set of questions, and just cannot help telling you how much I appreciate them. The Handbook is a marvel. It is worth twice its price. I am a constant reader of the department, and find it is the best thing going. Attached find a sketch which is both illustrative and self-explanatory. It ought to be placed above every rewind table as a future warning. I hope the drawing will prove of benefit.

Worth Twice Its Price.

This cartoon is excellent, Brother Brown, but I would like to warn both yourself and Friend Martin that in making drawings for reproduction black ink only should be used, because, while red reproduces black, still some of the colors sent in by Martin won't reproduce at all. Friend Brown also sends an answer to Question 145, which will be considered in due time. We are, of course, glad to know that you are pleased with the Handbook and the department.

Organizer Wanted.

Indiana, writes:

> We enjoy the projection department here very much indeed. Would like to ask what would be the chance to get an organizer of the I. A. T. S. E. in this locality. There is a local here, but that is about all you can say. Not a man in it is working, and there are seven picture houses here. Two of them were, until recently, employing union men, but not now. The men don't seem to realize that it is to their interest to work for the interest of the manager. Now how could the operators of this city get together and have a real union? If you are ever over in this neighborhood just let us know, and we will try to show you a good time.

Well, Indiana, it is a pretty hard question you are asking. I am, however, referring your case to the I. A. T. S. E., though it is hard to say what action they will take, and I would myself have to know more about the situation in order to comment on it intelligently. Operators who make no effort to study their business and deliver results on the screen are not entitled to much consideration, no matter whether they are union or non-union men. As I have told you time and again, I believe firmly in organization and good salaries, but I believe just as firmly that the operator should concentrate his every effort in putting the best possible picture on the screen. That is about all I could say as to your rather peculiar situation at this time.

Very Foolish.

Recently a Seats-free-if-you-buy-a-drink-Coney-Island-Saloon-Hotel-show had a film fire. By eye witnesses I was told that the observation ports were not closed at all, and that the smoke poured out in huge volumes. Later I went down, visited the operating room and asked the operator whether the fire shutters were not closed during the fire, to which he replied: 'They were closed. I dropped them myself." One rubber at that room was enough to show that the gentleman was, in all human probability, taking decided liberties with the truth. One lens port shutter and one observation port shutter were held up by a heavy cord, without any fuses at all, and this cord passed around a metal stud in the ceiling, so I doubt if it could have been dropped at all without cutting the cord. The other observation port shutter was just plainly and frankly tied up with a piece of heavy cord running from the top of the shutter to, as I remember it, a nail driven into the wall about 2 inches from the top of the shutter.

Now, I well know that in some of these places where the motion picture is prostituted to the selling of intoxicating liquors, projection is a farce. The machine, at the time I was there, was running probably 40 feet of film a minute. The light was very weak, and the picture on the screen could only be called such by courtesy. There was no pretence of projection, and it is, as the operator in this case said, very discouraging to the operator to be compelled to work under such conditions. However, I take the position that even under such utterly wretched projection conditions as this, it is very foolish for the operator not to at least do right those things which he can do right. Of course, there could be but little danger of panic in a place of that kind, which is practically entirely open on two sides, but nevertheless the tying up of shutters in direct violation of law is bad practice, and certainly does not speak well for the operator in charge, no matter under what conditions he may be working.

Quite True.

I have a card upon which appears the following:

"It takes less time to do a thing right than it does to explain why you did it wrong."

There was never a statement made which bore a stronger imprint of truth than does the foregoing, and it may very well be applied to the operating room. In how many thousands and thousands of instances every day operators do a thing the wrong way because the wrong way is a little easier, failing to realize the fact that it is the doing of these myriad of little things wrong which marks him indelibly as being in the class of workmen we call mediocre. Look about you, my brothers! Do you really and honestly believe that the men who get to the top by a process of promotion get there through pull? Do you believe, for instance, that the presidents, general managers, managers and superintendents of our great mercantile institutions, most of whom have risen from the lowest ranks in the organization, and who now draw large salaries, got their positions and held them through "pull"? Well, if you do, my brother, you don't know much about these things. True, there are a comparatively small percentage of men who reach high positions through extraordinary opportunity, but the man who rose from the ranks by the process of promotion rose because he applied himself to his daily tasks, did things in the very best possible way he knew how to do them, and studied both the practical and the technical end of the business. The "other fellow" who entered at the same time and on equal basis with the superintendent, and who has risen no higher than perhaps a clerkship, but who sits back and growls and yowls, explaining to all and sundry how the superintendent got his promotion through "pull," is still a clerk because he had to explain too often why he did a thing wrong when the doing of it right would not only have taken perhaps less time than to explain things, but also would have helped land him in the superintendent class.

Operators are now placed in charge of valuable equipment, and photoplays which cost huge sums of money. They are called upon to reproduce the work of the finest artists in the world, yet many of them can see nothing in their profession except the mere turning of a crank, the patching of a film, and the striking of an arc. They sneer at study; they do things wrong, and if at last the wrong is detected, try to explain something which cannot be explained except through and by the one word "lazy." I have always said, and I still do say the profession of operating is slowly but surely rising to a higher plane, both in workmanship and remuneration. It would, however, rise very much more swiftly if the great body of operators would acquire a proper respect for their own profession and do things right, not sometimes but all the time—not only the big things but the little things—because, after all, it is the great myriad of little things that form the big things of life.

The Reason for the Rule.

Lowell, Mass., writes:

There were six moving picture theaters in this city until one, the Voyons, was forced to close by the local union. Everyone felt sorry for these people. It appears that two men from Boston bought the house, one a Mr. Hill, a member of the I. A. T. S. E. of Boston, undertook to do the operating. I have visited this theater quite often, and Mr. Hill was certainly delivering the goods on the screen. He always had a well illuminated, flickerless picture. The union then took a hand and said that an operator from the Lowell local, and not the one from Boston must be employed. Mr. Hill offered to join the local, but was refused because he was an owner. There was considerable trouble, and the house finally closed.

This action on the part of the union is one which probably causes more ill-feeling than any other one thing an organization is called upon to do. Now I am not going to discuss the right or the wrong of the action, but I am going to tell you the point of view of the local. The Lowell local, or any other local, has the right to refuse members, with or without reason, or to refuse transfer cards of members belonging to other locals. The point lies right here: the local holds that its members, being residents of the city and dependent upon motion picture operating for their living, have the first right to any positions there may be in that city. It certainly does not seem right for a man, for instance, from Jonesville to come into Brownville and take a job when there are Brownville operators idle, or when his coming displaces a Brownville man, who will perhaps have to break up his home and go elsewhere to seek employment. The keeping of local work for local men is a proposition I agree with, but with the proviso that home men be COMPETENT OPERATORS, who not only are CAPABLE of delivering the goods, but DO deliver them, so far as the limitations of equipment will permit. I am moved to publish the foregoing letter, and set this matter forth, by the many letters of protest which have reached me on this particular matter during the past year. The average man who does not stop to study the whole proposition very naturally jumps to the conclusion that such a rule as this is arbitrary, unjust and utterly impossible. As a matter of fact, however, it is nothing of the kind, and I thoroughly agree that so long as there are COMPETENT operators in Lowell, who can and will produce equally as good work as the Boston man, they are entitled to the job. For an owner to operate his own machine in a town like Lowell where there are several theaters, sets up a condition which tends to be unfair to the other shows, since in such a case he occupies the dual position of an operator and an owner, and has an advantage over his brother exhibitor equal to the saving he effects through running his own machine. This, however, does not apply to very small towns where there is only patronage sufficient to support one theater.

Light Trouble.

M. J. Rother, Hastings, Minn., says:

Am using a Power's Five, most of the time with calcium light. Have a Gundlach lens with a 6½ rear and 4½ condenser in front. The objective is 5 inches E. F. My trouble is as follows: The left side of the picture seems to be foggy when the balance of the picture is sharp and distinct, and when I focus to make the left side clear, the balance gets slightly foggy, and the left side seems to be about the same. When I have no film in the machine the screen seems to have a dark shadow, starting on the left side and extending about one-third of the distance across the screen from top to bottom. This occurs or any throw or any size picture. Can you help me?

If you have stated the matter correctly, it seems fairly clear that you have interference with the light somewhere. I would recommend that you first carefully line up your lens system, as per Figure 41, Page 112, third edition of the Handbook, copy of which you should by all means have, particularly in view of the fact that there is a very complete article on "Projection by Limelight" at the end of the book. First, however, examine and see that the gate, or tension springs are not setting too far over and interfering with the light. The aperture in the gate and the opening in the aperture plate should be square with each other, and the tension spring should not extend over the opening in the aperture plate. I think you will find the seat of your trouble in one of these two things, or possibly a combination of both, though it is also possible that one of the lens combinations of your objective is not setting square in the barrel, and I would suggest that you borrow another objective first and try it out. If the result is any better with the other lens, then you can look for at least a part of your trouble in your objective.

Inefficient Examination.

Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla., writes:

At last the examination of operators we have waited so long for has been pulled off. There were sixteen questions asked and they were all on fire risk. As a result, we had an argument. One of the questions asked was: "Is there any possibility of the film catching fire while in process of rewinding?" Some answered yes, and others no. Will you please give us an answer to this question. Can a film be set on fire, while rewinding at considerable speed, by holding the film reel still, thus sliding the film? Some think it can.

No, Tampa, it would, I think, be utterly impossible to set a film on fire that way. I have never heard of such a thing being done. The slippage is not sufficient to generate enough heat to fire the celluloid. There is, however, the possibility of a film being set on fire in rewinding. This may occur in a great many different ways. For instance, possibly the operator has dropped a hot carbon butt on the floor, something happens to the rewinder and some film drops down or is run off on the floor—improbable but not impossible—and strikes that hot carbon butt. It is also possible the operator may be indulging in a quiet little smoke and a spark from the tobacco comes into contact with the film; but that is not, I think, what you want. So far as setting the film on fire through and by the actual process of rewinding I should say no; such a thing would be beyond the range of probability, and mighty near beyond the range of possibility as well.

Evidently your examiners don't realize that knowledge of the optical system of the projector is fully as important as knowledge pertaining to fire risk; also it is rank nonsense to undertake an examination by means of a set series of questions. Such an examination raises in the mind the question as to the competency of the examiner himself. The examiner who is really competent will gauge his next question according to the answer given to the last one.

Cinematography in Warm Climates.

When the motion picture protographer goes from the temperate zone to the tropics he will find himself confronted with new problems, which result through the unhealthy climate, the uncertain light values, and the intense heat.

A cinematographer made a trip to the Canal Zone during the rainy season. When he removed the film from the cans it was soft, and within an hour of placing it in the box of the camera it was as wet as wet could be, while the following morning it was completely covered with mildew.

Moisture not only deteriorates the speed of film in warm climates, but soon destroys the latent image if not developed immediately.

How may this be avoided? One cinematographer, working in the heart of Africa, deemed it advisable to carry the film stock in a cooling case, built along the lines of the vacuum flask, and guarded against the exterior becoming hot by covering same with cool banana leaves. His film chest was made like a metal refrigerator of double walls of sheet zinc with layers of heat insulating felt packed between the walls.

Before setting out on your journey, store the film in air-tight cans and place adhesive plaster all round the edges of the lids.

If you take my advice you will not burden yourself with more film than you actually need, as it deteriorates rapidly. If you can arrange to have small consignments despatched as required, so much the better.

Once you have arrived at your destination, select a dry and cool place for the film boxes, which are kept in a better condition if placed in an ash can or some other air-tight receptacle, not overlooking to include a dish of fused calcium chloride.

Calcium chloride (fused) has a strong affinity for moisture and takes it up rapidly from moist air. It absorbs it so rapidly that it will soon dissolve in the moisture it takes up, making a corrosive liquid very disastrous to metal. It should be surrounded with some absorbent material to prevent its spreading unless it is closely watched.

Re-load the camera only just before you plan to "shoot."

You may experience considerable difficulty in turning the crank, for the heat is apt to heat the brass and make it too hot to be operated with the bare hands. Protect the camera from the direct sun as much as possible.

The developing is best done on the spot, with as little delay as possible.

A camera man working in the Sudan discovered that sunrise was the ideal time for developing, since the air is not too warm, and the water, which has been standing in canvas buckets since the heat of the previous day, is nice and cool.

This operator utilized an oblong-built straw hut, 17 feet by 11 feet, for his dark-room. The inner covering, to keep out the light, was a red and black Turkey cloth, slightly smaller in size. No ventilation was provided, although there were openings both at the top and the end. These were to accommodate the wooden frames; over which were placed ruby glass, ground-glass, and thin wire netting. He made his own developing frame out of native timber, shaped like a 3 foot 6 inch drum, and painted with paraffin wax. He also needed two troughs, one for the developer and the other for hypo, and made these of wood, joining the sections together with pitch. He allowed for a space of an inch between the film and the trough interior when at work. Each trough had two wings, so that the developer and hypo would be caught on falling from the film and be conveyed back into the trough well. To hold the axle carrying the drum he equipped both of the troughs with slotted side arms.

The developing materials used were Burroughs, Wellcome & Co. "tabloid" pyro soda and a little bromide of potassium. He used eight cartons to develop two hundred feet of film, and dissolved them in a bucket half filled with water.

Water is often hard to get and of poor quality. I have used river water that looked like coffee by stirring an ounce of alum in a barrel of it and allowing it to settle over night, using the clear water at the top by decanting it off with a short length of hose. Many times the residual sludge in the bottom would be four inches deep. At a pinch sea water may be used for washing if a final rinse of about five minutes be given in fresh water.

For the worker on a small scale, pin racks and trays that nest compactly are probably best on account of ease of transportation.

One man showed me a neat outfit he had made for himself that consisted of skeleton drums which came apart for packing with nesting metal troughs, nickel plated inside.

The entire outfit of a dozen 100-foot drums and three troughs and a lot of black felt which he used for extemporizing dark rooms from hotel rooms and native huts packed into a fair sized trunk!

He dried his films on the same drum on which they were developed, a thing which is difficult to do satisfactorily on pin frames.

The Correspondence Club.

The following names have been sent in by readers of the column who want to correspond with others who are interested in cinematography. It would probably be of greater value to the members of the club if each would specify just what subject interests him most.

There are a number of the readers of this department who are doing work along special lines and a letter chum who is interested in the same subject is a great source of inspiration.

Effect of Humidity on Photographic Films.

After a plate has been exposed in a telescope for some time, it gradually loses some of its sensitiveness. This action is the subject of a communication to the Astro Physical Journal, in which the cause of decrease of sensitiveness is laid to the charge of humidity. Experiments were made to determine the effect of varied degrees of humidity on the sensitiveness and developing factor of a Seed 23 to a Seed 30 plate. Experimenting within the range of 0.5 to 85 per cent. of humidity and allowing the emulsion film to come into equilibrium with the air, it was found that both sensitiveness and development factor decreased about 25 per cent. when the humidity was increased from 0.5 to 85 per cent.

This result seems very conclusive and shows the restraining action of a change of moisture on the sensitiveness of the film. It would follow, therefore, that all photographic materials used in photometric work should be brought into equilibrium with the atmosphere in which they are used.

Eastman Factory to Be Enlarged.

The Eastman Kodak Company has purchased eighty-five acres of land adjoining its plant, fronting on the Ridge road, for $107,000. The company's property now extends from the high bank of the river to the westward for about one and one-half miles.

Arrangements have been made to connect all the plants at Kodak Park with subways, which will carry a double track railroad and a roadway, so that every part of the plant can be reached without going on the public highway. Another purchase of land was made to fill out the frontage in Lake avenue. The plant now covers more than a square mile of land.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for Husband and Wife.

Released Sept. 4 by the World Film Corporation.

(Prepared by S. M. Berg. By special arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (Marked T) or a described action (Marked D). For instance: 3¼ T "Sadie, a dressmaker's—" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 40¾ D "When Knight reads letter" is a description of action.

Richard Baker, a bank cashier, through his wife Doris's extravagance, becomes involved. Mrs. Schmidt, wife of a bank director, desires social prominence, but is slighted by Doris. Schmidt, enraged, seeks to ruin Baker, who, little by little, is drifting from his wife. Alliston, a millionaire, and Knight, the bank examiner, both love Doris. She consents to elope with Alliston, but Schmidt's detectives, believing him to be Baker running away, stop them. Doris, learning her husband's sacrifices for her, is awakened to her true love. Alliston and Knight, for Doris's sake, make up Richard's shortage, and all ends happily.

The character of this picture is dramatic. Care should be taken in keeping the music subdued so as not to overplay.

The THEME selected is "Somewhere-Sometime"—Clough-Leighter.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

THE pianist about to become an organist will be confronted at first with the touch of the organ which is different from that of a piano and he will notice that the keys sink deeper. A correct and easy position of the fingers over five consecutive scale notes is the basis of fingering for the organ. It is necessary to lift the fingers high and press down firmly with decision.

You cannot make the organ sound by hitting the keys hard as on a piano. Expression must be developed and can be acquired by the use of suitable combinations and phrasing, much of which is done with the Swell Pedal. Repetition is quicker on an organ than a piano; in fact, the response is instantaneous. It should also be remembered that every note of the organ is ready to speak at the slightest touch, which fact is a stumbling block to many careless pianists. Many beginners on the organ feel that the speaking voice is slow. That is, the sound seems to come after the striking of the note. This is easily explained for the organ is sometimes placed at a considerable distance from the console and though the response is instantaneous a fraction of time has passed before the sound is carried back to the performer.

Absolute accuracy must be attained in playing the organ, and a true legato touch should be mastered. This is possible by the intelligent use of the fingers, care, and exactness in everything you do. A distinction should be made between a legato touch and a staccato touch. Both are not easy on an organ, especially to the pianist who is anxious to "play" in a few lessons. The true legato touch will come in time and only by thorough and conscientious study and practice. Pay attention to the position of the hand. Independent movements of the hands and feet are necessary. American pianists have a bad habit of what is called "ragtime pedalling" and beating time with their feet. Foot action for the organ is absolutely necessary but entirely independent of the hands.

Sir John Staniner's exercises for manual touch will be found very helpful and should be practised before any pieces are attempted on the organ. A few scales, practised with the Open Diapason (the loudest stop), will enable the student to gain confidence with the manual touch. Play exercises on the Great Organ, then play them on the Swell Organ, taking particular care to make each note clear and distinct. Be careful about turning under; see that you do it with ease. Always take the opportunity to change fingers on a repeated note. Strive for a refined tone; clearness is essential, and jumpy playing will not be tolerated by an intelligent audience.

The two part and three part inventions of Bach in addition to the two and three part Preludes and Fugues are excellent for forming a good style of touch, fingering and phrasing. In practising pedal exercises, don't balance your body on the edge of the bench. Sit in the middle of the seat and play from the ankle. The pianist will be inclined to glance at the pedals, but this habit must be avoided. Learn the positions of your pedals by sense of touch the same as piano. It is absolutely necessary to do this, as one cannot rely on sound for in many pieces the pedal work is obscured by your manual work, and only clear and even pedal technic can be recognized by your audience. It is therefore necessary to spend time and effort in developing a clear and smooth pedal technic. Do not kick at the pedals. Practice slowly and firmly. Try easy piano pieces until you gain courage. It is not necessary to stick at the pedals too long at a time. Vary your practising with manual and pedal work as well as piano technic, but let your practising be slow and deliberate and care taken to develop a clean and accurate style.

Effects and Phrasing.

Now that the student is familiar with the manuals and pedal keyboard and can touch the various notes without looking at them he should try an accompaniment to a simple waltz. Practice at first with the left hand alone, the second and third counts, the first being tacet. Then add your pedal; count one, which will be the pedal note and two, three the accompaniment with the left hand.

Practice slowly, counting one, two, three. Do not look at the pedals.

Practice until you can play this exercise smoothly and clean. There will be a tendency to strike your first count with the left hand on the manual. This difficulty can be mastered by accenting the first count with your left foot on the pedals. The pedal notes are the foundation notes in organ playing. When you master this accompaniment, bring in the melody, preferably chords or a single note at first, using the right hand on the Great Organ, taking particular care that your combination of stops is not too loud for your accompaniment.

Count slowly and play carefully, not slighting any notes. Use extreme care to have the second and third counts clear and your pedal notes clean and staccato. Do not blur your bass or develop careless pedal technic. A staccato bass is one of the secrets of successful organ playing for moving pictures. It makes your playing different than church playing, as many church pieces are mostly sustained notes. Not all bass notes should be made staccato, but the majority should be, and only notes in the middle or end of a strain should be held for any length of time or in pieces of a slow character demanding whole or half notes.

If you will examine the bass part of a waltz you will notice that few whole notes and few half notes make up the strain. They should be practiced slowly and carefully, as these are essential numbers for depicting the action on the screen. It is advisable to practice Bach daily as well as various technical exercises.

When playing an organ for pictures confine full organ and loud effects to marches, coronations, pageants, battles, fires, floods, etc. There seems to be a tendency on the part of many beginners to make their instrument roar and thunder. This habit should be avoided. Strive for a soft, refined tone. Use full organ or loud stops when working up a climax. Then an abrupt pause is sometimes effective. Reach the hearts of your hearers by clean, melodious playing. Do not offend them by poorly played and poorly selected pieces played on unsuitable combinations. A fault with many organists is that of holding down notes or chords while changing stops. Combination pistons obviate this to a certain extent, but many organists insist on making an abrupt pause in the middle of a piece. Start the strain with the necessary combination and use it till the end of that strain. In playing an organ for moving pictures many changes of combinations are necessary to avoid monotony. Rhythm is highly important in playing an organ for moving pictures, and if the beginner has difficulty in this direction counting while practicing will be of great aid.

The beginner must be content with simple pieces at first. Do not be in a hurry to play anything beyond you. Select music that can be mastered with a little practice and never attempt a piece until you are absolutely sure of being able to render it in the proper manner. Pay attention to the small things, for these make the big things possible.

Another Youth at the Front.

Writing Scenarios Between Whiles Down in the Rio Grande.

HOWARD IRVING YOUNG, one of the foremost of the younger group of scenario writers, who gave up that work to answer the call to arms and go with the Seventh regiment, N. Y. N. G., to the Mexican border, has sent word to the Metro officials that he is completing two strong, original scenarios in Camp McAllen, Texas, which will be forwarded within a few weeks. Mr. Young was engaged in writing the scenarios, together with Fred de Gresac, for the Bushman-Bayne serial of fourteen episodes, when he was called to the front.

Alexander Duane and Howard Irving Young of the Metro, Private Co. B, 7th Regiment, N. Y. N. G., at McAllen, Tex.

Mr. Young is a sturdy young fellow and has stood the vicissitudes of camp life well. He writes that he is handling a shovel more than a gun, and that he finds little time away from drill and his regular duties to devote to his writing. He found it impossible to continue work on the Bushman-Bayne serial and Paul Price, a former Baltimore newspaper reporter, was engaged to take up where Mr. Young left off. Mr. Young says the regiment has built many frame buildings of a more or less substantial nature, and that this augurs that they will remain there for some time to come.

There is plenty of entertainment around the camp, Mr. Young writes, but he misses motion pictures and Broadway and 42nd street. When in New York Mr. Young was a busy young fellow outside of his regular work. He was recently elected president of the Photodramatists, Inc., and he is secretary of the Green Room Club. He is also a popular member of the Screen Club, and always figures prominently in their social affairs.

With Mr. Young in the ranks of the Seventh is "Silent Alexander" Duane, a member of the Metro publicity staff, who was off with the regiment at the first call. "Alex" is enjoying good health and is anxious to get into Mexico.

Photographer Cowling Working in Clouds.

HERFORD T. COWLING, chief photographer of the United States Reclaimation Service, writes The Moving Picture World from Lake Peak, New Mexico, over 12,000 feet above sea level. "I am making a new series of scenic films for Uncle Sam which will far surpass the ones put out by me for the Department of the Interior last year. Since June 1 I have traveled 12,000 miles and according to present plans will be out until the middle of November. My Moving Picture World follows me all over the country and besides being a great source of pleasure, I find it indispensable in keeping up to date."

Herford T. Cowling.

Much of Mr. Cowling's work for the government has been released to the trade by Gaumont on the Mutual program and it has been of uniformly fine quality. Among other glowing endorsements is that of C. M. White, speaking as a representative of the Gaumont company.

"I have seen practically all of the United States scenic film used by lecturers," said Mr. White, "and I can frankly state that I have never seen any photography that surpasses the work of Mr. Cowling. Not only are his light effects exceptional, but he has exercised the news instinct of a magazine writer and filmed his subjects in a manner that brings out their strong and interesting characteristics to the best advantage."

The esteem with which Mr. Cowling is regarded by his fellow craftsmen was manifested at the last annual meeting of the Federal Photographic Society when he was elected president. Thomas S. Smyley, of the Smithsonian Institution, is honorary life president of the society.

CONSOLIDATED FILM CORPORATION GIVES LUNCHEON.

Representatives of various moving picture trade publications have reason to look back with pleasure on their introduction to the new serial from the pen of Albert Payson Terhune. On Tuesday, Aug. 15, previous to an exhibition of the first two episodes of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" in the projection room of the Metro Pictures Corporation, a luncheon was given to the press by the members of the Consolidated Film Corporation, at Murray's, West 42d street. This luncheon, by the way, turned out to be a sumptuous repast. Symbolic of the occasion the table decorations and favors consisted of crimson dahlias mingled with asparagus fern, while a "Crimson Stain Mystery" cocktail headed the menu card. The affair was an exceedingly pleasant one with the period between twelve M. and two P. M. given over to eating and pleasant sociability, including a few timely discussions and friendly exchanges of ideas. Those fortunate enough to be present were Adam Hull Shirk, Morning Telegraph; H. F. Randall, New York Review; E. P. Smaney, Dramatic Mirror; Patrick Kearney, Evening Mail; Harold Arnston, Exhibitor's Herald; Miss Marie F. Lennards, Billboard; S. G. Sladdin and Arthur Brilant, Consolidated Film Corporation; F. C. Kennedy, Motography; Harry Ennis, Clipper; "Wid" Gunning, Wid's; Arthur James, Metro; Fred Schader, Variety; and Margaret I. MacDonald, Moving Picture World.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD.

A SOURCE of keen satisfaction to be derived from having something to do with a page like this is found in the jolly good letters that come in from others who are no less alive to the problems and difficulties the editor is facing. I wish it were possible to publish in full every communication received, but for various reasons such a practice cannot be followed. Occasionally, however, I am strongly tempted to yield this space entirely to the publication of liberal extracts from the excellent letters and printed leaflets sent to me so kindly by active workers in other States. Perhaps the far-reaching scope of this department can be best exemplified by so doing. Here are two typical specimens, one from the head resident of Friendly House, a social settlement in Davenport, Iowa, whose friendly letter is doubly welcome because I happen to be a resident of Union Settlement here now, at one time of Hull House, Chicago; the other from a high schcool teacher in Pasadena, California, also president of the Visual Education Association of that State—to whom I am glad to extend my own high school hand for a friendly grasp. Have chairs, gentlemen; let's indulge in a round-table.

Writes the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. Harry E. Downer):

Your department in the Moving Picture World is each week the first one to be sought. Often there is little time for the always excellent contents of other pages. Have been greatly interested in your efforts to put life into a seemingly defunct or perbaps entirely supposititious subject, and I believe you can do it. It looks as if you might be the right man to raise the dead or bring verity into a dream that has a name.

Last winter we inaugurated a scheme of Pleasant Sunday Afternoons. We had a program of music and some reels of motion pictures furnished by the Engineering Extension Department of the Iowa State College at Ames. We wished to attract the older people and made an admission charge of 5 cents for adults, 25 cents for children unattended and 10 cents for families af any size. Inasmuch as we cbarge the children 1 cent on Saturdays we felt that we could restrict their coming Sunday. We were on a circuit and used shipments of film sent from one station to another, following the plan which you propose to utilize.

Have greedily followed every item in the Moving Picture World that looked toward the use of motion pictures in education. The promise of the plan is so fine and the possibilities so great, but the results are disappointing so far. The difficulties of safe and inexpensive projection are disappearing, but there remains the greater difficulty, the conservatism of teachers, their satisfaction with present methods, their timidity to enter an untried field, tbeir inability to find anything in Herbart or Comenius or Pestalozzi about cinematography to guide them, the lack of authoritative approval by school conventions. I know them well—these teachers—for I have been one most of my life. We are a curious lot. That is the reason why I told you at the beginning that the educational motion picture is either dead or never lived; because the teachers whose business it is to educate, who control the system of public education, who write curricula and supervise the daily progress from "opening exercises, 9.00 to 9.10" to "special assistance, 4.00 to 4.30," have never shown interest in the teaching power of motion pictures, and until they do, there can be no education through cinematography.

What I am hoping you can do, or someone else that sees the point and has the ear of picture people, is the persuasion of teachers to enter upon the work of preparing a visual cirriculum which shall name definitely the pictures desired to illuminate the branches where such help to the printed text is possible. The teacbers are the only people competent to do this work. They can give to the producers explicit expression of their school room needs. They can open to the producers a market steadier and more profitable than any they have known. The picture producers cannot create this market unless they can influence every gathering of teachers to talk of motion pictures and decide upon needs never before acknowledged.

I began a curriculum two years ago. Got along swimmingly through the kindergarten and primary grades, and then grew too busy to go on alone. Asked help from friends in grade school work, in high school and university, and got absolutely no help at all. Perhaps you can do better.

The foregoing is all so very good that I could not keep it to myself, although its publication might be construed as a violation of these instructions from our Friendly House comrade: "Please consider this a little summer day chat, nothing for publication. If you see any point to it I will make you a present of it. Take it as a gift to be used without credit line." He kindly sent along a copy of a leaflet that was circulated during the last convention of the Iowa State Teachers' Association. I am sure his excellent propaganda in behalf of educational pictures would be appreciated by all who read this page, but for the present space can be spared for only the stimulating words printed in large type on the front page: IF IT TAKES SCHOOL PEOPLE TEN YEARS TO DO ANYTHING, LET'S BEGIN. In regard to his proposal to set on foot the careful outlining of a visual curriculum, Mr. Downer writes me: "It seemed to set some of the folks to thinking it over. The executive committee are considering the matter. At any rate there are nine more years."

It may hearten the folks in Iowa to know that I have made inquiries of some of the large producing concerns and they assure me that such a general outline list of desirable films would be welcomed by them, although they of course could not guarantee that every film suggested by the educators will be made—unless at least the cost of production and reasonable profits can be first assured.

Now from the far Western quarter above referred to comes a whole sheaf of fine ideas and generous words. The writer is Mr. Carl H. Carson.

For the last five or six years I have been cataloging the films regularly released in America and abroad which might by any chance be used for actual school work. These have all been arranged into ten divisions, each of which has been sub-divided so as to cover grammar school, high school and college courses. As a result of this work, I know what has been available since 1907.

We are indeed glad to know that you are planning for not only new prints, but prints on non-inflammable stock. The non-inflammable stock will take the last argument from those opposed to the moving picture work in our educational institutions. There are many schools in California that already have machines or are just about to get them. There will be a great many more within another year. Your plan should meet with favor from all.

We all feel, however, that a very important part of the work and, in fact, the most important, is the selection of materials which can actually be correlated with classroom work and organized into courses which can be arranged in advance for the year. I think I am safe in saying that such courses could be put into at least eighty per cent. of the schools in this section of the country anyway, and probably into ninety per cent. The first need of the schools is systematized, organized and regular work. Until that comes, the progress must be limited. However, I see in your scheme a solution to both problems.

Mr. Carson also favored me with copies of leaflets relating to the work of the Visual Education Association of California, particularly its campaign for legislation to establish a State Bureau of Visual Education. He adds:

We hope to have another report much more complete in a month or two to be used in our next legislative campaign this winter, as well as in the N. E. A. work. I will send you one as soon as it is out and in return would appreciate any particular material that you may have which you think might be well to include. Of course, we will include a description of the plans which you are starting.

I shall be glad to insert in this department a resume of these leaflets as soon as may be convenient after the arrival of the forthcoming report.

Developments in Iowa and in California will be watched with interest. Who can send in direct from the field similar accounts of activities or propaganda in other States? Is there, for example, anything developing along the line of visual education in Louisiana, or in Michigan? Send me a brief account of any proposals or actual operations in your State. How many schools now have machines that take standard gauge film? Can you cite any instances of the strictly pedagogical use of films as distinct from mere diversion? Even though you may have tried only a very simple experiment, others would be glad to know what methods you employed and what results followed. H. L.

WHEN MINISTERS DISAGREE.

To attempt to decide when ministers disagree is no easy task. It is not, however, a matter to be dismissed as impossible, neither is it a decision that is required, but rather a solution of the problem which causes the ministers to differ in their opinions. Of course, the matter under discussion is the moving picture, and there are always those with strong opinions, valuable or otherwise, who insist upon being heard. It is well known that in a conference, convention or similar gathering of clergymen, men of extreme views can always secure a hearing, and, in the majority of instances, a vote in their favor. The professional reformer is always sure of a hearty support; a vote of any other kind would be so strongly misinterpreted that such a gathering is not going to run the risk of such a misunderstanding and will vote a weak positive rather than a strong negative. When, therefore, a Church assembled recently in its annual councils, voted against the general uses of moving pictures, the vote was without strength or value in that it supported a criticism rather than a principle, binding upon no one. Many ministers present were warm supporters of the moving picture; it will therefore not prove a very difficult problem to reach some sort of a profitable decision where these ministers disagree.

Individual ministers as a rule are admitting the value of the moving pictures and many are using them, so that when it comes to a final analysis it is the abuse of the moving pictures which they mean to condemn rather than the use of them, and the disagreement is where to draw the line. Here the reformers and ultra-conservative get in their hair-raising and hair-splitting arguments and these prevail with goodly minded men in a sentimental rather than in a practical way.

Many of those who voted with the majority are themselves either users or favorers of the moving picture and their vote simply means that they think the pictures safe in their own hands and doubtful in the hands of many a someone else. A religious council is not always practical; indeed, it does not always intend to be so, it expects to be interpreted; it makes rules and expects them to be applied; it tries to enforce by stringency; its business is pious rather than of common sense; it expects the latter to be supplied in application on use; it cannot legislate either for all people or purposes; hence its seeming harsh decisions.

In the field at large the ministers are using the pictures; they like them; they teach with them and from them, they recognize and welcome their power, but they object against their indiscriminate use; they object against their abuse; they object to their broad freedom, especially in behalf of the young.

It would seem from this that ministers do not disagree so widely. Their actions must be interpreted. Under all favorable circumstances they are the best friends of the pictures: under unfavorable circumstances they are the bitter enemies of the pictures; they too often demand a standard that the picture world at large cannot give; nevertheless, given a fair standard, a clean field, in the hands of wise exhibitors who use and not abuse with no conflicting conditions, but with the idea of the greatest good for the greatest numbers, the ministers as a whole are the friends of the pictures.

FALLING BEHIND.

The topical pictures are standards in the educational lists; they are among the most important of our educational curriculum; in the past they have done a great work; they have placed the work of the moving pictures in the front ranks among the instructors of all classes of people; they have blazed the way for other things; they are an absolute necessity: they must be continued at their best.

Unforunately during the last few months they have been falling behind in their value, they are treated as being able to maintain their standard on their past reputation. The first great fault in the fact that they are being subject to the axe—or scissors—not that they are being beheaded, but rather that they are being curtailed, or, more truthfully, they are brutally chopped off. As the people's standard picture newspaper they have been the leading power in every picture house and theater. This "chopping off" must stop or their attractive power will be lost. We have been terribly disappointed many times recently to see important subjects suddenly end, without running out even to an abrupt finish. The interest in a scene has been secured, attention riveted and expectant, when lo! it was ended. Where is the fault? Did the cameraman suddenly get tired and think he had taken enough, or did the film censor sacrifice subject for inches? It appears as though the chopping process is to blame. The reel must contain all the subject taken, yet come within the required length, hence the chopping process and a disappointed public, if not too often a disgusted one. The too frequent picturing of fires and railway accidents is another drawback. All fires are alike and there is great similarity in railway accidents. The cameraman need not be rushed to all these events, they are as tiring as the Indians and cowboys of a generation ago and there are plenty of news without every fire and accident that happens. Please give us the old standard again, with the full length to do every incident justice.

Another falling behind is in the abbreviation of the educational subjects. These are too valuable to be given anything but a good and sufficient place in every program. The practice of using them as an attraction and then limiting their value will not in the end pay. The twenty-minute reel has been cut to fifteen or ten minutes, resulting too often in a half reel when the writer knows that the other half has been suppressed. This is abusing the services of an old friend who will be wanted again in the future, and is as bad in principle as in practice. Many of the best houses reported that much strength had been given to their program by the educational picture. Why then slight an old friend? Rather give him more place. He will never disgrace you or go back on you, and no one will ever slight you for being found in his company. The educational picture is your best friend and helper.

ADVANCEMENT NOTES.

The recent explosion in New York Harbor, which occurred in the early hours on Sunday morning, resulting in great and widespread fires, was filmed and exhibited in the Strand theater before noon on Monday. This is advancement of a manifold nature, fulfilling what seemed exaggerated ideas a few years ago, when it was suggested that such possibilities were before us. It has come to pass, however, and the topical picture has overtaken the newspaper. As a kinematographic success and as a purveyor of news, this is truly educationalism of the highest kind.

Recent topicals have included some war pictures a little more instructive than the mere scenes of a year ago. A diagram of the English and German fleets in the naval engagement off Jutland gives a truthful illustration of that important event. The actual discovery of a Zeppelin at night by a number of searchlights over England, together with the exploding of bombs, gives a very graphic description of this method of warfare. Some very close scenes "somewhere in France" afford an idea of a battlefield. That they are very real is established by the statement that a number of cameramen had lost their lives as a result of their daring. W. H. J.

LEWIS SEALY, ENGLISH PIONEER PICTURE-MAKER.

One of the first three producers of motion pictures in England was Lewis Sealy, who is in the cast of the Metro-Quality screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

The only others in the field at the time were Lumiere, exhibiting at the Empire, and Paul showing at the Alhambra. Mr. Sealy's pictures were seen at the Metropolitan. Associated with him in producing and manufacturing was Esme Collings of Bond street a photographer of royalty and other prominent persons. They made their first picture exactly twenty years ago.

In 1897 they filmed the Queen's Diamond Jubilee. They also made a picture of the Derby of that year. Picture-making was for the most part devoted to current events and the happenings of everyday life. Mr. Sealy conceived the idea of dramatizing songs for motion pictures. He and Mr. Collings produced screen versions of two popular songs, "Tomorrow will be Friday" and "Simon the Cellarer," with a cast of well-known actors and actresses. He abandoned motion picture producing after three years because of the difficulty in getting places for exhibiting them, as there were no theatres devoted to pictures at the time. For a while he leased a theater at Brighton for the purpose.

PORTUGAL'S VALUABLE COLONIES.

Portugal was the earliest European colonizer in Africa, but in her various wars lost much of her possessions. Today she has the Cape Verde Islands of 1,480 square miles, with 150,000 inhabitants; Portuguese Guinea, with 13,940 square miles and 850,000 people; Principe and St. Thomas Islands, containing but 360 square miles and 43,000 souls; Angola, covering 484,800 square miles and the home of 4,200,000 blacks, and Mozambique or Portuguese East Africa, with an area of 293,000 square miles and 3,200,000 population.

Portugal endeavors to control both the export and import trade of her African colonies, but Germany and England supplied a great share of the materials not produced by the mother country. While the larger cities have financial connections with Europe through Portuguese banks, still the bulk of the trade here, as in all parts of Africa, is done by barter, and trading posts are to be found throughout the land. The methods of the Portuguese officials hinder, rather than aid, those inclined to develop this territory.—W. E. Aughinbaugh, in Leslie's.

Is the Picture Business Shot to Pieces?

By Frank G. Andrews

Too Much Opinion Based on Big Town Conditions—Small Towns are the Better Gauge

SOMETHING like six years ago a friend who held a $300-a-month position with a moving picture company said to me, in a voice of resignment: "The moving picture business is all 'shot to pieces.'"

There had been a great deal of money made in pictures up to that time and the industry has made many millionaires since then—and unmade a few as well, I guess. But my friend was wrong at that time. The business was NOT "shot to pieces," as subsequent events proved.

A question being discussed on all sides is whether or not the moving picture business is "shot to pieces" at the present time. Men with heavy financial interests and competent writers are venturing opinions. It is right that they should because it is a most vital question. But they are viewing it too much from the producing standpoint or as technical experts. What counts more is the attitude of the public toward pictures. That is the angle I wish to take; and if I can bring forth some new thoughts that will interest or instruct men higher up—the men who are really trying to feel the public pulse—then I'll be accomplishing something worth while.

What is being written and the opinions that are being offered are based too much, I fear, on conditions existing in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and first-class cities, and even these opinions may not be conclusive. These cities are not the whole universe. From an exhibitor's standpoint a better general idea of the industry can be had from a comprehensive knowledge of conditions as they exist among the rank and file.

It is not for me to discuss the exhibitor in cities of the first-class because I have only a general idea of existing conditions. But I have more intimate knowledge of the troubles and heartaches of exhibitors in the smaller cities and towns. There is a little territory of fifty or seventy-five miles that I am in close touch with and thoroughly understand and I have reason to believe that conditions existing in this somewhat limited field differ but little from conditions that exist generally outside the major cities.

Having now paved the way to say something, I'll say that I DO NOT think the business is "shot to pieces," nor do I think it is going backward. By this I mean that the public are not forsaking this popular form of entertainment. Naturally you wonder if it is true that interest is not lagging, why theaters are closing all over the country. Easily answered: There are two many theaters, and apologies for theaters, and the apologies are going by the board. Better and larger theaters have been and are being built, and the little bandbox with its 2-by-4 manager has to go. It and he have gone, in fact, already.

The man who runs a real picture theater must know his business as thoroughly as a merchant knows his. The merchant who does not keep up with the times these days soon withers and dries up. So it is in showing pictures, only in this case the withering and drying up process is swifter and more certain.

I know a city that has an available drawing population of 70,000. I know the history of pictures in this city. Only a few years ago crowds used to line the sidewalks trying to get into the two small picture houses. They saw the whole show for a nickel. Now that city has five large picture theaters and seven small ones, and there are perhaps six times as many people going to the shows as went six years years ago. In view of this, why say that pictures are going back? And remember, further, that the public is now paying ten and fifteen cents for what they used to see at a nickell

It is true that no great fortunes are being piled up to compare with a few years ago but that is because the show business has been cut up. There are too many theaters and the little fellow must fall out. The man with the best house, who studies his business and masters it, whose chief interest in his patrons is to take care of them after they pass into his theater rather than before they get to the box office, is the man who will survive and build a business that will prove substantial and lasting.

Don't you believe it when somebody tells you that the public are tiring. They are tiring of so many poor pictures, features as well as short subjects, but when it comes to good pictures they are hungry—voracious. There is little novelty any more in a moving picture just because it "moves." It is entertainment, not novelty, that people come to see these days. I can truthfully say that I have never heard a person grumble because admission prices have been raised; but I have heard them grumble because many of the pictures they see for fifteen cents are not, in their opinion, as good as those they once saw for five cents. You can hear this opinion expressed on all sides. Producers may laugh at the claim, but when the public thinks that way about it, what are you going to do?

That is one reason why I have held to the opinion that six reels of poor singles are not so bad as six reels of poor feature. If I have to sit out a six-reel feature that is rotten, I know before the second reel is off that there are still four more rotten reels to be endured. But in the varied program you never can tell. They may flash a good one on you any minute. At any rate, the assorted films, rotten though they may be, are less monotonous and the boards don't seem so hard.

The public are not tired of pictures. Considering what they have to endure at times, they stand them surprisingly well. And right here comes up the burning question: If the public are not to blame for the lax interest complained of in some quarters, then who is? Surely it must be the producer or the exhibitor. Very likely it is a little of each. Perhaps it might better be said that some producers have damaged the business and others have boosted it up; and some exhibitors have "shot it to pieces" while others have raised the standard.

In the city to which I referred, an enterprising exhibitor told me that in July he came within $50 of breaking his record for monthly receipts, and he did it without any extraordinary features—mainly a consistently good feature program. Now you all know what kind of a month last July was. July is always a fierce month for business and this July was simply a scorcher. There is no "going back" about that, is there?

This exhibitor is an enterprising guy. He reads and studies the Moving Picture World, keeps wideawake and there isn't a minute in the day when he doesn't know exactly what he is doing. He growls some, but he doesn't growl at the public. He growls because he pays for what should be a good feature service and gets "lemons" about three-quarters of the time. "Lemons" are all right for such as likes "em," cause they're cheap, but they are bad things for the man who knows he is getting them and can't help himself.

During the month of July this fellow booked one extra good feature for a two-day mid-week run. It cost him $150. Did he clean up? Well, he made an even $400. With a $30-a-day show he would not have made more than $100. If he knew where to get good stuff he would book a high-class feature oftener, but the elusive animal keeps closely under cover. This man sees that making $400 profit on a $150 feature is much better than making $100 on a $30 feature, with gasolene up where it is.

Studying the business from an exhibition standpoint is rather puzzling these days. To know just what to book, providing you are not already tied up with iron-clad contracts, is a confusing problem. You may be a subscriber to a so-called service that criticises films for the guidance of exhibitors, or you may follow the criticism of films in the trade journals, prepared unquestionably by competent, well-meaning persons, and still you will get a headache. Any exhibitor will tell you that he has showed to capacity houses some feature that proved a great winner at the box office and in public estimation; that it was clean, wholesome and unobjectionable. Yet he booked it under apprehension because the reviewers "panned" the feature. Likewise, he has shown features that have been touted by the critics and sometimes the picture didn't take at all. He wants to know what the answer is. After such experiences he naturally is all at sea.

This is offered, not as a personal opinion, but as a sure-enough fact. The critics are undoubtedly men of vast experience and wonderful technical knowledge and they wield powerful pens; but often, I fear, they lose sight of the practical—the commercial—side of the business, not intentionally but unconsciously. They lose sight of the fact that the showman's greatest interest in a picture is the one that will bring results at the box office and at the same time leave a good after taste. The showman's idea is that while grand opera appeals to lovers of Art, the old-fashioned minstrel show still has its friends.

Critics aim to promote the industry as an Art, while what we want is just good pictures. We don't care much for Art. Art is all right in New York, but out here all we know about Art is that it stands for Arthur, and that is as far as we are interested in Art. We would be more interested in Art only we have rent to pay.

Pictures have been sacrificed to Art. Just as soon as a great director or actor or actress develops Art the great public loses them.

Remember the old Biograph pictures? Every night we could see Blanche Sweet, Lillian and Dorothy Gish, Henry B. Walthall, Mary Pickford, Florence Lawrence, Arthur Johnson, Mae Marsh, Irene Howley and other good ones—all for a nickel.

Where are they now? Echo.

All these popular favorites have been sacrificed to Art. Once in a while we can have the privilege of seeing them, but their appearance is only occasional.

We had great directors in those days and could see their handiwork night after night. Where are they now? They are making wonderplays and masterpieces de luxe—except when they are supervising, which is most of the time. They are artists now—and artists don't work only when they feel a fit coming on. Consequently, we don't get the grade we used to get as a steady diet. Griffith hasn't put out any work in nearly two years. He is busy on Art. If Griffith would only get busy on some short subjects again he perhaps wouldn't be helping Art so very much but he would be helping the industry a whole lot from an exhibitor's standpoint.

Features will always be the chief end of pictures because the small program can never hope to recover the great directors and the star actors. But if such a thing could be brought about, what do you think would happen to features were Griffith, the Inces, O'Brien, DeMille, Sennett, Vignola, Emerson, Capellani, Kirkwood and a few others of that calibre to turn their talents into the making of short subjects, aided by the old-time favorites of the screen? And can you question that such a program as they are capable of turning out would give the industry great stimulus? And would not such a program satisfy and enthuse every exhibitor and every audience in the land? The feature program will win because these men will stay in features, but it wouldn't if they were on the other side—which they never will be again.

The industry is not "shot to pieces," although you can see for yourself that the cheap program that won favor a while ago has received a load of shot from somewhere and is hobbling around on a couple of crippled legs.

UNITY ESTABLISHES SOUTHERN EXCHANGE IN ATLANTA.

Following his visit to Atlanta last week, Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president and general manager of the Unity Sales Corporation, announces the completion of important negotiations which have led to the opening of a new exchange in Atlanta, to be known as the Unity Film Exchange.

R. M. Savini has made arrangements with the Unity Sales Corporation to take charge of this exchange and will handle "The Yellow Menace" in the southeastern territory, as well as other productions of the Unity Sales Corporation. Mr. Savini is well known in this section, having been in the exchange business there for a number of years.

Censorship Agitation in Britain

By J. B. Sutcliffe

What They Are Trying to Do Across the Water and How the "Kill Joys" Are Complicating Matters

AGITATION for official censorship of motion pictures has never been so rife in Great Britain as it is to-day. It is not an unexpected development. On the contrary it is the natural fermentation of an over rampant tendency which has grown unchecked, unchallenged and even encouraged from within, first noticeable in the form of the seemingly prejudiced utterance of the puritan "kill-joy," later in pointed clergy references to the moral ravages of the "movies," still later in magisterial pronouncements leading now finally to concrete petitions to Parliament from licensing authorities for the establishment of an Official Arbiter of Eyesight. Indeed, should the impending danger some morning become a stern reality unexpectedness is the least feasible plea the trade could extend.

Censorship vicissitudes in the different States of the Union along with repeated appeals by the home trade journals to organize against the common menace have kept each faction of the industry constantly intimate with the trend of outward events, and the ultimate, inevitable result of prolonged inaction. Unpreparedness, not unexpectedness, is the trouble. An unpreparedness born of the indifference of each section of the trade to the interests of the whole; a disinclination to encounter anything not immediately threatening individual interests, and what is more to the vital point a stubborn belief that the danger is more attributable to fanciful imagination than reality.

Against these indifferences there are three strong, very strong points which require no elaboration to prove conclusively to any man that the danger is actually on the doorstep of the kinematograph trade.

Firstly, there is the plain inflexible statement by the Home Secretary that "he is considering the question of official Censorship." There is the significant investiture of the British Board of Film Censors (the volumtary tribunal of the trade), of powers for the compulsory examination of films under the Government's last export regulation. Almost simultaneous comes an ominous petition from several local licensing authorities to the State for the appointment of an official film censor and the initiation by one (as detailed below), of a movement towards control. Taken together the three circumstances furnish uncontrovertible evidence of a concerted movement outside our ranks nearer the one objective—Censorship.

Home Secretary's Suggestion.

In reply to the petitions of these local authorities, the two most prominently identified with the petition being the London County Council and the Preston Town Council, and, in deference to the petition of the Chief Constables Association the Home Secretary has offered certain suggestions for the establishment of a new Censorship which would be official and independent, and under Government control. The suggestions are:

"The Licensing Authorities would require as conditions of any license that no film should be exhibited which the Licensing Authority might prohibit on the ground of its objectionable character, and if the film has not been passed by the Official Censorship previous notice should be given to the Authority, so that they should have an opportunity of examining the film before its exhibition. Films which had been passed by the Official Censorship would not be objected to by the Licensing Authorities."

Such a scheme would doubtless be most amenable to the Government at the present time, as no special legislation would be necessary to start it in immediate operation. It does not, however, appear from the above that the suggested Official Censorship would be a compulsory censorship, yet the local authorities would not be allowed to object to a film bearing the stamp of the Official Censor. This would certainly be a concession in favor of the trade compared with the fate of certain films which have passed the U. S. A. National Board of Film Censors only to be subsequently objected to in Ohio, mutilated in Maine, or killed in Kentucky. But one wonders what would happen in the case of a film not submitted to the Official Censor, but viewed and objected to by a local authority and then sanctioned by the Official Censor. Upon the Home Secretary's own suggestion a local authority could be flouted by the exhibition of a film in this way with all the advertisement its local prohibition gave it. And how could the Official Censor, let us say for the sake of illustration, reasonably prohibit the exhibition of a film that had been sanctioned by some local authorities and prohibited by others? We have already had tastes of such incongruities. What has been quite the thing in Newcastle and Nottingham was positive anathema to Liverpool and Leeds.

Objection by Exhibitors' Association.

This scheme of the Home Secretary's has met with the warm approval of many leading manufacturers and renters (exchange-men), and has also been endorsed by a few exhibitors. But by far the majority of exhibitors are strongly opposed to the proposals inasmuch as their own particular interests would have no representation therein. For that matter neither would the manufacturer or renter be represented as under the present system of voluntary censorship, and if the exhibitor demands a voice in the Official Censorship why should the manufacturer, whose property is at stake, remain silent?

At the outset, therefore, the opposition of the Exhibitors' Association to the above proposals may seem unreasonable although so far it has only found expression in a deputation to the Home Secretary with alternative ideas. These embrace a virtual reconstruction of the existing British Board of Film Censors in such a manner that exhibiting interests would be in the majority. The Home Secretary has, I understand, agreed to consider at length the exhibitors case and will make known his decision in due course. The only other objection to the original scheme emanates from the Society of Authors, who, doubtless acting in concert with the Exhibitors Association, will also wait upon the Home Secretary as the creators of the property to be censored. The Society of Authors is and always has been vigorously opposed to any form of censorship.

Opposition to the Home Secretary's plan from some of the local authorities concerned would hardly come as a surprise. County and Municipal councils are always loath to surrender in whole or part their statutory powers. And the more antiquated such powers may be the more reverently they are preserved, sometimes as nothing more than picturesque survivals of a bygone age. Early evidence of their reluctance to abandon their voice in the question of censorship is, for instance, not lacking. Quick upon the Home Secretary's proposals comes the following motion from the West Riding County Council, the responsible authority for most of the moving picture exhibitions in Yorkshire: "While not abandoning the powers and duties possessed under the Cinematograph Act of 1909, the Council welcomes the establishment of an Official Censorship by the Government as a general guide, but wish to retain the power to object to any film they might think objectionable."

Independent Action.

Another and more precipitate example of local arbitrariness arising directly out of this matter is the action of the Birmingham city justices in appointing two women inspectors to investigate complaints regarding films that might be shown locally. They will have no executive power but act as eyes for the justices by visiting the different moving picture theaters in the Birmingham area and reporting upon them. In making the appointment the justices raised no objection to the proposed Official Censorship, on the contrary it was remarked that the Home Secretary's proposals involved some sacrifice of power but as the advantages were greater than the drawbacks the wisest course would be to support the scheme. Yet as premature compensation for an anticipated sacrifice, women inspectors are promptly put out on the track of the exhibitor. Nor is this all. A petition from the justices has been submitted to the Home Secretary for the inclusion of a special classification in the Official Censorship of films suitable for exhibition to children and that no child under the age of fourteen should be permitted to see films not appearing in this classification.

The introduction of women in this connection appears also to be interesting that section of the press whose misguided activities I have previously noted. An expression of opinion extracted from Mrs. Charles Urban, who has been attending her husband's extensive interests during his absence in the States with "How Britain Prepared," favors as the most effective form of censorship a women's committee sufficiently large to work in sections. "After all," she is reported to have said, "it is largely a women's question. Picture shows are largely attended by women, and they are the best judges as to what would be harmful to their children or offensive to people of judgment. Quite three-quarters of the most objectionable films have come from America."

Posters.

An important side issue of the agitation revolves around that necessary adjunct to films; "paper," advertising matter in general but posters in particular. At Birmingham, Manchester, and Wakefield the licensing justices have, during the past few days, expressed themselves strongly upon the exhibition of suggestive lithos advertising films, and warned exhibitors of their intention to deal drastically with future offenders. In London the Bill Posters' Association exercises a voluntary trade scrutiny over posters submitted for display which is followed by most of the bill posting companies in the country, but not all. It has on occasion happened that posters exhibited in London have been refused in certain provincial centers and vice versa.

The Exhibitors' Association has under consideration a hopeful solution. The obstacles are nothing like so formidable as with films conducive to a continuation of the existing voluntary examination. A joint committee of the Exhibitors' and Bill Posters' Association will act as censors of posters and its deliberations will be binding on both sides.

The British trade is obviously confronted by a serious problem. Once the present voluntary system of censorship goes it would be costly and difficult, if possible to reinstate. Experience shows that nearly all official censorships whether directed to the control of the written word or the visualized scene, invariably tend towards the imposition of puritanical restraints, impositions that have ultimately been energetically resented by the public itself. There is yet hope for a reconstruction of our voluntary system to meet the approval of both sides and to preserve the freedom of the trade. The appointment of an Official Censor might conceivably work smoothly in its judgments and obligations on the former point. But is it worth the sacrifice on the latter?

Spokes from the Hub

BY MARION HOWARD

I AM personally indebted to the Vitagraph, Triangle, Paramount, Lubin and Selig Polyscope corporations for gifts of pictures of the various stars it is such a pleasure to write of, and I take this way of thanking them all. I am making a collection for our Film Club picture gallery in a forthcoming clubhouse and will be glad of further gifts of this nature. The club is growing in membership; the latest to join are Francis X. Bushman, Beverly Bayne and Mr. Thomas Soriero, manager of the Park theater, which is making quite a record under his "live wire" supervision.

Over in France in our Consul-General A. M. Thackara we have a progressive gentleman who has introduced an innovation in the schools there in the presentation of motion pictures, as already referred to in these columns. It is of interest, however, to know that he married a daughter of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman, who had something to say once about war. Mrs. Thackara, who died recently, was a sister of one of the Hub's best known dames, Mrs. Paul Thorndike, whose son is a Harvard man and named for his illustrious grandfather.

Well, we had a good Sunday release here in "A Man from Mississippi," with genial Tom Wise as the star—he of the Falstaff figure and who played the part in the all-star cast of "Merry Wives of Windsor" in New York in the spring. He also played the part here in one scene during the Shakespearian celebration early in July, when Mrs. Richard Mansfield took part in another play. What a dandy Senator from the west he makes, outranking them all, not even excepting the rotund Arbuckle and Crane! This play got quite a hand here, and is a credit to the World Film Corporation in its wholesome presentation of the political game.

Max Figman is really very funny, as evidenced in "Love Me, Love My Dog," a scream all through, but I rather liked him better in "Her Birthday Gift," as it gave him certain opportunities. His experience in the display room of a dressmaking establishment, whither he accompanied his wife, only to come in contact with the living models with whom he flirts surreptitiously, will be remembered a long time. The Metros have a dandy trio of comedians in Sid Drew, Ralph Herz, and now Max Figman. Keep it up, for we like clean comedy minus slapstick, which appeals only to the uneducated and illiterate.

S. Rankin Drew deserves more than passing credit for his work in "The Suspect," with Anita Sewart playing a young Nihilist. Mr. Drew not only played a strong part, but he directed its every detail, preserving the atmosphere perfectly. We are getting a bit tired of Russian intrigues, Siberia, massacres, mobs, etc., but we must appreciate the artistic work required to photograph them so well. Here we have punch and plenty of it, with big, intense moments. The Vitagraph players are so dependable always and again we see Bobby Connelly and Julia Swayne Gordon. Another play with Russia and the Jews as the theme is "The Melting Pot," mentioned earlier as seen at the run-off. Soriero put it on last week at the Park and it took immensely, as the Hub has thousands of Jews who rejoice in the fact that in the pictures we have actual happenings before the present war and dating back generations. It is comforting to know that this is now history, with the flower of Russia on the fighting fronts, few to return to fight Jews or anything else. Walker Whiteside, the star, is the one who created the role for the speaking version, seen here six years ago, with Miss Florence Fisher (a protege of Nazimova, now a convert to the films) as his support.

"The Mill on the Floss" is most creditable for the Thanhousers and follows the story very well. The costuming was a feature in its accuracy and the old-time atmosphere was preserved to the end. The flood scene has never been so well done here, and the outdoor photography rarely excelled. Mignon Anderson and the company has some hard work to do. This is an excellent dramatization of one of George Eliot's most famous novels and is educational from a literary point of view.

As a filler at the Fenway we had the pleasure of seeing "The Charge of the Light Brigade," done splendidly by the Edison Company. There was some wonderful horsemanship and the military spirit, also that of sacrifice, was clearly shown with no exaggeration. The titles bore the actual verses of the stirring poem, and I should call this a good picture to show—one that will live.

Of the current topics pictures special mention might be made of the one showing Hughes and Taft riding over the grounds of the summer estate of the former. The familiar Taft smile startlingly recalls the late Grover Cleveland when he relaxed a bit. Then the family group is so well done, the young members taking their places in an easy manner, devoid of all self-consciousness.

Anna Q. Nilsson Joins Ivan

ANNA Q. NILSSON, who has just completed the sensational serial, "Who's Guilty?" for Pathe, has been engaged by the Ivan Film Productions to portray the leading female role in the next all-star cast production to be produced by that company.

The role of Rhoda Cortlandt in Mr. Abramson's latest photoplay will give her the greatest opportunity to display her ability as a delineator of emotional roles.

Anna Q. Nilsson.

Anna Nilsson was born in Helsingfors, Sweden, just twenty-four years ago. She has been on the stage and in motion pictures in the United States for the last nine years, yet she does not come of theatrical folks. In fact, Miss Nilsson is the first member of her family to go on the stage.

It is largely an accident, though a very lucky accident, that Miss Nilsson is today one of the real screen stars of America. That accident was caused by the triumph of curiosity over caution. One day she dropped into the studios of the Kalem Company to visit Alice Joyce. While she was sitting in Miss Joyce's dressing room a director entered and—well, then and there Miss Nilsson became booked for a theatrical career. She worked in small parts for a time; parts so small, she says, that if the audience had winked at a certain point in the films they would have missed her entirely.

Co-starred with Miss Nilsson in "Her Surrender," her first vehicle under the Ivan banner, are Rose Coghlan, the distinguished artiste; William H. Tooker, a noted delineator of screen character roles; Wilmuth Merkyl, who has been leading man for such stars as Mme. Olga Petrova and Virginia Pearson; Harry Spingler, one of filmdoms famous juveniles, who has co-starred with William Farnum in photoplays for over a year, and Miss Frankie Mann, long a player with the Lubin organization.

General Humidity Vanquished

Olympia Theater in Pará, Brazil, Has Every Convenience for Combating Hot Weather.

Pará, Brazil, August 10.—The owners of the Olympia theater have one of the handsomest theaters in all the south, and everything that helps to make a visit agreeable is to be found in it. As may be noted in the picture, there are ceiling fans, wall fans, and motor driven ventilators. Besides these helps the doors along each side are opened when there is a film on the screen, and on rainy nights there are curtains over the door. Seven hundred people can be accommodated in the roomy seats, which really are roomy. It is possible for one person to pass in front of another without causing any inconvenience to the person seated. There is also ample elbow room at the side. An orchestra of five pieces plays in front of the main entrance, and there is always a crowd to hear the music. Inside another orchestra plays while the films are being shown. The music is high class, in keeping with everything else about this theater.

Olympia Theater, Para, Brazil.

The owners, Messrs. Teixeira, Martins & Co., are hoping for the day when they can bring their own service from the best markets. At present they are limited to one or two towns besides Pará. The proprietors of the theater also own the Grande Hotel, by far the best and handsomest in the north of Brazil. In the center of the rear of the hotel is the Palace theater, used for general entertainments. The hotel is being enlarged and will occupy an entire city block when finished.

The Olympia service now comes from Rio de Janeiro, and is used in several places before reaching Pará. After Pará there is only one town of importance, Manaos, where Messrs. Teixeira, Martins & Co. have a theater.

The owners of the Olympia have the reputation of being good employers. Every anniversary of the theater sees the receipts of the day given to the employes. Last year the receipts were $800 for one night. Three shows are given, the first at 7.30 p. m., and four reels are given at each show. This makes the show last a little over an hour. The entrance fee is one milreis, about 25 cents. A large number of Italian films are shown, mostly sensational, but it rarely happens that these films are up to the American standard. One of the very best films seen here was a Universal, and the excellence of the work was so great that the owners would have been pleased to obtain more of them. The young men who handle the theater have the American idea of "service," and as usual service pays. J. H. C.

Kleine at 80 Fifth Avenue, New York.

George Kleine announces that the general offices of his motion picture interests are now located at 80 Fifth avenue, New York. This is at the corner of Fifth avenue and 14th street. Telephone numbers 6155, 6156.

Many Mutuals Promised.

Elaborate Subjects to Be Known as Mutual Star Productions Well Under Way.

FORTHCOMING months will see the release by the Mutual Film Corporation of a number of series of big feature attractions, each presenting as the star a noted favorite of the stage or screen. These feature productions will present a wide range of subjects in drama and comedy drama. In addition, Mutual will shortly release the first chapter of a new series, which is to be put out in five releases of three reels each.

These forthcoming productions will be founded on stories by noted authors past and present, or from original scenarios written by well known men especially engaged by the various studios releasing through the Mutual. Each feature is to go to the public under the title of Mutual Star Productions.

Of particular interest is the series of Mutual Star Productions featuring little Mary Miles Minter, youngest of picture stars, who is now at work at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara, Cal. The first six of the Minter features will be released under the following titles and in the order named: "Youth's Endearing Charms," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Faith," "Sunshine," "Fortune," and "Innocence."

"Youth's Endearing Charm," initial of Miss Minter's features, a filmization of Maibelle Heickes Justice's widely read story of the same name, has already been completed under the direction of William C. Dowlan and the little star is now at work on the second of her productions. This one, as with the others to follow, will be screened under the direction of James Kirkwood.

First of the Richard Bennett Mutual Star Productions, featuring the famous stage star, who has been engaged by the American-Mutual studios for a series of six feature productions, will be released shortly under the title of "The Sable Blessing." This is a five-act comedy drama, especially adapted to suit the acknowledged talents of the star, from the story by Aaron Hoffman. Mr. Bennett's second appearance will be as the star of "His Brother's Keeper," another five-act Mutual Star Production of the story by Kenneth B. Clarke, scenarioized by William Piggot.

Florence Turner is scheduled to appear in forthcoming weeks in three feature productions, in addition to the three already released, the latest of which "A Welsh Singer," was recently announced. Her remaining productions are "Grim Justice," adapted from the story of the same name by "Rita," the famous novelist; "East is East," by Captain Philip Hubbard, and "The First Settler's Story," a picturization of the popular poem by Will Carlton. Each of these productions, as with the ones already released, was screened under the direction of Larry Trimble.

First of the series of comedy dramas starring C. William Kolb and Max Dill, long favorites of the stage and vaudeville circuits, went to the public on August 21 under the title of "A Million for Mary." Rea Berger, whose direction of "Purity," the American-Mutual allegorical drama starring Audrey Munson, won him new fame, is personally supervising the Mutual Star Productions featuring these funny men. Additional features starring these laughmakers will be released as follows: "The Three Pals," "The Bluff," "Beloved Rogues," and "Decent Deuces."

Next of the series of Mutual Star Productions featuring Helen Holmes, star of the Signal Film Corporation studios, will be released in the near future under the title of "The Manager of the B. & A." This feature is founded on the widely read railroad story of the same name by Vaughn Kester and, as with all the productions featuring Miss Holmes, is being screened by Director-General J. P. McGowan.

William Russell is to appear shortly in "The Man Who Would Not Die," his fourth feature. This production based on a story of a fight between capital and labor, and presenting Russell in one of the most virile roles he has yet assumed, is an adaptation of Arthur H. Gooden's story of that title. Additional Russell features will be released under the titles, "The Torch Bearer" and "The Love Hermit."

In addition to these features already announced a special series of Mutual Star Productions featuring Margarita Fischer is also announced. Miss Fischer, who enjoys one of the widest followings of any of the picture stars now before the public, has signed a contract by which her pictures will be released through the Mutual by the American Film Company, and will shortly begin work on her first production, "The Pearl of Paradise." These Fischer Mutual Star Productions will be directed by Harry Pollard.

Mr. Pollard is now engaged in the selection of suitable scripts and has announced that several have already been obtained. Miss Fischer will be supported by a specially selected company of players and will work in her own studio at the American-Mutual studios in Santa Barbara.

The Mutual's new series of Gaumont productions will be released under the title of "Fantomas." It is based on the exploits of a notorious Paris criminal. It will be presented in five releases of three chapters each, the first of which will go out on September 7. A noted company of artists are included in the big cast and thrills enough to satisfy the most capricious have been injected into the various scenes of the five episodes.

The stories of "Fantomas" have been running in hundreds of the large papers throughout the country, with a combined circulation of millions daily.

Numerous other big productions starring various noted stars are now in preparation and will be announced shortly by the Mutual Film Corporation.

Paramount Features Long and Short.

Lasky and Pallas Pictures Head the List for First Week in September—Interesting Single Reels.

PARAMOUNT is beginning the third year of its life in a more elaborate way than in the first or second year of its existence. The features on the program for the week of September 4 have more variety and are superior in quality and drawing power. The two five-reel features for the program are the Lasky production of "The Big Sister," in which Mae Murray is featured, and the Pallas production of "The Parson of Panamint," in which Dustin Farnum plays the title role.

Surrounding the two big pictures of the week will be three short reel features, the 30th edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the "magazine-on-the-screen," the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, "The Sunny South of England," and the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon, "Bobby Bumps and the Stork."

Four exceptional feature subjects are pictured in the thirtieth edition of the Paramount Pictographs, including: "Following the Bee Line," "New York's Floating Hospital for Sick Babies," "Yacht Racing in the Park," and "Dueling with the Swordfish."

"Following the Bee Line," gives a unique picture story of how the two well known phrases, "going in a bee line," and "got a bee in your bonnet" came into existence.

"Yachting in the Park" pictures a yacht club in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, where the oldest yacht racers of the country have contests practically every day in the week. They distribute prizes every Saturday. The "Better Babies" subject, which shows St. John's Floating Hospital, is devoted to "How well babies can easily be kept well," which is quite as important in the campaign for "Better Babies" as the fundamental principles that were taught by the "Better Babies" editors of the Pictograph when they pictured "How to Feed the Baby," "Clothe the Baby," "Wash the Baby," etc.

The closing subject is "Dueling With the Swordfish," said to be one of the most exciting pieces of motion picture photography that has ever been presented.

In the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, Mr. Holmes takes his fellow journeyers on a trip to the Sunny South of England. The pictures are all distinctly interesting, for men at the front in the war of nations come from these lands of England, Scotland and Ireland and the travel here is particularly timely.

The Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon comes from the pen of Earl Hurd and tells the story of Bobby Bumps and how his pet pup was disowned by his father when attempting to get back into the graces of their family by the use of the stork, making father believe that the stork was bringing a new baby into their home.

PATHE FACTORY EMPLOYEES HAVE OUTING.

Following the example set by the Pathe Club, the employees of the Bound Brook, N. J., factory of Pathe Exchange, Inc., had a successful outing on Saturday, Aug. 5, at the Palisade Amusement Park. A series of athletic events was run off for which handsome prizes were offered. The committee consisted of W. E. Smith, Arthur Miller, Henry P. Kloss and G. Clyde Somers.

A vote of thanks was extended to J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, for a generous contribution toward the expense of the outing.

Paramount Ends Good Second Year

Good Strides Have Been Made in Perfecting System of Distribution—More Advances Promised During Coming Months.

PARAMOUNT Pictures Corporation, distributors of the productions of the Famous Players Film Company, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photo Play Company and Pallas Pictures, finishes its second year of active life during the week of August 24th. Two years is a short period of time save in the film industry, yet the history of better pictures is in part told by the history of Paramount, for it was the first organization to consistently distribute a program of feature pictures throughout the entire United States. So well was it built upon its foundation of consistent quality, better pictures, better theaters, higher admissions, closed program and protective franchises that today the organization is looked upon everywhere as permanently established.

In the two years of its life Paramount has issued 208 features, two each week, ranging from four to eight reels. The stars and players run into many hundreds and represent the best known players in the industry, for Paramount Pictures are those in which Mary Pickford, Geraldine Farrar, Marguerite Clark, Mae Murray, Lenore Ulrich, Marie Doro, Pauline Frederick, Hazel Dawn, Fannie Ward, Jack Barrymore, Lou-Tellegen, Theodore Roberts, Dustin Farnum, George Beban, Victor Moore, Sessue Hayakawa, Edna Goodrich, Anna Pennington, Myrtle Stedman and other big stars appear.

Paramount began in a small way with its offices in the World Tower Building in 40th street, New York. W. W. Hodkinson, first president and a director of the company today, who had conducted a number of exchanges in the west, brought the idea of a country wide distribution east and was laughed at by all but a few people, such as Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Samuel Goldfish, Oliver Morosco, who were then among the best known producers, and Hiram Abrams, James Steele, William L. Sherry, Raymond Pawley, who were prominent exchange men. The last four men, with Mr. Hodkinson, worked out the plan of distribution for the producing companies and inside of a period of two years they have succeeded in bringing about a perfection of film distribution that was deemed impossible then.

When the idea of Paramount was first formulated in the minds of the men who have carried it to its successful conclusion, five reel pictures were a rarity. These men realized that the feature picture of four, five and six reels was the trend toward which the industry was moving. They stood almost alone in their beliefs; but within a short time after Paramount had been formed, others realized that the feature picture of five reels was what the public wanted.

Besides its features, Paramount has released a new grade of single reel productions, among which are the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, in which is visualized the thoughts of great men on questions of the day, and where are promoted in pictures important civic movements, such as preparedness, better babies, conservation of trees, and the like; the Paramount-Burton-Holmes-Travel Pictures, which are "personally conducted" travel tours by Burton Holmes, the great traveler and travel lecturer, and the Paramount-Bray animated cartoons, all of which have rounded out the Paramount Program.

At all times Paramount has kept its finger on the motion picture public's pulse, and through its criticism blank system has been enabled to determine what pictures and what stars the public desire. These criticism blanks indicate the public's approval or disapproval of the class of pictures that Paramount issues and the importance of this expression of opinion is manifest.

President Abrams in his message on Paramount's second anniversary said: "I leave the first two years to talk for themselves. We know what we have accomplished and everyone else in the industry and the public at large knows what we have done. It is the future we are looking forward to. We have the productions that are the best and our trademark stands for and produces a consistent quality. Now we are going to have the productions presented in the right manner. The producers and Paramount have allied themselves to give the exhibitor a co-operation that he never knew existed. We have accomplished our fundamental aims and have attained our every expectation during the first two years. Our first thought this third year will be the exhibitor. Our better pictures will bring him increased patronage to say the least, and it will be only a short time before he will be increasing his runs from three days to whole weeks and from two days to three and four days, while the bigger theaters will run the pictures for two instead of one week. In Boston this has happened already. It's going to happen in many more cities shortly. It can't help but happen, for the public wants to see the pictures and the exhibitor wants to please the public."

Selig General Films

Week of September 11 to 18 Will Bring Out Some Meritorious Subjects.

WILLIAM N. Selig announces an unusually interesting and meritorious program of Selig productions for the week of September 11 and 18. These picture plays will be released through regular service of the General Film Company. One production that should prove attractive in drawing summer crowds into any theater is "The Pony Express Rider," released Monday, September 11. "The Pony Express Rider" is a multiple reel Diamond Special featuring daring Tom Mix in a strong story of plot, counter-plot, fast riding and sensational marksmanship. "In Jungle Wilds" is a thrilling wild animal drama released Saturday, September 16.

"Into the Northland" will be the Diamond Special, in three reels, to be released by the Selig Company on Monday, September 18. "Into the Northland" features an exceptional cast of players including Lillian Hayward, Fritzi Brunette, Leo Pierson, James Bradbury and others. "A Corner in Water" is a Selig one-reel Western drama with Tom Mix in the principal character role supported by Victoria Forde. The Selig-Tribune, the animated news reel, will continue to be released every Monday and Thursday through General Film Service. All the latest news pictorial events are presented.

The Selig series of Tom Mix Western comedies closed with "Taming Grouchy Bill," released in General Film service Saturday, September 9. One Western comedy was released weekly for ten weeks and proved unusually popular. Exhibitors exploiting this series, each play complete in itself, report excellent business. All these comedies can be booked through General Film service.

J. A. BERST REWARDS PEARL WHITE.

As a reward for her excellent work in "The Iron Claw," J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, has presented to Pearl White a magnificent solid gold mesh bag costing a large sum.

"The Iron Claw" has made a truly extraordinary record in business done and Mr. Berst felt that much of the credit is due to Miss White. She more than any other player has been identified with Pathe productions. All the serials in which she has starred, "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine," "The Romance of Elaine," and "The Iron Claw," have been very successful, not merely in the United States but all over the world. The Pathe Exchange has a steady sale for her photographs in China, Japan, South America, Australia, the West Indies, and South Africa as well as Europe. The bare announcement that she is to appear in another serial directed by Edward Jose, her director in "The Iron Claw," has caused much interest.

When Mr. Berst presented the bag to the little star he said:

"Miss White, the world knows you as 'Pathe's peerless fearless girl.' We know you here as the easiest player to direct and get along with of any we have ever had. Your popularity is deserved and we all of us are for you all the time."

Needless to say Miss White was overjoyed and is exhibiting the gift to all her friends.

NEW MANAGER OF MOSS EXCHANGES.

Philip E. Meyer has been appointed general manager of the B. S. Moss Film Exchanges, taking the place of H. R. Ebenstein, who assumes the duties of the superintendence of the state-rights disposal of the B. S. Moss pictures.

Mr. Meyer, a young man of marked ability and great popularity in the motion picture business, before entering the film industry, was manager for the George Meyer Amusement Company. Was also vaudeville and stock company critic for the "Clipper" and other theatrical organs.

His first experience in the motion picture field was as salesman for the B. S. Moss features, and his ability so impressed itself upon the firm that his elevation is the result.

Mr. Ebenstein has been placed in entire charge of the states rights field, a position to which his intimate knowledge of conditions and faculty for organization fully entitles him.

Lillian Walker as Reporter

Seen in Blue Ribbon Feature Released Through V-L-S-E on Monday, August 28.

IN "The Kid," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature released on Monday, August 28, Lillian Walker is seen as a reporter on a large newspaper. It pictures her adventures, and in this way a number of places of interest in New York City are shown. These include views from the tops of high office buildings, from the busses which travel up and down the avenues and from all sorts of places. Another interesting feature of "The Kid" is the insight it affords into one of New York's daily newspaper plants and shows the workings of the various departments employed in the turning out of a great daily. Added to all these extra attractions is an interesting story of how a young girl finds her long-lost father, but gives him up for the man who has raised her from childhood, when she learns her father's true character.

Wilfrid North is the author and producer of "The Kid." It is a photoplay that will interest and please, for it teaches as well as entertains.

Eulalie Jensen, Ned Finley and Robert Gaillard support Miss Walker in its enactment.

At Leading Picture Theatres

Programs for the Week of August 20 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Hypocrites" at the Strand.

THE five-reel Bosworth photoplay, "Hypocrites," made by Lois Weber, was put on at the Strand theater for the week beginning Sunday, August 20, in place of "Rolling Stones." The picture retains its old power to impress the spectator.

The remainder of the film program was made up of the Strand Topical Review, the Strand Travelogue, a short comedy and a Mutt and Jeff cartoon.

Arthur Aldridge and M'lle Valentine were the soloists.

"The Thoroughbred" at the Rialto.

Frank Keenan in "The Thoroughbred" was the star at the Rialto, and Margaret Thompson headed the supporting cast in the role of Keenan's daughter. The story, by C. Gardner Sullivan, centers around Major Ainslee, who has inherited from his forbears an instinctive knowledge of and love for the horse. Things have gone badly with the Major in recent years through generosity and foolish investments, but he has one hope of retrieving his fortunes—his peerless thoroughbred, "Miss Minta." A young minister, who is in love with the Major's daughter, but who objects to horse racing, almost ruins the Ainslee family. The Weekly Topical service, educational films and a Keystone comedy were also on the program. Mme. Regina Vicarino and James Harrod were the soloists.

"Public Opinion" at the Broadway.

Blanche Sweet was seen at the Broadway theater in "Public Opinion," written especially for her by Margaret Turnbull. Miss Sweet has acted a ragamuffin, a member of the Russian royal household, a Swedish maid of all work, and an anarchist; in "Public Opinion" she is a trained nurse on trial for murder. How a sensational newspaper report prejudices the mind of the public against this young woman, who is absolutely innocent of all wrong, and how her whole future happiness is jeopardized by what is supposed to have been one false step, is shown in an entertaining manner. The usual one reel and educational features were on the bill.

Eighty-first Street Theater Program.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater four new Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Wm. Desmond and Enid Markey in "Lieut. Danny, U. S. A.," and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Bessie Love in "Hell-to-Pay Austin," were the features. A Keystone comedy furnished the lighter part of the two bills.

Ben Christy

AT the present time there is a genius of versatility visiting the United States, Ben Christy, formerly connected with the Royal theater in Copenhagen, Denmark, and also playing opposite the celebrated Betty Nansen at other principal theaters. His specialty lay in character parts and when only twenty years old he impersonated most successfully a man aged eighty. This was a most extraordinary accomplishment considering his youth, and it won for him immediate recognition as an actor of great power and wide scope.

Ben Christy.

As a natural consequence the principal film companies made him advantageous offers, but, like many another great artist, he was averse to appearing in pictures. During a visit to Paris he saw Pathe's adaptation of "Les Miserables," the leading part of which was interpreted by a famous French actor. It proved to be a wonderful revelation and convinced him of the enormous possibilities in pictures, far greater even than those of the stage. He resolved to make a picture himself, which would embody his ideal of exquisite artistry. His first step was to study the motion picture industry, and when he had become master of its details he cast about for a good theme. Finding nothing entirely to his liking after an exhaustive search through the material available, he hit upon the happy plan of creating his own story. His initial effort entitled "Sealed Orders," which appeared about two years ago, was received all over the world as one of the best pictures made up to that time. An absolutely unique feature of this production is that it presents a unity and homogeneity not possessed by any other; for it is the work of Mr. Christy alone. He wrote the story, he directed the picture, enacted the leading role, edited and did all else in connection with the finishing touches, thus making a perfect whole which proclaims it to be the creation of one sole master mind.

Mr. Christy is visiting this country with the object of disposing of another recently completed superb production, embodying all the salients of "Sealed Orders," but surpassing even it.

MEIGHAN RETURNS TO LASKY STUDIOS.

After a vacation of several weeks including a trip to New York, Thomas Meighan, popular leading man of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, has returned to the studios of that concern at Hollywood, California, to begin work at once on a new production in which he will be featured.

The next photoplay in which Mr. Meighan will be seen, however, is "The Storm," in which he appears with Theodore Roberts in the principal support of Blanche Sweet.

GLANTZBERG BACK AT DESK.

Ernest Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has just returned to his desk after making a quick recovery from an operation for appendicitis in the Roosevelt Hospital, New York City. He was stricken while attending the Chicago Exposition, but managed to close up business in Detroit and Cleveland on his return.

"Fans" Pay High in Far-Away Countries

Tom North Receives Interesting Letter Concerning Conditions in Japan, China, and Russia.

AN enlightening insight into motion picture conditions in Japan, China and Russia, in which countries many a picture fan spends over one-third of his day's wages every time he pays admission to a picture house and where he encounters what in this country would be considered hardships, was received recently by Tom North, Seattle manager of the V-L-S-E, from one of the exhibitors he serves, who is traveling in the Asiatic countries.

To the average American who enjoys everything of the best when he attends a picture show, it will be surprising to learn that in Japan there are no seats in picture houses—that patrons sit on the floor, which is reserved just as the seats in American theaters.

Information of value to protagonists of the squashed clause in the Kitchin Bill calling for a tax on picture houses is also given in the letter. For it is learned that in Russia patrons of picture houses pay the war tax on each admission and not the owners of theaters.

The letter says in part: "I have made a complete study of conditions in Russia, China and Japan, and the more I go into the study the more do I find cause for wonder that Americans are not more pleased with what is being done for them in the exploitation of motion pictures.

"In Japan, for instance, where the rate of wages is only a small fraction of what it is in America, one has to pay fifty sen, or half a yen, for a good seat (on the floor). There are no seats and all the people squat on the floor. The prices range from twenty sen to fifty sen a seat, according to its location.

"As a first class mechanic or clerk in Japan gets only one and one-half yen a day, when he spends twenty sen for himself and the same for his wife in admissions to a picture theater, he spends over one-third of his day's pay, but they go just the same, and the show houses are usually packed to the doors.

"In Russia seats range from 45 kopek to one ruble, on each ticket for which there is a war tax. Each ticket has a stamp on it calling for a tax, and the people pay the tax, not the theater owner. This, in my opinion, is a more equitable manner of taxation than our own.

"The ruble in Russia is about equal to the American dollar, and I find that the most patronized seat is the 55 kopek seat, which is about 55 cents in our money. The houses are all making money."

PATHE'S CLEVELAND ORGANIZATION.

In Cleveland Pathe is establishing a model sales organization. C. E. Shurtleff and A. M. Holah, formerly manager and assistant manager of the V-L-S-E Cleveland Branch, have been put in charge of Pathe's office. They bring with them J. A. Conant and Paul H. Tessier who were also members of the V-L-S-E staff in Cleveland. In addition, they have W. H. Windsor, M. J. Glick and A. W. Kurz.

The photographs show from left to right: C. E. Shurtleff, manager; J. A. Conant, assistant manager; A. M. Holah and Paul H. Tessier, city salesmen. These men form the nucleus of the new Cleveland Pathe Exchange organization. They formerly occupied the same positions with V-L-S-E. According to their past performances, they are regarded as second to none in the industry.

"Memory Advertising" the Best

Kalem Official Declares Exhibitors' Memories Longer Than the Press Agents' Adjectives.

"THE proverbial gram of salt is overworked by motion picture exhibitors," declared a Kalem official to a Word representative last week. "Perhaps it is experience that justifies them, but the fact remains that the effect of extravagant advance publicity announcements is nil, advertisements are discounted and even the man-to-man talk of exchange men and solicitors calls for the use of a few grains of salt.

"But there is one kind of advertising that never fails. It is akin to the word of month advertising that is so valuable to exhibitors. I call it 'memory advertising.' Let me show you how it works.

"An exhibitor is induced by the persuasion of an exchange man to run a certain series or to book a production with a certain star. He is skeptical—as he always is until he counts up after the show. The picture is run, and lo and behold, it gets over strongly with his audience.. Patrons stop and ask him when he will have more with the same star or of the same type. He hustles around to the exchange and books all he can to meet the demand. Before long this exhibitor, his clientele, and the exhibitor friends he tells of his success are ever-ready boosters for this star and company.

"Then one day these exhibitors read in their trade paper that the same company is going to present this player in a new production. Then 'memory advertising' gets in its work. The unvarnished news is sufficient—extravagant adjectives are unnecessary. All the exhibitor cares to know is that it is the star and the type of picture that his patrons want made by the same company that succeeded in meeting their tastes so well before.

"Kalem has just experienced a striking example of the effects of 'memory advertising' in releasing 'The Girl from Frisco.' Hardly had the trade papers carried the initial announcements concerning this fifteen weeks' western series starring Marin Sais and True Boardman than General Film exchanges reported enough reservations of bookings to insure its success without the natural increase that was to be expected after the exhibitors had seen the pictures.

"It might have seemed surprising until we learned the explanation. And that was 'Stingaree,' the E. W. Hornung series which we completed several months ago. 'Memory advertising' was getting in its work, as we could see by the letters which we received and which always mentioned 'Stingaree,' True Boardman and Marin Sais. 'Memory advertising' also taught the exhibitor that, though westerns had been scarce on the market, when he showed a real, high-class, capably produced western his patrons had been pleased. That also did its share of work for us and now that the early episodes are released and showing they are completing the job."

GASKILL COMPANY TO FLORIDA.

Charles L. Gaskill, whose company, the Phoenix Picture Players, Inc., will begin to release super-features of from six to twelve reels early in the Fall, left Saturday, August 12, for Orlando, Fla., where a studio will be built large enough to accommodate the extraordinary demands that will be made upon it.

Kalem's Early September List

"Meter in the Kitchen" a Comedy Novelty—Other Releases Promised.

KALEM promises a one-reel comedy novelty in "Meter in the Kitchen," the Ivy Close subject announced for release on Friday, September 8. With the exception of a few scenes at the opening, all of the action of this comedy was photographed at night, the comedy detailing the happenings that followed the shutting off of the gas in a country town.

Director Ellis has been fortunate in securing some unusually striking scenes by the night photography. Henry Murdoch is seen to advantage as the motorman of the town's one and only street-car. Others in the cast are Mary Taylor-Ross and William McKey.

Ham makes his fall bow on Tuesday, September 5, in the one-reel subject, "Ham the Fortune Teller." Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare are also seen in a comedy of gypsies, jealous husbands, and Ham's efforts to bring true the prophecies he makes by means of the cards.

Helen Gibson's initial September release is "The Secret of the Box Car," on September 2. This is followed on Saturday, September 9, by "Ablaze on the Rails," a one-reel hazard for which Director Davis burned a number of box cars to the ground. One of the thrills shows Helen, standing on the seat of a speeding motorcycle, leaping through the air to the hand-rail of a freight.

Two episodes of "The Girl from Frisco" series are already scheduled for release early in September. They are "The Ore Plunderers," issued on Wednesday, September 6, and "The Treasure of Cibola," released the following Wednesday, September 13. For "The Ore Plunderers" Director Horne staged much of the action many hundreds of feet underground in the Yellow Aster Mine, at Randsburg, California. The natural light conditions give a strikingly realistic effect to these mine scenes. Marin Sais dons overalls in this picture, and sets to work as a car-boy in the mine.

Robert Welles Ritchie has taken a Moqui Indian legend as the basis for "The Treasure of Cibola." After considerable effort arrangements were completed for the use of the Pueblo village at the San Diego Exposition as the unusual background for the action. The Moqui legend tells of treasure supposed to have been hidden at a near-by point in the Sierras by Coronado, one of the Spanish pioneers. One of Director Horne's assistants, digging through the library of the monastery at Santa Monica, discovered an old volume in which the legend is told in early Spanish, together with a map purporting to give the location of the treasure. Used in the screen production the volume gives an unusually realistic touch.

Marin Sais and True Boardman continue to be seen in the leads in this series, with the support including Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson, Hart Hoxie and Edward Clisbee.

So it will be seen that a treat or rather a series of treats is in store for the picture enthusiast.

September Bluebirds Definitely Fixed

Four Strong Plays That Will Usher in the First Month of Fall.

THE Evil Women Do" has been decided upon by General Manager M. H. Hoffman, of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., as the title under which will be released the screen version of Emile Gaboriau's famous novel, "The Clique of Gold." Elsie Jane Wilson will be elevated to a feature place in this release, along with Francelia Billington and Rupert Julian. The scenario was furnished by E. J. Clawson and Mr. Julian directed. This will be the fourth release in September among Bluebirds that will start the regular season.

Labor Day "The Unattainable" will be the feature, with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson playing the leading roles. Eugene B. Lewis has devised an excellent scenario from Elwood D. Hemming's story, and the acting company spent several weeks in the Sierra Nevada Mountains to reveal picturesque and natural locations for the settings to an unusual plot.

"Saving the Family Name" will return Mary MacLaren, the heroine of "Shoes," to the friends she made in Bluebird's great sociological drama. The Smalleys directed this feature, and Phillips Smalley will be Miss MacLaren's leading man. Lois Weber made the scenario and produced, with the aid of her husband, a gripping and illuminating screen version of Evelyn Heath's story. This feature is scheduled for September 11.

Edith Johnson will appear as Harry Carey's leading lady in the military drama, "Behind the Lines," to be released September 18. Mr. Carey has abandoned the "chaps" and spurs of the cattle-man to impersonate an army surgeon who falls in love with his head nurse. Henry McRae produced the feature, taking his large company to Mexico for authentic locations. Mary Rider's story furnished the basis of Walter Woods' scenario.

Principals for "Patria"

Milton Sills, Dorothy Green and Warner Oland Appearing with Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria."

THREE important names have been added to the long list of prominent players now appearing on the screen for the international Film Service, Inc. The newcomers are Dorothy Green, famous for her vampire parts, Milton Sills, celebrated leading man of the legitimate stage and the screen, and Warner Oland, the well known heavy. All three are supporting Mrs. Vernon Castle in "Patria," the forthcoming serial of the International.

Mr. Sills was selected by Mrs. Castle as her leading man from a long list of prominent players. As a legitimate actor he is best known for his work in "Just Boys," "The Law of the Land," "Panthea," "The Rack," "Mother" and "Diplomacy." In pictures he played the lead in "Deep Purple," "Under Southern Skies," "A Woman Who Lied," "The Rack" and "The Honor System."

Miss Green, although the youngest woman playing vampire parts (she is just 21), has had the leading roles in a long list of pictures. Included in this list is "The Devil at His Elbow," "Souls Aflame," "Parisian Romance," "A Wonderful Adventure," "Her Mother's Secret," "The Spirit of the Poppy," and "Woman and Wine."

Mr. Oland has been playing heavies so long that he is known as the natural villain. In dramatic productions he appeared with Viola Allen, Sothern and Marlowe, Nazimova and other stars. He also appeared in "A Fool There Was" and "The Yellow Ticket," while his most recent appearance on the screen was in "The Eternal Sapho."

SHIPPING CONDITIONS CHANGED IN BOSTON.

Owing to the great many errors in the shipping and receiving of films in Boston and that vicinity, the managers of the different exchanges of the various producing and distributing companies have held a number of conferences recently with the general manager of the Adams Express Company, resulting in the establishment of a new department in the express offices, and which, during the past month, has practically eleminated the troubles that existed before.

After hearing the stories of the different exchange managers it was decided by the express companies to make a separate department for the receiving and sending of all film, in which three men were placed and orders given to them to attend to nothing else. This hearty co-operation has made it possible to eliminate 95 per cent. of the trouble. The same practice has been installed by all express companies and the troubles of the exchange shipping department are diminishing at the present time.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

CONDUCTOR KATE (Vitagraph), Aug. 14.—When her husband takes on an over-supply of wet goods and is unable to run his car, Kate, his wife, dons his coat and cap and holds down his job for him. As embodied by Kate Price, the lady has little difficulty in collecting fares and restoring order when an attempt is made to rough-house the car. The fun in the reel is broad farce and always good natured. The picture was written by Wm. Addison Lathrop and directed by Edward Stratton. Kate Price fits the title role from every point of view, and is given valuable support by Templar Saxe and Denton Vane.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 65, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 14.—Candidate Hughes and Mrs. Hughes in Detroit; Mr. Hughes addresses automobile makers and attends baseball game; horses of 1st Illinois Cavalry are given a medical bath; Mexicans are made to dig under guard of Illinois militia, El Paso; mud at Brownsville, Tex.; half million hathers at Atlantic City; Willie Ritchie takes to aviation, Del Monte, Cal.; children given lessons in handicraft at summer school, Berkeley, Cal.; main lock connecting Puget Sound and Lake Washington completed at Seattle, Wash.; Candidate Hughes at the Coliseum, Chicago.

HAM'S STRATEGY (Kalem), Aug. 15.—An elopement, during which Ham attempts to carry off the belle of the village with the aid of an aged donkey and cart, is the occasion of the gentleman's display of mental agility. The reel is amusing. A review of the farce was printed in the issue of Aug. 26, page 1392.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, NO. 14 (Essauay), Aug. 16.—Wallace A. Carlson's cleverly drawn cartoons with their good-natured burlesque on the News Weeklies, continue to keep up the same standard of excellence. The present uumher contains, aside from the "Nooz" feature, a Dreamy Dud adveuture and five hundred feet of scenic.

THEIR DREAM HOUSE (Vim), Aug. 16.—A feature comedy in which Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby are the stars, this one-reel satire on the joys ot married life will awaken a responsive chord in hearts of many a spectator. The mishaps to the beautiful home, unloaded on them by the real estate agent, will remind other victims of the way they were stung. The production and acting are both of a high order.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 66, 1916 (Selig), Aug. 17.—Scotch and French troops are rushed to the front at the battle of Somme from Harlcourt, France; enormous 75's and 115's continue their incessant hammering; evacuated German trenches indicate the terrible force of bombardment; Rio Grande De Luxe train brings soldiers to hathe in surf; Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson at Charlottesville, Va., center of Congressional dispute; Rough Riders at New York; 1st Illinois Cavalry at Brownsville, Tex.; shells ahandoned hy the Germans at Maricourt, France; "Pop" Geers, veteran driver, pilots Benington to victory at Pittsburgh, Pa.; children of the elite at Allenhurst, N. J.

LIFE SAVERS (Vim), Aug. 17.—Several of the scenes in this one-reel comedy take place on the bottom of the ocean, and the illusion is skillfully maintained. Plump and Runt are the leaders in the cast and the director has devised considerahle amusing business. The finish is novel.

HE WROTE POETRY (Kalem), Aug. 18.—The title role in this one-reel comedy is played by Henry Murdoch, but Ivy Close is the star. The picture is hroadly comic and Mr. Murdoch does not miss any of the points in his part. Miss Close handles her allotment in good style, and C. D. Peruchl, William McKey and Robert Ellis are competent.

COMRADES (Vim), Aug. 18.—A comic "crook" drama with Pokes and Jabbs as a pair of thieves, this one-reeler has incessant action and is good for a number of laughs. The principal scenes take place in a hoarding house, and the two heroes are mixed up in a love affair, their love for their profession being the means of their undoing. Robert Burns and Walter Stull are as acrobatic and as humorous as ever. Helen Gilmore and Ethel Burton are members of the cast.

THERE AND BACK (Vitagraph), Aug. 18.—Hughie Mack takes up a large portion of the interest in this one-reel comedy, which relates of how a trio of gay young married men attempt to outwit their wife and spend the evening at a lively resort with three charmers. The reel is played with spirit by the entire cast, Mr. Mack working energetically and artistically through the performance. An amusing comedy.

WITH THE AID OF THE WRECKER (No. 98 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), Aug. 19.—A pair of thieves try to rob a diamond importer, but the operator at Lone Point, with the aid of a wrecker and her own remarkable nerves, thwarts them. In accomplishing this, Miss Gihson performs a full program of her unique stunts, and is assisted in the acting hy G. A. Williams, P. S. Pembroke and George Routh.

A BEAR OF A STORY (Selig), Aug. 19.—Vickey makes up her mind that she must have a bear and Tom sets out to get her one. He brings in the bear, but the difficulties he has in capturing him contributo a deal of fun to the reel. Tom Mix and Victoria Forde head the cast, but the bear is right behind them when it comes to the chase or a question of acting. Tom is the author and producer of the reel.

General Film Company Special.

THE GOLD SHIP (Selig), Aug. 7.—A vigorous and well told romance of the sea, written by James Oliver Curwood, this three-reel photoplay holds the attention from start to finish. The dramatic situations and the love story aro blended with skill, the fight which a crippie and a young girl make against a mutinous crew and help the captain of the ship to prevent a consignment of gold from falling into the hands of the men, being one of the big moments of the picture. "A Gold Ship" is ably directed hy Frank Beal and equally well played hy Harry Mestayer, Wm. Hutchinson, Edith Johnson and Sidney Smith.

WORTH WHILE (Essanay), Aug. 12.—There is little of novelty in this three-reel photoplay, but the heart interest is strong and the acting of the cast is excellent. A number of the scenes are laid in the Joliet prison, and the production has been carefully looked after. The story tells of how a young man took a crime upon himself in order to shield the girl he loved. Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, Patrick Calhoun and John Cossar have the leading parts.

THE GERM OF MYSTERY (Selig), Aug. 14.—The plot of this three-reel drama is unusual. It has something of the weird touch that Edgar Allen Poe gave to his stories, and the author has handled his theme cleverly. It deals with high explosives, poisonous spiders and a mysterious assassin, whose capture is brought about in an unexpected manner. The production has heen made intelligently, and the sets are impressive, especially the laboratory scenes. Guy Oliver's performance of the scientist is a character study of merit, and Frank Clark and Fritzi Brunette add strength to the cast. There is a refinement of feeling and a naturalness of method in Miss Brunette's work in this picture that indicates a healthy growth in her artistic stature.

A LESSON IN LABOR (Lubin), Aug. 15.—A review of this picture will be found on another page of this issue.

MY COUNTRY, 'TIS OF THEE (Essanay), Aug. 15.—The call of the national guard to the Mexican border, is the up-to-date theme of this two-reel screen play. The wife of a captain in the militia persuades him to give up his commission and remain at home. On second thought he heeds the call of duty and leaves his wife in a very unforgiving mood. The lady then starts to encourage the attentions of an old admirer, who carries matters to such a point that the husband returns just in time to save his wife's honor. The picture is interesting, spirited in action and the three leading parts are in the competent hands of Richard C. Travers, Sydney Ainsworth and Lillian Drew.

THE TURQUOISE MINE CONSPIRACY (No. 2 of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series—Kalem), Aug. 16.—The new two-reel serial put out by the Kalem Company, has started off at a lively rate of speed. The opening number of the Robert Welles Ritchie stories, featuring Marin Sais, disclosed a firm foundation of plot and production, and the second number carried on the good work. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Aug. 5, page 942.

A LITTLE VOLUNTEER (Essanay), Aug. 19—This three-reel photoplay is an excellent example of juvenile drama. The story of how a wealthy miss hefriends her three little cousins before she knows their relationship to her is interesting and has a number of contrasting comedy and dramatic scenes. Joyce Fair's acting of the little girl is natural and is helped by her charm of person. Hugh Thompson and Edmund F. Cobb head a thoroughly satisfactory support. The production is a high-grade one.

Bluebird Photoplays Inc.

THE UNATTAINABLE (Bluebird), Sept. 4.—A five-part productiou featuring Dorothy Davenport. Unfortunately the story as presented in the picture is hadly constructed, and the action of the picture is conventional. A full review of same appears on another page of the magazine.

International Film Service Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 65, 1916, Aug. 15.—Juvenile foes of dirt, New York; U. S. Public Health officers, Washington, D. C.; drawing blood for infantile paralysis cure, Willard Parker Hospital, New York; the North German fleet, Admiral Scheer on the hattleship Frederick der Grosse; new flexihle automohile, Fresno, Cal.; British soldiers dancing in the gardens of Versailles, France; the beach at Coney Island; French and English troops, Salonika, Greece; diving and swimming matches; with the troops at Nogales, Ariz.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 66, Aug. 18, 1916.—Girls win boat race at Duluth, Minn.; President Wilson and wife meet National Democratic Committee; baby auto race, San Francisco; Tracy Mathewson, Hearst cameraman, leaves New York for the Antarctic; wreck of fast train, Lancaster, Tex.; lady giraffe brought to Bronx Park, New York; Lucile fashions; President Wilson meets railroad employees in attempt to prevent strike; railroad magnates leaving the White House; run on bank at Shanghai, China; arrest of girls in one-piece bathing suits, Redondo, Cal.; Candidate Hughes at St. Paul, Minn.; British kite balloons, Salonika, Greece.

Fox Film Corporation.

SPORTING BLOOD (Fox), Aug.14.— A race track story with some dandy good pictures of the track, its crowds, and the horses running in a race—the details of the horses right in front of their noses as they put out every effort to win the race are fine. A longer review will be found on another page in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY AND THE COUNTERFEITERS (Cub), Aug. 18.—This number of the "Jerry" comedies is not up to the usual standard. Jerry, in trying to escape from policemen, sheriffs, etc., gets into the den of a gang of counterfeiters. The funniest happenings in the picture show him getting the best of all concerned, eventually locking them all up in the den until the arrival of the authorities, when arrests are made and Jerry goes on his way rejoicing.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 85 (Aug. 16).—Interesting items of this number are scenes showing the new floating hospital at Boston, Mutual Weekly tugs following the German U-boat to the open sea, a summer fashion review at Atlantic City, the opening of the Republican campaign in Detroit, Mich., with Chas. E. Hughes starting on his western tour, and the English king and queen attending services in memory of Lord Kitchener at Westminster Abbey.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 49 (Gaumont), Aug. 16.—The subject chosen for this number is Watkins Glen, including the Thousand Islands and Alexandria Bay. This number will be much enjoyed by those who have never visited that delightful spot. On the same reel is a comic cartoon from the pen of Harry Palmer entitled "Kuring Korpulant Karrie."

REEL LIFE, NO. 16 (Gaumont), Aug. 20.—This opens with vivid and instructive photos demonstrating the advance in the use of water power, from the time of the primitive turbine wheel up to the present gigantic transmission plants. The animal studies which follow are also interesting. The short, humorous tail piece did not seem to have much point.

ENCHANTMENT (American), Aug. 21.—A moderately interesting drama, which includes in the cast Laura Sears, Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. The opening scenes are allegorical in style and reflect the idea portrayed in the modern portion of the story which deals with a domestic triangle wherein an artist falls in love with his model.

FARE LADY (Falstaff), Aug. 22.—Of fair comedy excellence, this number shows how a street car conductor plays burglar to please the fancy of a young lady with whom he has fallen in love. To prove the truth of his assertions that he has in his time committed blood-curdling crimes, he has his partner play victim while he robs his own apartment. The police interfere with his fun, and the young lady is disillusionized.

GOING TO THE DOGS (Vogue), Aug. 22.—Rather an amusing farce comedy in which a dog catcher, after vain efforts to ensnare various canine specimens, agrees to accompany a pretty young woman to her home to obtain the money for her dog license. While there the woman's husband appears on the scene followed by the dog catcher's wife. There is nothing new about this comedy, but it contains some amusing incidents

IN A PROHIBITION TOWN (Beauty), Aug. 23.—Mr. Boozley, who loves his rum, is not a particularly pleasant subject for a photoplay. The opening scenes of the comedy are characterized by various efforts to obtain liquor unknown to his wife. In pursuit of his favorite beverage he gets into a den of anarchists who seize him and elect him to throw a bomb into police headquarters. Boozley follows out their instructions to the point of the throwing of the bomb, when he turns the tables and casts it among the anarchists. Quite amusing.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 50 (Gaumont), Aug. 23.—"Quaint Cape Cod" is the subject of this number of the series. Some interesting views of this historic spot are shown, including the home of Miles Standish, his grave, the Plymouth Rock and various other memorial spots in connection with the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers. On the same reel is a Palmer cartoon entitled "Mr. Jocko from Jungle Town."

THE MYSTERY OF THE RIVIERA (Gaumont), Aug. 24.—An unusually well-dressed and well-staged five-part production. Follow this with the employment of an excellent cast and you have a melodrama worthy of any audience. Another delightful point about the picture is the quality of the photography. The story treats of how the feminine agent of a master robber is employed as companion to a wealthy woman, and aids in the confiscation of her jewels. By false accusation the fiance of the woman is arrested for the theft, the proper source of which detectives afterwards discover. The detail work of the production, which, by the way, was made in France, will be much admired.

THE ROOKIE (Cub), Aug. 25.—George Ovey does some very amusing work in this number, which, although not unlike what we have seen this comedian do before, must, at the same time, elicit a laugh from the average audience. There is evident the usual rough comedy, but the scenes where Jerry steals the officer's clothes and falls in line with the rookies is funny.

THE SWISS SEA DOG (Falstaff), Aug. 27.—A burlesque comedy number, in which a girl stenographer inherits a fortune. Rivalry for her hand furnishes the principal action. The riding scenes are best, though the humor only becomes fairly strong.

IN MEXICO (Falstaff), Aug. 29.—A street car conductor, his daughter and son-in-law, go to Mexico on business. They are captured by brigands. Some of the incidents are amusing in themselves, but the plot, as a whole, has a tendency to wander about and hence does not hold the interest very strongly.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE HOLLY HOUSE (American), Aug. 27.—A three-part production based on a poorly-constructed story. In fact, if the effective settings which the picture boasts were taken away, there would be little left. The deserted atmosphere of the old house which has been unoccupied for years, has been arranged to a nicety. The story of Lord and Lady Sylvester, who, financially reduced and estranged from one another, separate, leaving the place in the hands of the gardener and his wife, might have been developed into something interesting. As it is, a young novelist who is seeking a quiet spot in which to pursue his literary work is made the central figure in the story.

EL DIABLO (Mustang), Aug. 18.—A two-part western production featuring Jack Richardson. The story is slight in plot, and not well constructed. The role of El Diablo is that of a bad man who has hatred in his heart for all individuals wearing the badge of sheriff. It later develops that he has been cheated of wife and family by the sheriff of the place where he lived, hence his antagonism for sheriffs as a class.

DESTINY'S BOOMERANG (Centaur), Aug. 19.—A two-reel subject, featuring Wm. Clifford, Margaret Gibson, Frederick Montague and Victor Rottman. As a joke on the father, who desires his daughter to marry a title, a young German poses as a count. Later events prove that he really is one and the girl loves him better than her former sweetheart. This has a well-rounded, pleasing plot and holds the interest throughout. Some of the photography is a little uneven, but it is generally acceptable.

ENCHANTMENT (American), Aug. 21.—This two-reel number, by Anthony W. Coldeway, has an allegorical beginning, showing the growth of love and jealousy between two woodland nymphs over a man. The characters merge into real life. The man, an artist, is married to one and the other poses as his model. He falls in love with the latter and cheapens his art, but the wife asserts herself and the spell is broken. The theme is not very new, but the cast is pleasing and the settings and photographic effects most attractive. Vivian Rich, Alfred Vosburgh, Laura Sears and George Periolat appear.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (American), Aug. 21.—This instalment, chapter 14, witnesses the reunion of Hope and Cleo, through the instrumentality of Hook. All of the incidents are interesting and have a proper hearing on the story. The events during the preparedness parade are well handled. The number closes with an outbreak of trouble between the various conspirators who have also been trying to obtain the secret.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 15 (Mutual Special Feature), Aug. 28.—This number in which Cleo is kidnapped, jumps through a trap door into the water below, and is eventually picked up on the beach by an old sailor, forms the closing episode of the serial. Hope, in a hand-to-hand grapple with Mahlin and Satsuma, throws Satsuma from a window. Mahlin later meets a similar fate at the hands of another. The secret of the submarine at last in the hands of Hope, he and Cleo are nicely rewarded by the government.

NELL DALE'S MEN FOLKS (Mustang), Aug. 25.—A two-part western drama that has an appeal. Anna Little plays the feminine role in her usual charming fashion, and eventually makes a get-away with the man she loves, who is being pursued by the sheriff, while her humble admirer, Zeb, impersonating her lover, is shot to death by the sheriff and his posse.

A MILLION FOR MARY (Mutual Masterpicture de luxe), Aug. 21.—This is the first of the series of five-part comedy productions made by the American Film Co. featuring Clarence Kolb and Max Dill. The comedy contained in this number is clean and good and might be classified under the head of "farce." An unusually clever little dog is one of the important members of the cast. One of the funniest things in the picture is Louie's dream entering the gates of heaven with his companion after they have killed themselves with pills of their own manufacture. Here they meet the little dog plus a set of wings and many of the human beings on whom their pills have had a similar effect.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

METRO TRAVELOGUE NO. 8, August.—An interesting number, containing a wide variety of subjects—Japanese, American and Chinese. There are shown several Japanese dances, participated in by nimble-footed Jap maids. Among these are the dance of autumu and of winter. Incorporated also are the views of the deer drive recently held on Shelter Island, New York, the photographs being taken by the New York State Conservation Commission. Then there are many views of Chinese pageants in the streets of Kioto.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS NO. 3 (Pathe), Aug. 28.—The third installment of this charmingly arranged fashion sheet in film continues to introduce the latest in womens' fashions, from the slumber robe and negligee to the evening gown, the street costume and riding habit inclusive.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 8 (Balboa), Sept. 4. "In Bohemia" is a fairly entertaining number of this serial, and pictures John Burton entering the Bohemian section of a city where he tries to ameliorate conditions, at the same time following his plan of finding out whether or not humanity is in the grip of Evil. Here he falls in love with a young sculptress who is about to be lured away by a fellow artist whose intentions are not of the best.

Paramount Pictures Corp.

LITTLE LADY EILEEN (Famous Players), Aug. 10.—A story featuring Marguerite Clark in a tale of modern Ireland, of fairies and of love. It is a pretty picture, well made and will please. It is reviewed at length in another column.

ROLLING STONES (Famous Players), Aug. 21.—A good, wholesome picture. It is the first Paramount subject to be directed by Del Henderson. Marguerite Courtot also makes her debut as a Famous Players leading woman. The production is reviewed at length in another column.

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), Aug. 28.—"Dueling With a Swordfish" is quite properly given precedence in this issue of Pictographs, for it is an unusual picture of marked interest. Methods used in catching swordfish, large and small, are shown with considerable detail. There is a good human interest quality in the scenes photographed aboard St. John's floating hospital, whereas the racing of miniature yachts on the lake in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, will appeal especially to children.

CLIMBING THE AUSTRIAN ALPS (Burton Holmes), Aug. 28.—The thrills and the perils of mountain climbing are brought home to the spectator in watching Burton Holmes and his party ascending over a snow-covered surface to the highest peak of the Austrian Alps. A really remarkable effect is attained in the scenes showing the sea of clouds below the mountain heights.

THE PARSON OF PANAMINT (Pallas), Sept. 4.—One of the truest, most interesting and altogether creditable of recent pictures dealing with life in a western frontier town. Dustin Farnum gives an entirely sincere performance as the fighting parson. A review may be found elsewhere in this issue.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE PATRIOT (Triangle-Ince), Sept. 3.—A powerful and unusual screen story of vital theme featuring William S. Hart at his best. An original play characterized by fine acting.

GRETCHEN THE GREENHORN (Fine Arts), Sept. 3.—A very bright comedy melodrama, with Dorothy Gish in an attractive impersonation of Gretchen, well supported by a live company.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

JAPAN (Powers), Aug. 31.—Photographed by George A. Dorsey, this reel of Japanese scenes will be extremely worth while to spectators with a taste for travel subjects. Views of famous temples are remarkably impressive and there is plenty of human appeal in the scenes showing the customs of the Japanese. The film was clearly photographed throughout.

THE ELIXIR OF LIFE (Joker), Sept. 2.—This successfully revives the old plot of the professor who invents an elixir of life-giving properties. It transforms sausage into live dogs, eggs into chickens and finally restores a mummy to life. Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others of the Joker company get a lot of fun out of this. The ourang-outang gives some good assists.

ARTHUR'S DESPERATE RESOLVE (Victor), Sept. 3.—A comedy number, by E. J. Clawson, featuring Wm. Garwood and Lois Wilson. The young lover tries in a despondent moment to commit suicide in various ways, but is restrained in each instance. In spite of the grim theme, this is handled in good comedy style and the cast is also pleasing.

THE SONG O' THE WOODS (Big U), Sept. 3.—A mountain story, by Olga Printzlau, featuring Vola Smith, G. Raymond Nye and others. The girl is almost led astray by a stranger, but returns to her mountain lover after hearing her father's story. The plot is somewhat conventional, but the cast is pleasing and the scenic effects so attractive that it proves an enjoyable one-reel offering.

THE BOY FROM THE GILDED EAST (Nestor), Sept. 4.—Hardly on a par with some Nestor pictures of recent issue, but passably amusing as acted by Eddie Lyons, Priscilla Dean and other members of this Universal company. The story concerns a tenderfoot, who goes west on a vacation and is mistaken for a notorious desperado.

THE DESERTER (Rex), Sept. 8.—A sympathetic sketch, written by Harvey Gates, who imagined an incident as it might occur in the European war. A young man, because of his love for his wife, deserts his regiment, but only temporarily. He is inspired to return to patriotic duty by his aged father, a veteran of 1870. Lee Kohlmer gives a particularly able performance. Settings are atmospheric.

THE DEACON STOPS THE SHOW (Joker), Sept. 9.—An ordinary single reel, based on the old idea of a deacon's weakness in succumbing to the allurements of the girls in a burlesque show. Although practically the same story has been told many times before, another repetition may be kindly received. Gale Henry, Lillian Peacock, Milburn Moranti and Charles Conklin are in the cast.

MOUNTAIN BLOOD (Big U), Sept. 10.—There is nothing new in this story of moonshiners and the girl who tries to save them from the revenue officer. It has all the ingredients that one expects in a picture of the type, including a fight to the death at the close. Molly Malone, George Berrell and Jack Nelson are in the cast.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

LIBERTY, CHAPTER 2 (Universal Special), Aug. 21.—If subsequent chapters of this serial equal the first two in exciting action, another melodramatic success will be added to the Universal list. There is an almost unbroken succession of exciting incident in these two reels, including a number of fights and considerable expert horseback riding, to which Marie Walcamp contributes her share. The story is readily followed and in producing the picture Director Jaccard missed no opportunities for sensational effects.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, NO. 3 (Universal Special Feature), Aug. 28.—A two-reel number, by Wallace Beery, featuring Carter De Haven as Timothy and Robert Milash as his handy man, Jeff. There are some amusing scenes in the boarding house, where they do their own cooking over the gas. They get work with the Skystone Film Company, but Timothy's work is so coarse that a big chase is started with everybody in pursuit of him. The number proves quite entertaining, though depending more on small business than plot.

THE RIGHT CAR BUT THE WRONG BERTH (L-KO), Aug. 30.—There can be no question about the laugh-provoking quality of this two-part slapstick comedy, in which Dan Russell is surrounded by an able company. The fun in the first reel develops in a fashionable ladies' tailoring establishment where the philandering proprietor makes love to every woman in sight. Better yet is the comedy in a sleeping car and that on a drawbridge, which carries several struggling men high into the air. As a slapstick number this production may be strongly recommended.

THE DESERT RAT (Bison), Sept. 2.—A two-reel Western story, by Gertrude B. Mason, featuring Romaine Fielding, Ruth Jones and Jack Lawton. The tale conceras an old character on the desert who finds his own son under unusual circumstances. The plot goes over familiar ground and has not been very strongly worked out. There is a certain weird attraction in the story, however; the glimpses of the giant cactus country at the beginning are well worth while. The subject has both strong and weak features.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, NO. 4 (Universal Special Feature), Sept. 4.—A two-reel number, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Carter De Haven, Robert Milash, Vola Smith and Helen Leslie. Timothy's efforts to get a moving picture job are amusing. He takes the part of chief crook in some underworld scenes and puts them all to the bad. The latter part of the production is not so pleasing as the first, though there are occasional good scenes. A little more definite plot would have strengthened this number.

THE NARROW PATH (Red Feather), Sept. 4.—A five-reel number, by Catherine Carr, featuring Violet Mersereau, Niles Welsh, Clara Beyers and others. This is almost identical in plot with a recent Red Feather release, entitled "The Heart of a Child," except that it has American instead of English settings. The story is an entertaining one, telling of the rise of a slum girl, who becomes a popular actress and marries the man she loves. Violet Mersereau is attractive in this role. The settings and general presentation are good throughout.

THE CODE OF THE MOUNTED (Gold Seal), Sept. 5.—A three-reel story of the Northwest, by Jacques Jaccard, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan, Ethel Phillips, Buck Connor and Norbert A. Myles. Love and jealousy in the mounted police constitute the theme around which much exciting action centers. The private, sent to arrest the girl's brother for murder, stands between love and duty. The latter wins, but later he rescues the girl from the hands of the scheming sergeant. The closing scenes are dramatic and well-handled. A picturesque number, breathing the out of doors.

LIBERTY, EPISODE NO. 3 (Universal Feature), Aug. 28.—The first reel of this two-part episode, containing a battle scene on a generous scale, is well up to the promise of the opening instalments. Director Jacques Jaccard gained many fine effects in depicting the attack on Discovery that is conducted in a spirited fashion. The second reel, while less thrilling, advances the story to a situation filled with possibilities. Marie Walcamp appears to be one of the most daring heroines of serial fame.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

ATHLETIC FEATURE FILM COMPANY, NO. 8 (V-L-S-E), Aug. 14.—This week's report of what is being done by the champions in the various lines of sport is as wonderfully interesting as usual. It begins with a glimpse of Mrs. H. Arnold Jackson showing finess at golf. Then there's a bout between Willie Ritchie and Lee Steffans. Best of all to many will be the exhibition of wrestling by Frank Grotch, who skillfully falls Jim Essen twice. There are two swimming matches, one in which Norman Ross wins a 220-yard race with ease and one in which Miss Olga Dorffler takes honors from a large field of mermaids.

THE FOOTLIGHTS OF FATE (V-L-S-E.), Aug. 21.—A Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature from Louis Joseph Vance's book that will surely interest and can safely be counted upon. Naomi Childers and Mark MacDermott have the leads and are ably supported. Its a story of theatrical life and tells the trials of a young aspirant before she becomes a great actress. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

World-Equitable.

THE RAIL RIDER (World-Paragon), Aug. 21.—A good story, very well produced by Maurice Tourneur, with House Peters and Zena Keefe heading the cast. The plot deals with the rise of a locomotive engineer who brings about the undoing of the dishonest manager of the road. Scenes photographed on a small road running through the mountains are particularly attractive. A review may be found on another page.

HUSBAND AND WIFE (Peerless-World), Aug. 28.—A modern society drama based on the stage play by Charles Kenyon. The story is above the average of its class, and the company under Director Barry O'Neill is excellent, with Holbrook Blinn and Ethel Clayton playing the leads. A review appears elsewhere.

Miscellaneous.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY, NO. 1, (Consolidated), Aug. 21.—"The Brand of Satan" is the title of the first episode of this new sixteen-episode serial, in which Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin are featured. The basis of the serial is an experiment by Dr. Montrose by means of which he has hoped to develop genius in human beings. Instead he finds that it germinates crime. Pierre La Rue, who becomes his master, is a criminal of the worst sort, and in his power the scientist is forced to do his bidding. This serial promises to be interesting. The novelty presented therein is the sudden conversion of the eyes of La Rue into balls of fire at will.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY, NO. 2 (Consolidated), Aug. 28.—"In the Power of the Demon," as this number is called, shows Dr. Montrose further pressed even with an aching conscience to administer his crime breeding treatment to agents of La Rue, whose wanton killing of citizens becomes alarming. The serial continues to wax interesting.

Universal Film Corporation

ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 33 (Universal), Aug. 16.—Candidate Hughes on tour, inspection of weights and measures in New York, swimming contests and numerous war side lights furnish subjects for this entertaining number.

FIVE LASKY PRODUCTIONS IN AUGUST.

Changes during the past week in the forthcoming releases on the Paramount Program give to the exhibitors playing Paramount Pictures five Lasky productions in the month of August.

The addition to the four previously announced is Fannie Ward in "Each Pearl a Tear." The Lasky productions for the month and their release dates are as follows:

"The House with the Golden Windows," in which Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely are co-starred, August 3d. Blanche Sweet in "Public Opinion," August 17th; Sessue Hayakawa in "The Honorable Friend," August 24th; Lou-Tellegen in "The Victory of Conscience," August 28th, and Fannie Ward in "Each Pearl a Tear," August 31st.

LOCKWOOD AND ALLISON FINISHING "MISTER 44"

Harold Lockwood and May Allison, co-stars, and Director Henry Otto are at present busy at the new Metro-Yorke studio in Hollywood, California, filming the last of the interior scenes to be used in "Mister 44," a forthcoming Metro wonderplay. The company began work on the interiors immediately on their arrival a few days ago from Lake Tahoe, California, where the exteriors for the five-part production were made. Exteriors predominate the pictures, the story being a compelling romance of the great outdoors picturized from the novel by E. J. Rath.

FOREIGN WAR PICTURES FOR MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 85.

The Gaumont Company has just received from Paris some entertaining pictures of France under war conditions. These are to be attached to Mutual Weekly No. 85, showing how Paris celebrated the Fourteenth of July, which corresponds to our own Fourth of July. There are also views of captured German soldiers, and pictures of ships seized by Portugal when that country declared against Germany.

Scene from "The Crisis" (Selig).

"THE HIGHER DESTINY" (Essanay).

This is one of the strongest heart interest dramas produced by Essanay for the month of September. It has a strong cast, including Warda Howard, one of the most emotional actresses on the screen, Sydney Ainsworth, Edward Arnold, Gertrude Glover and Patrick Calhoun. It is the story of a man who wins the girl he loves by slandering his rival. Afterward he cruelly neglects and wrongs his wife, but finally awakens to his wrongdoing. Physically wrecked by dissipation he sees no other way to bring her happiness than to end his life. This he does. The girl finally wins to happiness when she meets her first sweetheart again.

NAT GOODWIN IN "THE MARRIAGE BOND."

The Unity Sales Corporation will release the first week in September "The Marriage Bond" produced by the Mirror Films, Inc., and starring the widely known Nat C. Goodwin. Mr. Goodwin is supported in "The Marriage Bond" by Margaret Green, who has had wide experience both on the stage and on the screen.

"The Marriage Bond" gives Mr. Goodwin a splendid opportunity to entertain lovers of the films, because there is no man in the country who knows more about "marriage bonds", etc., than this popular actor.

The story finds Mr. Goodwin playing the part of John Harwood, a well-to-do clubman. Jane Wilton breaks her engagement with the man she truly loves and weds Harwood for his money. However, she is unable to give up her lover and a tragedy ensues when she attempts to rid herself of Harwood.

Through the subsequent events in the story, largely brought about through the aid of Harwood's little son Jack, whom he idolizes, Harwood is led to forgive his erring wife and redeems her through his great love; so that at the end of the story we have the blessed triangle of father, mother and son united through overpowering affection.

The story is in five parts and is replete with striking photographic effects and scenes.

"THE PRINCELY BANDIT" (Universal).

Grace Cunard on September 9th will be seen in "The Princely Bandit," a two-reel Bison drama localized in Russia. And just to have her "color" right Grace bought herself a Russian wolf hound. These dogs have a natural antipathy for camera men, probably inherited from their forbears of the daguerrotype and paleolithic age, and Grace's land shark has an exceedingly nasty expression for the cameraman who took his picture.

The story of "The Princely Bandit" introduces Francis Ford alternately as the adventurous scion of a royal house and the leader of a band of mountain brigands. Francis robs the rich of his retinue to help the poor and his adventures constitute an interesting part of the play's action. Grace Cunard is cast as a princess who finally discovers that her royal sweetheart is playing a double game. She holds him up at the revolver point and a marriage follows.

"YOUTH'S ENDEARING CHARMS" IN SIX REELS.

Announcement is made by the Mutual Film Corporation that "Youth's Endearing Charm," first of the Mutual Star Productions featuring Mary Miles Minter, will be released in six reels instead of five as originally announced. This action was decided upon when the feature was projected in the American Film Co., Inc., studios, where the production was screened. Nearly 10,000 feet of film were used in this adaptation of Mabel Heickes Justice's story, selected as the first of the Minter Star Productions, and it was deemed best, in order to present as closely as possible every detail of importance connected with the story, to release it in six reels.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"BEHIND THE LINES" (Bluebird).

For the purpose of diversifying their program, Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., will introduce a military drama, Sept. 18, with Harry Carey, Marc Fenton and Edith Johnson the featured ones. Mary Rider's published novel was used as the basis of Walter Woods' scenario and the matter of direction was intrusted to Henry McRae. There will be an unusual amount of thrilling horsemanship displayed in the battle scenes and skirmishes and Evelyn Selby will be particularly in evidence for many extremely daring exploits in the saddle.

The Mexican situation is pictorially discussed in "Behind the Lines" and to give authenticity to the scenes, Mr. McRae took his company to Lower California where the military features were pictured in authentic locations. It is expected by the manufacturer that this feature will capitalize the martial spirit that is now awake in every community, and as the relations between the two Republics seem likely to be paramount issues for some time to come, there will be an increasing advantage in showing this Bluebird in the regular program.

Edith Johnson now makes her first appearance as a star in this series and Harry Carey for once discards "chaps" and spurs to play the role of an army surgeon who falls in love with his head nurse. L. C. Shumway will represent a Mexican spy; Marc Fenton will impersonate a Mexican diplomat and Ruth Clifford, Mill Human, Lee Hill, E. N. Wallack and Lee Hanford will have prominent roles in a large company.

MORE TERRITORY FOR "THE SPOILERS."

The Friedman Film Corporation, of which Benjamin Friedman is general manager, has added to the territory controlled for "The Spoilers" by the purchase of the rights in Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska. The new de luxe edition of the famous Rex Beach story is said to be drawing better than ever in the western states, for in many respects the production now being offered is an improvement over earlier prints. Mr. Friedman is having no trouble in finding plenty of exhibitors who are anxious to show the twelve reels.

"CLIMBING THE AUSTRIAN ALPS" (Paramount).

This Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel-Picture, "Climbing the Austrian Alps," begins at Saltsburg, the birthplace of Mozart. Here Mr. Holmes takes his party mountain climbing, sometimes by rail through the clouds, sometimes roped to each other and the guides. After practicing on the lesser peaks, the travelers are taken to the pinnacle of the Gross Glockner, one of the highest peaks of the Austrian Alps, across snow fields and glaciers. In a short fifteen minutes you get all the thrills and excitement of many hours, without any of the perils, cold or inconvenience of actual mountain climbing. Few travelers have stood on the peak of the Gross Glockner, 12,460 feet above the sea, yet in the company of Mr. Holmes hundreds of thousands of American "easy-chair journeyers" will gaze upon the world below from this lovely pinnacle.

RIALTO FILM CORPORATION INDEPENDENT.

The statement has been circulated with some appearance of authority that the Rialto Film Corporation, financed by Detroit capital and of which Jesse J. Goldberg is vice-president and general manager, has contracted to release its future output of features through one of the larger distributing or program concerns. Mr. Goldberg denied the statement and said that although negotiations had been pending and are still pending with two program releasing concerns for a series of features that no contract has yet been entered into and that he could not tell at this time as to whether the productions of the Rialto Film Corporation will be disposed of before or after their completion.

"THE HONORABLE FRIEND" (Lasky).

Having recently created an unusual personal success in the Jesse L. Lasky production of "The Cheat," in support of Fannie Ward, and in the stellar role of "Alien Souls," Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, will be seen in "The Honorable Friend" on August 24th on the Paramount program. It is a thrilling photodrama written especially for him by Elizabeth McGaffey and adapted by Eva Unsell.

Sessue Hayakawa is a splendid type of the modern educated Japanese. In Japan his parents had planned that he should become a naval officer in the service of the Mikado, but Hayakawa thought otherwise, and took up the study of drama. Coming to this country he studied drama at the University of Chicago, and then returned to his native country with Japanese translations of the English classics. He was the first Japanese to appear in Shakespearean productions in that country.

Later he returned to this country and met beautiful little Tsuri Aoki, whom he married and she is always seen as his leading woman in Japanese productions.

Recently the wealthy Japanese of Los Angeles presented

Scene from "The Honorable Friend" (Lasky).

Hayakawa with a theater where he appears from time to time at the head of his own Japanese company in modern drama.

In "The Honorable Friend," Hayakawa is seen as a young Japanese gardener working for a wealthy and unscrupulous Japanese curio dealer. The old man is desirous of a bride and sends Hayakawa's picture, as his own, to Japan and Hayakawa is sent to the dock to marry the Japanese girl, having been told that she is to be his own wife. When he brings her before the wealthy old curio dealer, his ideals are shattered as he is informed that she is to be taken away from him. How affairs are finally adjusted and the dishonorable curio dealer receives his just deserts and the two lovers are reunited, is presented in an unusual and most dramatic manner.

VIM COMEDIAN PROVES PROWESS WITH RIFLE.

Louis Burstein, who directs Vim comedies, is constantly working into his scenarios the things that his stars do better than the average man and makes them part of the action. Babe Hardy, who is "Plump" in the Plump and Runt series of Vim comedies, weighs as much as four ordinary men, but is a wonderful rifle shot in spite of his bulk.

In the new Vim comedy "Stranded," just released, Plump and Runt run afoul of the artillery practice and their boat is sunk. They reach an island on which a rich merchant and his family are encamped. The girl is kidnapped by the villain, who makes off in the sail boat, and here Babe shows his prowess, for with the second shot from shore he breaks the rope which holds the sail and stops the runaway boat.

Many stunts seen in Vim comedies that look like tricks and trifllings with the camera, are the real thing and cause much speculation among audiences as to how they are done. Vim comedies are released on the General Film Program, by the Melies Manufacturing Company.

"WHAT WOULD YOU DO IF—" FROM LIFE (Gaumont).

The clever little queries which have been appearing in "Life," the humorous weekly, "What Would You Do If——" have been making a decided hit on the screen as tabloid photo-dramas in Gaumont's Magazine in Film, "Reel Life." These have been directed by Edwin Middleton with the same throughness and skill that he devotes to a Gaumont five-reel feature. The question is asked pictorially, and the answer is left for the spectator. "Reel Life" Number 18, presents a short photoplay which is typically melodramatic. The spectator is asked what he would do if he loved his wife, and returned to find her in the arms of another man, and found—after shooting his wife—that he had walked into the wrong house, and he had shot a woman in the arms of her fiance.

Among the players interpreting this clever and unexpected little conceit are Rose Ludwig, John Hopkins, Charles Coghlan and Mary Cunningham. Some of these players are seen in other tabloids in the same series, as the Gaumont company has developed a small stock company for the presentation of these little plays. "Budd" Ross is appearing as the leading comedian, and Miss Iva Shepard has a prominent part in a number of the playlets.

"Reel Life" Number 18 is a notable single reel, since its main feature is "A Day With the Yachtsmen." This pictures the cruise of the New York Yacht Club and some of the races which make this annual event one of the big aquatic gatherings of the year. Another division of the same reel tells in pictures of "A City Farm." This shows what may be done on a small plot of ground in a city by one who is skilled in intensive farming.

NATIONAL CARBON DISTRIBUTED BY P. T. E. CO.

The Picture Theater Equipment Company, of 1604 Broadway, New York, advise that they carry in stock a large quantity of National projector carbons in all sizes, and they can be obtained in case lots or by the hundred.

They also have a stock of the New National Silvertip Negative Carbon that is justly called the magic carbon, owing to the very fine results obtained on direct current. They furnish free with the silvertip carbon a bronze adapter. They also claim to have a fairly good supply of Electra pink label carbons, 5/8x12 cored and 1/2x12 solid.

"THE COUNTRY THAT GOD FORGOT" (Selig).

William N. Selig announces a change in plans concerning the release of the Selig Red Seal Play, "The Country That God Forgot," written and directed by Marshall Neilan. This stirring drama of the Western desert solitudes was announced for release through V-L-S-E on Monday, August 21.

Mr. Selig states that the five reel drama will not be released through V-L-S-E and that the date may be changed.

"This drama is so unusual, so excellent in my estimation," stated Mr. Selig, "that I am planning some extraordinary exploitation and a new method for release.

Scene from "The Country That God Forgot" (Selig).

"I would like to say that I consider 'The Country That God Forgot' one of the best five reel productions ever released—I bar none. The cast is a carefully selected one, led by Tom Santschi, who is supportd by George Fawcett, Mary Charleson, Charles Gerrard, Victoria Forde, Will Machin and others. Santschi has a role that will rival his 'McNamara' in 'The Spoilers.' The photography, the acting, the story are all A No. 1, and there are some strictly unusual and startling climaxes.

"I want every exhibitor to view 'The Country That God Forgot' when it is released, for this production, if I do say it myself, sets a new standard in five reel dramas."

The new release date and the method of releasing "The Country That God Forgot" will be announced in due time by the Selig Company.

A TRIP TO BERMUDA (Metro).

One of the most striking features in the weekly series of Metro Travelogues is the release of travel film in Bermuda, which is aptly called "Nature's Fairyland." This series is not only entertaining and instructive, but will prove a revelation in many other respects to persons who take the trip for the first time with the motion picure camera. An interesting feature is shown after the start by steamer from New York. In the space of a few seconds' time the comparative location of New York and Bermuda, the brief time it requires to reach the latter from the home of Father Knickerbocker, the climate and other data are flashed upon the screen in a telling manner.

This travelogue was officially compiled and produced under the supervision of William H. Denney, for a department of the Bermuda government, and the pictures are shown for the first time on the Metro program. Among interesting features shown are the homes of the late Mark Twain, President Woodrow Wilson, Dr. Charles W. Eliot, William Dean Howells, Frances Hodgson Burnett and the old home of Tom Moore, the poet.

OHIO FEATURE FILM GETS IVAN FILMS.

Arrangements have been concluded between the Ivan Film Productions and John Pekras, president of the Ohio Feature Film Company, whereby the latter will become exclusive distributors of all Ivan productions in the states of Ohio and Kentucky.

The Ohio Feature Film Company was organized by John Pekras, the largest theatre owner in Columbus in which city he operates the Dreamland, Hippodrome, Rex and Broad Street Theatres. Elyria, Ohio, is another city in which Mr. Pekras controls several motion picture theatres, the most notable being the American.

Offices of this company have been opened in the Belmont Building in Cleveland and in Cincinnati. Other offices will be opened immediately in Louisville, Ky. The first Ivan subject to be released will be "The Faded Flower," the all-star cast Ivan. This will be followed by "Her Husband's Wife," after which "The City of Illusion" and "The Immortal Flame" will be released.

"THE BOY OF THE GILDED EAST" (Universal).

There is a scene in "The Girl of the Golden West" in which the hard-pressed hero takes refuge in the attic. Sorely wounded, he does not notice that his gore is dripping through the cracks at the feet of the pursuing sheriff below. He is betrayed by that inadvertence.

In "The Boy of the Gilded East" Eddie Lyons plays a similar role, but instead of spilling his own gore he tips over a bottle of California grape juice. Lee Moran, the sheriff, discovers the scarlet tell-tale pool and Eddie is dragged down to retribution.

"The Boy of the Gilded East" is genuinely funny. It gets the honest chuckles where slap-stick comedy merely entertains. It is an unusually delicious travesty on a certain type of western play which simulates realism.

Scene from "The Boy of the Gilded East" (Universal).

Written by James Dayton and produced by L. W. Chaudent, it serves principally to display the capers of Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean, "the prettiest girl at Universal City." The story, in short, tells of a New York soda dispenser who goes West to seek a gold mine and is mistaken for "Two Gun Harry," who poses in his hold-up excursions as a tenderfoot from the East.

"THE LIGHT OF LOVE" (Metro).

Only five principal characters are required to tell the story of "The Light of Love," Mabel Taliaferro's latest Metro wonderplay, being produced by Rolfe Photoplays, Inc. These are true types of the rugged life of the Maine coast, where the action of the drama is located.

Miss Taliaferro, with her supporting company and with Edwin Carewe, who is directing all Miss Taliaferro's pictures on the Metro program, are now at one of the most picturesque spots on the coast of the Pine-tree State, where a lighthouse is necessary to protect seafarers from treacherous rocks.

The lighthouse figures prominently in the development of this unusually powerful drama, and Miss Taliaferro, in her character in the play, has to do the actual work of caring for the light, to warn vessels at sea. Miss Taliaferro's remarkable versatility, and her ability to cope with any situation, real or fancied, is sufficient guarantee that she will please not only motion picture patrons, but satisfy by her realism those who know intimately the manipulation of the coast lights.

Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf have supplied the diminutive star with this latest vehicle for her undisputed talents, and June Mathis, one of the ablest scenario writers in the country, has translated the work of the collaborators in terms of the motion picture studio. "The Light of Love" will be released late next month.

CHAPLIN IN "THE COUNT."

Charlie Chaplin again proves his right to the title of the world's funniest man and demonstrates that as an originator of inderous situations he is without a peer in the fifth Mutual Chaplin two-act comedy, "The Count."

The inimitable comedian returns to the type of motion picture farce in which he gained his fame and is seen in his familiar baggy trousers, cutaway coat at least two sizes too small, his dinky derby, diminutive moustache and slender cane, not forgetting the celebrated brogans.

During the action of this hilarious comedy, Charlie introduces many new bits of business sure to provoke laughter in the most staid and dignified. Fat men particularly should not see this picture as they loosen the screws in the seats, but if there is anything in the ancient quotation "laugh and grow fat," thin persons will perceptibly increase their embonpoint.

Scene from "The Count" (Mutual).

Assisting in the fun making are Edna Purviance, Eric Campbell, Leo White and Charlotte Mineau and others who add much to the gaiety of the nations.

"VACATION ON THE FARM."

Lule Warrenton and her company of child actors and actresses are finishing a one-reel comedy drama entitled "Vacation of the Farm," in which the children play the leading roles. Mrs. Warrenton is making pictures using children in all of the parts and especially for the younger ones of the motion picture audience.

"OUT OF THE MIST" (Selig).

"Out of the Mist" is a Selig Diamond Special in three thrilling reels, produced by Wm. Robt. Daly, from the story written by Emma Bell, and released in regular service through General Film Co., Monday, August 28. A very able cast of players enact the various roles, and these players include Fritzi Brunette, Wm. Scott, Guy Oliver, Frank Clark and Lillian Hayward.

Scene from "Out of the Mist" (Selig).

The story, in brief, has to do with the love of a shipping clerk for a stenographer. How the girl becomes a successful model for artists; how she refuses to listen to the voice of the tempter; how she finds her mother, and how she attains the love of the once clerk, now a successful attorney, are only a few of the details of this unusual drama of plot and counterplot, stirring situations and smashing climaxes. The photography and scenic effects are worthy of unusual mention.

MORE FLORIDA FEATURES PROJECTED.

Word comes from the Florida Feature Films Company at Miami, Florida, that encouraged by the favorable reception by the critics of their first offering, "The Human Orchid," on which bids from state rights buyers are now being considered, that work will begin next week on their fourth five reel production. Thos. J. Peters, who is now giving his personal attention to the business end of productions, states that the title for the fourth subject has not yet been decided upon, but that following the set policy of his company, the play chosen is along lines found to be in popular demand.

The second and third features of the Florida Feature Film company "The Toll of Justice" and "Fate's Chessboard" have both been completed, but will not be shown until most of the territory for "The Human Orchid" has been sold. The reason for this as explained by Mr. Peters is to avoid confusion and at the same time give the buyers of the first feature an opportunity to test its pulling power in ample time to submit their bids for the future releases of the company. This as he explains is one of the measures taken by the Florida Feature Film company to protect the buyers of their features in their respective territories.

"RUTH RIDLEY RETURNS" (American).

In the history of crime there are many black marks against the judiciary of all nations for prison sentences inflicted upon innocent persons, because of circumstantial evidence which pointed toward them as guilty.

Fiction for years has been directed against this deplorable practice; and fiction is now being sturdily backed by the motion picture campaign, which, if possible, is even more eloquent in its sermon because of the convincing force of illustration in excess of the strength of the printed page.

"Ruth Ridley Returns," is the title for the three-reel drama produced by the American Film Co., Inc.. under its "Flying A" brand, which is a powerful photoplay on this theme. The cast headed by Edward Coxen, Lizette Thorne and George Field, is well known for the strength of its productions.

All who are interested in the furtherance of fair practice in the courts of the world will do well to see this picture for its educational value regarding the discouraging influence of unearned prison sentence. It is to appear on the Mutual Film schedule August 14th.

"THE PAINTED LIE" (Horsley).

Announcement is made that the big military Horsley-Mutual photodrama starring Crane Wilbur, originally announced as "Somewhere in Mexico," will be released under the title of "The Painted Lie." This production, the locale of which is divided between Mexico and New York, was written by Mr. Wilbur and is being screened under the direction of Robert B. Broadwell.

The story of "The Painted Lie" is one of the most unique ever worked into a photoplay production, in that it deals, from a new angle, with the important Mexican situation which is now engrossing the attention of the Washington diplomats. In several of the scenes, actual clashes between Mexican bandits and American troops are shown, these having been filmed by the cameraman attached to the party headed by the star which visited Mexican soil to film several of the exteriors. In support of Mr. Wilbur will be seen such well-known Horsley-Mutual favorites as Mae Gaston, in the chief supporting role to Mr. Wilbur, Harris Ingraham, Ida Lewis, Marie Corteaux and others.

EXTERIOR SETTINGS COMPLETED FOR "HER SURRENDER."

The entire Ivan company under the direction of Ivan Abramson, who went to Asbury Park for exterior locations for "Her Surrender," the next all star cast Ivan feature, has returned to New York City after completing the filming of the settings required by the scenario.

The beautiful sunken Italian gardens located on the Duveen estate at Asbury Park were employed and several novel lighting effects were obtained on this spot. The swan colony which inhabits a lake on the estate gives added atmosphere to the picture.

Among those of the company who made this trip were Anna Nilsson, Rose Coghlan, Harry Spingler, William H. Tooker, Wilmuth Merkyl, Frankie Mann, Sue Balfour, Arthur Prisco and Director General Ivan Abramson.

MUTUAL ANTICIPATING BIG BUSINESS WITH "FANTOMAS."

The vast publicity which has been given "Fantomas," the series of French detective stories which have been running in newspapers this summer, has already created a big demand for the Gaumont pictures which Mutual will release as a series beginning September 7. This is the first three-reel series ever released in America, and the Gaumont company has already begun the printing of the first episodes since an unusual number of prints have been ordered to satisfy the demand for early runs. There will be five episodes, and then a second series will follow which is also in three reels but in a greater number of episodes.

"HUSBAND AND WIFE" (World Film).

Another of the William A. Brady stage successes to be released on the World Film program is "Husband and Wife," the Charles Kenyon piece which played at the Playhouse the entire season of 1915, with such well known stars as Robert Edeson, Montagu Love, Dion Titheradge, Emmett Corrigan and Olive Tell playing the leading roles.

In producing this play for the screen, Mr. Brady not only personally supervised the entire taking of this picture and the scenarioizing by Gardner Hunting, but also cast in it several of the stars who appeared in the original Broadway production. Emmett Corrigan, Dion Titheradge and Montagu Love play in the film version, the same roles which they made famous on the speaking stage.

Others appearing in this really all-star cast include Ethel Clayton, Holbrook Blinn, Gerda Holmes and little Madge Evans. It was directed by Barry O'Neill, while Mr. Brady himself attended to all the arrangements for the film production. Having himself seen to the proper development of all the details of this play for the stage, he also looked after these same details in the screen version, thereby assuring all of the same technical correctness which marked the Broadway performances.

MORE GEORGE ADE FABLES.

President George K. Spoor of Essanay announces that he will shortly issue in one-reel films the George Ade fables now appearing in current numbers of the Cosmopolitan Magazine. These fables are absolutely the latest work from the pen of the famous Indiana humorist and undoubtedly are even better than his earlier masterpieces. In magazine form they were illustrated by John T. McCutcheon, the famous cartoonist.

Essanay has been filming the Ade fables for some years with increasing success. It declares that the popularity of the unique comedies has grown to such an extent that they are now among the greatest selling single reel offerings in the market. The best players in the Essanay stock company appear in them. A strong cast multiplies the effect of the situations called for by Ade's amusing writings. Warda Howard, featured in numerous Essanay photoplays, has just completed a fable, and Harry Dunkinson, well known Essanay comedian, is another star who is now appearing in these brilliant offerings.

Notes of the Trade

DEPENDENCE upon their policy to make the play "the thing" gives Bluebird wide latitude for the selection of players, as they are independent of the enthrallment of "stars." This gives them a chance to cast pieces in conformity with the especial talents of players and brings these new leading women to the stock company in future releases: Ruth Stonehouse, Elsie Jane Wilson, Dorothy Davenport, Roberta Wilson, and retain Louise Lovely, Ella Hall, Mary MacLaren and Francelia Billlington among the bevy of Bluebird beauties.

Douglas Gerrard is directing "The Coward," a one-reel drama, at Universal City, in which the leads are played by Francelia Billington and himself. The story is by Fred Myton of the Universal City staff.

Director P. C. Hartigan is filming the "Burglar," a one-reel comedy written by R. A. Dillon of the Universal City staff, starring Harry Depp with Yvette Mitchell playing opposite.

Florence La Badie has just finished "The Fear of Poverty," a Thanhouser feature to be released through Pathe. In this picture Miss LaBadie plays two parts--a mother and her daughter. Nearly 1,200 feet of double exposure work was necessary before Director Frederick Sullivan finished the feature.

The story is by Agnes C. Johnston, author of a tale of a happy girl bootblack, "The Shine Girl," in which Gladys Hulette is being starred.

Two of the most important roles in "The House of Mirrors," a Mutual multi-reel drama featuring Frank Mills, fall to children, one of whom is just seven and the other six and a half years old. They are Jack Curtiss and Runa Hodges.

Mr. Frederick Palmer, for years connected with the Keystone companies, has been added to the staff of the Vogue Films, Inc. Mr. Palmer will devote all of his time to writing two-reelers of the comedy-thrill class, with an occasional special feature.

In Essanay's August releases will be found two of George Ade's funniest fables, "The Fable of Books Made to Balance" and "The Fable of How Wisenstein Did Not Lose Out to Buttinsky."

Director Henry McRae is busy at Universal City filming a two-reel Mexican border drama entitled "The Oppressed," written by Ben Cohn and William Parker. Edith Johnson and Harry Carey play the leads with Evelyn Selbie, a circus bareback rider.

To Our READERS

Commencing with this issue of the Moving Picture World the price per copy will be fifteen cents (15c). This change is made absolutely necessary on account of the greatly increased cost of paper, engraving and printing. Every reader will find this paper easily worth the difference.

For the present the yearly subscription price of three dollars will remain the same. As the saving in cost between the yearly subscription rate of three dollars and the above single copy price—which will amount to $7.80, figuring fifty-two copies at 15 cents per copy—is considerable, we suggest to our many readers throughout the country the advisability of sending us their subscriptions at once. A considerable saving will thus be made in addition to receiving the paper earlier each week.

Portland's New Elm Theater

Metropolis of Pine Tree State Will See the Opening of a Beautiful New Theater by September 11, if Things Go Well—Finishing Touches are Now Being Put On—Some of the Interesting Details of the House.

By John Flannigan, 147 Park View Avenue, Bangor, Me.

PORTLAND, MAINE.—Indications point now to the opening of the Elm theater, Portland's newest amusement house, just a step out of Monument Square on the street after which it is named, by Monday, Sept. 11. Plasterers and decorators are busily putting the finishing touches on the interior these days, and the new house, located in the very center of the city, and erected at a cost of $75,000, will soon be receiving its first patrons. The policy for the present is pictures, and the management says: "We want the finest pictures that we can get."

The new house is arranged to seat slightly over 1,000 people, a little over 600 of whom will find seats on the main floor, and the rest in a comfortable balcony. There is not a post anywhere, neither on the main floor or in the balconies. The view of the screen is to be absolutely unbroken. The slope of the floor is of slightly more than the usual degree, making it almost impossible that any person in front can obstruct the screen view, even though the person be tall.

The main floor opens flush off the street through a lobby floored in terraze and with marble wainscoting on the sides. At one side of the lobby is the ticket office, and on the other side a check room where an attendant will be on duty at all times. The main floor is of concrete, and there will be an aisle down each side and none in the center. The stage is made large enough to accommodate any kind of a show it is desired to put on, and on either side of it are dressing rooms and toilets. There are also dressing rooms under the stage.

In the big balcony a very unusual feature is to be embodied in that instead of stumbling up the aisle when the house is darkened during the run of a picture, it will be possible for people to see the steps plainly by means of lights and glass set in the upright part of each aisle step, this glass lighted from behind by an electric bulb. Just enough light is given to show the surface of the steps plainly and do away with any hesitatation in the dark.

Undoubtedly the outside front of the house is one of the most beautiful in this state. It is done in gray fire brick with concrete trimmings with an ornamental stone Face of Mirth as the keystone of the big arch which embodies both window and doorway. Hundreds of electric lights will outline the whole front as well as the copper finished marquee which extends over the entrance. This marquee is suspended by massive copper chains.

A large tree made of electric lights will be one of the unique features of the front of the house. This sign of the tree is 28 feet high, and will be lighted with green in the summer and red when the leaves turn in the fall.

The decorating contract has just been let to Theodore Logan & Son and work is to commence immediately. Blue and gold will comprise the color scheme for walls, cornices, frescoes and ceiling.

Thomas Williams Now Heads Palace.

Bangor, Me.—Thomas Williams, formerly manager of the Nickel theater, is now manager of the Palace theater on Exchange St. Mr. Williams announces that the house has been thoroughly renovated and will cater chiefly to women and children. This theater is using Universal films.

$30,000 House for Westbrook.

Westbrook, Me.—The Maine Amusement Company of Rockland has purchased from Ovide J. Fortin of Westbrook the Star theater property, also two tenement houses in the rear of the theater, situated on Central Street, where they will build a fine playhouse which will cost about $30,000, according to Manager Fred M. Eugley. It is Mr. Eugley's intention to entirely remodel the present theater and build an addition in the rear which will have a seating capacity of 900 persons and a stage 20 feet deep and 42 feet wide, enabling the presentation of all kinds of theatrical performances, including vaudeville, musical comedies and road productions.

Up to date heating and lighting and ventilation systems will be installed and the very latest lighting system which changes the colors of the lights of amber, red, blue, etc., to blend with the pictures. The management plans to continue their first class motion picture policy as well as booking road attractions from time to time.

The Star theater was subleased to the Maine Amusement Company of Rockland by Hugh M. Warren of Pembroke in May, 1914, at which time the present manager, Fred M. Eugley, took charge and made his home in Westbrook.

The firm of Jackson & Salomonson of Boston have drawn the plans for the new playhouse.

Dover to Have Another Theater.

Dover, Me.—Dover is soon to number another motion picture house among its list of amusement places. Work was started recently upon the foundations of a new structure on the southerly side of Main street. The initial construction work included only the foundations, floor and a portion of the side walls and will be conducted as an open air theater by its proprietor, A. N. Merrill of Foxcroft, who is also manager of the Star theater. At the close of the outdoor season this will be converted into one of the most up-to-date motion picture houses in the county. This structure measures 45 by 70 feet and will accommodate 600 people comfortably. It will be entirely without posts and the floor is of the sloping type.

Charles M. Stern, manager of the New England Universal Film Exchange in Bangor, has returned from a visit to Boston, where he conferred with Mr. Mullen, new manager of New England Universal exchanges. Mr. Stern reports business is the best ever.

The Park theater, Bangor, Stephen Begrett, manager, is showing Laskey and Triangle pictures at the present time. Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland" proved a wonderful attraction there last week and the five reel Triangle feature, "Reggie Mixes In," with Douglass Fairbanks as the hero, was another remarkable photoplay. With such bills as these the Park will surely prosper. The Park has found the sale of buttered popcorn to be an important side line. Hundreds of bags are sold every day.

Entertainers Must Follow Public Taste

Talk by Manager Larsen of the Keith New England Theaters on Keeping Up With Times Is Echoed by Boston Film Men.

By William M. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Robert G. Larsen, general manager of the Keith theaters in New England, says that the vaudeville of the future will comprise bills of headliners only. He says the mediocre acts will be cut off altogether, leaving only the top-notchers.

In view of the movement among moving picture men to raise the standard of picture production, Mr. Larsen's remarks in setting the standards to be followed in vaudeville houses is pertinent and timely.

"Vaudeville audiences are becoming harder and harder to satisfy," said Mr. Larsen. "They are demanding novelties as well as acts of higher quality. In a way it is like running a newspaper—we must constantly watch the public taste that changes every few months and give the latest style in acts as a newspaper must give the latest news.

"For instance, there was a craze in monkey acts a few years since. So we booked Consul, Peter the Great, and some other monkeys. Then came the society dance craze. At once we secured the Castles and other dancers of the ballroom type. Fashion shows became the vogue in New York. So we gave two or three here. The public went crazy over the cartoonists like Bud Fisher, Goldberg and Winsor McKay. They played our circuits soon afterwards.

"Where two or three years ago one headliner to a bill was the rule; now we play three and four headliners every week."

The remarks of Mr. Larsen, say local moving picture exchange managers, show the progress that must be made in moving picture houses. Instead of one good picture to a show and several mediocre ones to fill in, the bill of the future will consist of nothing but pictures of the best type available. The producers, they say, must also keep up to the style and news of the day in their pictures.

H. G. Segal Organizes New Company.

Boston, Mass.—H. G. Segal, recently manager of the New Film Corporation, has organized the Globe Feature Film Corporation with headquarters at No. 16 Piedmont street, Boston. Associated with Mr. Segal are Benjamin J. Shoolman, one of Boston's most prominent attorneys, and Edward D. Levington, a well known Boston real estate man. Among the first releases of the Globe Feature Film Corporation will be "The Prima Donna's Husband," featuring Holbrook Blinn, also the Ella Wheeler Wilcox photoplay, consisting of a two-reel series each week.

New Incorporations.

Boston Mass.—The following new moving picture corporations have filed papers of incorporation with the secretary of state:

New England Photo Plays Company of Boston: Francis J. D. Ferguson, Edward H. Kelly, George E. McNamara, capital, $90,000.

Globe Feature Film Corporation of Boston: Benjamin J. Shoolman, Edward D. Levington, Harry G. Segal, capital, $25,000.

Acme Photoplays, Incorporated, of Worcester: William A. Svollen, Samuel G. Nash, J. Willis Parmenter, $10,000.

W. H. Patton Heads Local G. F.

Boston.—A number of important changes in the management of Boston Film exchanges have just taken place and others are about to follow. The most important change is that at the General Film. After the resignation of E. J. Farrell from the General Film several months ago the position has been filled temporarily by H. E. Lotz of the New York office of the General Film. Mr. Lotz came to Boston only as special representative. He is now succeeded in the management of the office by W. H. Patten, formerly assistant manager of the Mutual Film Exchange. Mr. Patten assumed charge of the General Film this week. He had been with the Mutual company for four years and before that time was an exhibitor in New England. Mr. Patten is a Boston man and is thoroughly acquainted with the New England exhibitors. He had traveled a great deal over the New England territory. Mr. Patten takes the management of the General Film with the best wishes of hundreds of New England exhibitors.

Pinkham Assistant at Mutual.

Mr. Patten's successor as assistant manager of the Mutual Film is Ralph Pinkham, who for many years has been head booker for the Mutual. Mr. Pinkham is one of the best versed men in the film business in Boston and made his start with Mr. Frank Howard, the pioneer of the moving picture business in Boston. He was formerly with the General Film and with R. D. Marson.

C. R. Seeley Visits.

Boston.—C. R. Seeley, general manager of the Pathe Exchange of New York, is a visitor in Boston. He has been looking over the affairs of the Boston Exchange and it is expected that a new manager will be placed in charge of the office shortly. Samuel Bernfield, formerly manager, it is said, will go to the west coast as manager of the Mary Pickford features.

Will Reopen Dreamland.

Boston.—Harold Barton, who formerly held the lease of the Dreamland theater in Beverly, will reopen that theater on Labor day. He will run pictures only and the theater is being thoroughly refurnished for the opening.

Plague Puts Burden On Theaters

Baltimore Exhibitors Confer With City Health Officers—Consider Latter's Action Drastic Since It Bears Solely on Picture Shows—Make Claims of Perfect Sanitation for Their Houses.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The drastic action which has been under consideration by the Maryland State Board of Health to fight the Infantile paralysis plague and which was prepared by Health Commissioner Dr. John D. Blake, went into effect in this city Wednesday, August 16th. This action was finally decided upon by Dr. Blake after a conference which he had with Mayor Preston on the subject. The order prohibits all children under 13 years of age from attending any moving picture theaters until further notice. The orders were distributed through the police department to the managers of the moving picture houses of Baltimore on Monday, August 14th.

In order to give the proprietors of these theaters adequate time to prepare for the new regulation, it was thought advisable not to make the order effective until the second day after distribution. During the week beginning August 7th, five deaths from the scourge were reported to the Health Department. There is also under consideration a regulation prohibiting the use of drinking glasses in public places. The category of such places would include saloons, restaurants and soda fountains.

Theater Managers Ask Hearing.

Quite unexpectedly on August 14th, at the instigation of Thomas F. Goldberg, a committee was formed which included Guy L. Wonders, E. H. Reddish, Joseph Brodie and A. E. McCurdy, for the purpose of approaching Health Commissioner Dr. John D. Blake to ask that the representatives of the moving picture industry in Baltimore be given a hearing so their side of the case might be presented in its true light before the edict which will bar children under 13 years of age from attending the moving picture theaters has gone into effect.

As a result of the activities on the part of these men, Dr. Blake granted them a hearing at 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning, August 15th, while the regulation was held over until the outcome should be ascertained.

The men stated that it was not their idea to oppose an order which was to be placed in effect for the good of all, but that they thought the order very drastic in view of the fact that it had been placed only on moving picture theaters. It was suggested by the delegation that inspectors should be appointed by Dr. Blake to investigate the ventillating conditions in the theaters and that those not meeting the requirements be closed, while others, coming up to specifications, be allowed to remain open.

On Tuesday, August 15th at 11 o'clock a. m., a delegation, including most of the leading moving picture exhibitors of this city, headed by Thomas L. Goldberg, went to the offices of Health Commissioner Dr. John D. Blake for a hearing in regard to his order barring children under 13 years of age from attending moving picture theaters until the infantile paralysis plague is wiped out. Exchangemen of this city and one from Washington, D. C., also attended the hearing.

Among those in the delegation were: Exhibitors: H. Moorehead, W. Tyler, T. J. Bohannon, H. Lewy, A. B. Price, H. Cluster, J. J. Hartlove, G. S. Benjamin, J. Rabinovich, F. H. Durkee, C. F. Habighurst, Levine Bros., Nick Burns, Chas. E. Anderson, G. L. Wonders, Messrs. McCurdy and Kolb, B. Rosenbaur, F. G. Schlichter and Mr. Langville. Exchangemen: Managers P. Oletsky, Baltimore Film Exchange; E. R. Price, Triangle Film, Washington, D. C.; H. E. Reddish, Baltimore Pathe Exchange; W. G. Evans, Baltimore Mutual Exchange.

After being heard in the matter, Dr. Blake decided to extend the ban to all theaters in the city. So after conferences with the other city officials it was decided that the regulation would probably continue in effect until the scourge has been stamped out of New York, Pennsylvania and other Eastern states.

The order has been passed and was sent out on Saturday, August 19, and became effective on Monday, August 21st. Rumor has it, however, that the theatrical men will join the moving picture exhibitors in a fight which may be waged against the carrying out of the order and that a test case will be tried in the courts if necessary. It is contended that the barring of children from these places of amusement is too drastic. This regulation, however, has been approved by Mayor Preston and it is understood that the Law Department is prepared to defend any action which may be taken against it. The order reads as follows:

"Until further notice, children under 13 years of age are forbidden to attend theaters or any moving picture theaters, or moving picture exhibitions. Parents and guardians are hereby forbidden to permit their children under 13 years of age to attend any theaters or moving picture exhibitions. All proprietors, managers and operators of moving picture parlors, theaters, exhibitions or halls are hereby forbidden to permit any child under 13 years of age to attend any exhibitions, theaters, moving picture theaters, parlors or halls while this regulation is in force."

State Taxes are Due.

Baltimore, Md.—The earnest attention of owners of moving picture theaters and exhibitors is called to the new radical change which has been made in the State Law, chapter 630, Acts of 1916, which was approved by Governor Harrington on April 18th last, which provides that interest will be charged on all State taxes if not paid by property holders before September 1st. Notice has been given by the State Collector of Taxes.

Another item of interest to those of Baltimore city is that a number of bills that are owed the city by people who have had the Health Department abate nuisances on their property, which range from a few cents to over $25, are being called to the attention of the legal department. All over $20 have been given City Solicitor Field, and those less have been handed to Elmer M. Harper.

G. L. Wonders Visits New York.

Baltimore, Md.—Guy L. Wonders, manager of the Wilson theater and president of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, went to New York during the week of July 31st, and while there visited a number of studios and met many of the cameramen who went to the scene of the munitions explosion on Black Tom island to secure pictures. Mr. Wonders also went over to the island himself to take a look. He is now telling several interesting stories told him by the cameramen who took the pictures.

The "Ramona" Benefit.

Baltimore, Md.—Through the benefit performance which was given of "Ramona" at Ford's opera house on Thursday, August 4th, the amount of the proceeds from the sale of seats which was received by the Milk and Ice Fund, for whom the benefit was given, amounted to $322.50.

Burdensome Health Restrictions

Philadelphia Exhibitors Feel Loss of Children's Patronage When City Health Authorities Put Ban on Attendance of All Under Age of Thirteen—They Are Still Glad to Do All That's Needed Against Plague.

From Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Build ing, Philadelphia, Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Proprietors of moving picture theaters throughout the entire city of Philadelphia were served with official notice from the Department of Health and Charities on Friday r orning, August 11, 1916, to close their establishments to children under sixteen years of age until further notice. This most severe restriction is due to the plague of infantile paralysis, which has recently invaded this vicinity and which has caused terror to spread throughout the city and its suburbs. Many deaths have already been reported and hundreds of cases are being treated in local hospitals.

This restriction comes as a great burden to the moving picture industry at this time. A larger percentage of the attendance at moving picture exhibitions at the afternoon summer shows is composed of children whose parents, wishing them to be off the street during the warmer part of the day, send them to the neighborhood theater to enjoy the pictures in a cool and restful manner. Now that Dr. Krusen has employed such severe methods to restrict the rapid growth of the disease it may readily be seen how the profits of the exhibitor will be annihilated. Many of the exhibitors have decided to close until the restriction is removed and some have decided to forego the usual afternoon matiness. It is only the large exhibitors whose business will not be seriously affected by the ban on children.

However, although their profits will be seriously lessened, the majority of local exhibitors are heartily in accord with the measure and are willing to do everything in their power to help the officials combat the dreadful disease. Many of the theaters have been thoroughly fumigated and every precaution has been taken to prevent any chance of the patrons running a risk of contracting the plague.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Plague Closes Theater.

Wissahickon, Pa.—Mr. Jefferies, who conducts several moving picture theaters in Wissahickon, Pa., has closed his doors until the ban recently placed upon children under sixteen years of age is lifted. During that period Mr. Jefferies intends to have his establishments renovated throughout and much additional equipment is to be installed.

Norfolk Drops Plan To Censor Films

Exhibitors Pledge Support to City Authorities in Clean City Campaign—Show Why No Censorship Board Is Needed.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street N. E., Washington, D. C.

Norfolk, Va.—As a result of an agreement entered into by the motion picture interests of Norfolk, Va., whereby they are to refrain from the showing of suggestive pictures, the campaign looking to the establishment of a motion picture board of review has been dropped, at least temporarily, and Major I. Walker Truxtun, president of the Board of Aldermen, has withdrawn his proposed ordinance that would have created the board.

There has been considerable controversy over the subject in Norfolk for some time, the major and others contending that some of the pictures shown upon the screen in their city were unfit. The exhibitors have held that the best pictures only were booked and all were passed by the National Board, and often by other reviewing authorities before reaching the city, while if any films having a tendency to corrupt the morals of the people, which were lewd or indecent, should slip in, the power lies with the mayor and police department to step in and stop such exhibition.

The exhibitors pledged their support to the city government in a city clean campaign, urging that they did not desire to show that which would corrupt morals, but declaring that if called upon to support a board of review as contemplated, with the heavy taxes they are already forced to bear, there would be a number of theaters that would have to close their doors because no profit could be made from operating them.

There were several conferences in the matter and recently the exhibitors, through their attorneys, Moe Levy and Tazewell Taylor, have come forward with the following resolution:

"Whereas, we, the undersigned Owners, Operators and Managers of the Motion Picture Theaters in the City of Norfolk, Va., sincerely appreciate the spirit in which Mr. I. Walker, Truxtun and others have advocated for the City of Norfolk, Va., a policy of eliminating the presentation in the said City of Norfolk of photo-plays which will have tendency to shock and affect the morals of the community, and

"Whereas, It is our policy to maintain a high standard presentation of photo-plays in the City of Norfolk, Va., and co-operate with Mr. Truxtun in this movement, and

"Whereas, We recognize that the laws on the statute books are sufficient to enable the Mayor and Police Department of the City of Norfolk, Va., to properly safeguard the public against the presentation of any lewd, immoral or improper photo-play, and

"Whereas, It is our desire to co-operate with the Mayor and City Police Department whenever they know of any violation such as hereinbefore recited,

"We, the undersigned, do respectfully, on our part, agree that we will not contract for or allow to be presented, in any of the theaters in which we are interested, any immoral or sex-problem photo-play."

(Signed),

Otto Wells, manager Wells theater; M. Hofheimer, manager Strand theater; J. D. Hofheimer, manager Arcade theater; Don P. Trent, manager Ghent theater; George Karanicholas, manager Granby theater; Theo. Karanicholas, manager American theater; J. H. Nutter, manager Columbia theater; S. L. Harris, manager Bonita theater; E. Kohn, manager Manhattan theater; Harry Hofheimer, manager Palace theater; J. H. Nutter, manager Star theater.

In commenting upon the above agreement, Mayor Truxtun declared it to be in his opinion eminently fair and stated that in all probability it would prove more effective than any legislation in the matter could possibly be, and for that reason he withdrew his pending ordinance, feeling that there is no further occasion for any censorship of the pictures that are to be shown in Norfolk.

Will Film Cities in U. S.

Norfolk, Va.—The Little Visits Corporation is an organization recently formed by Norfolk business men which plans to make motion pictures of the various cities of the United States and exhibit them throughout the country as educational films. The officers of the company are Paul T. Collins, president; J. D. Hank, vice-president, and C. R. Keiley, secretary and treasurer. The company proposes to begin the series with pictures of Norfolk and recently submitted its plans to the advertising club and the Chamber of Commerce.

Newport News, Va.—Henry Koch, of the Onyx theater, has gone to Saratoga Springs, N. Y., where he will remain for several weeks.

Norfolk, Va.—The Wells theater made a large number of friends for itself recently when it presented to all patrons at its Friday and Saturday matinees during a showing of "Her Fighting Spirit," with autographed portraits of Billie Burke, the attractive star in that photoplay.

The Gate City Picture Company, of Greensboro, N. C., has been granted a charter of incorporation to engage in a general photographic film business. The authorized capital stock is $5,000 and $1,000 has been subscribed by Julian Price and others.

Atlanta News Letter

J. R. MacEachron Joins World Film.

ATLANTA, GA.—J. R. MacEachron, Jr., who has been with the Colonial Film Company as traveling representative, has joined the World Film force in the same capacity, and is now working under the direction of Joe Marentette, general manager, boosting Brady-made and other World feature pictures.

Anti-Tuberculosis Shows Go Well.

Atlanta, Ga.—The series of open-air motion picture shows conducted by the Anti-Tuberculosis Association in suburban sections of Atlanta has proven a phenomenal success.

The pictures, which were given three nights each in ten different communities, including both white and colored, were witnessed by audiences that averaged five hundred people a night. Reels of pictures for the entertainments between lectures were donated by the Consolidated Film Company, Mutual Film Company and Worlds Film Company.

V-L-S-E at Vaudette—Triangle at Criterion.

Atlanta, Ga.—The Vaudette theater announces the exclusive first run Atlanta franchise of the V-L-S-E beginning August 14th, while the Criterion theater announces from the same date it will be the Atlanta theater to show first run of Triangle plays. These two theaters are perhaps the best patronized in the city; only recently the Vaudette changed managers, while the Criterion is Atlanta's newest theater.

Two Local Film Offices Move.

Atlanta, Ga.—R. M. Savin, president of the United Film Service, of Atlanta, which has been located for several years in the Rhodes building, will move at an early date to the corner of Walton and Fairlie streets, in the quarters formerly occupied by the V-L-S-E.

Manager William C. Brandon of the V-L-S-E will move to the Film building, further down on Walton street.

The Savoy theater, which for some time past has been showing the very excellent Universal program, announces that beginning Monday it will take on the General Film program as well.

New Prices at the Knickerbocker.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Wassman's Knickerbocker, the new $85,000 playhouse, has inaugurated a new scale of admission prices. The old rates were 10, 15 and 25 cents, but under the new arrangement all seats during the daytime bring 10 cents, and after 6.30 P. M. 15 cents. The palatial new theater is running the Triangle and Fox programs exclusively, and is drawing overflow crowds day after day. Although a 1,200 capacity house, by eight o'clock both the Sixth avenue and Boulevard entrances are jammed with patrons waiting to get inside, and Manager Wassman recently signified his regret that he had not utilized the adjoining property when laying his plans.

Watch Out for These Films.

Memphis, Tenn.—On July 1st the United Film Service shipped to one T. H. Stamps at Lafayette, Tenn., the following single reel subjects: "The Hello Girl of Angel Camp," "Harvest Romance," "The Villain Still Pursued Her," and the "White Pirate." Repeated efforts to locate these films have been of no avail, although the matter has been placed in the hands of county authorities at that point. The United Film Service requests that exhibitors and exchange men kindly advise the Memphis office if these reels come to their attention, or if the whereabouts of the consignee are made known.

Film Men Play Baseball.

Memphis, Tenn.—The baseball bug has been buzzing loudly in the ears of the Memphis film folk for the past few weeks, resulting in the organization of a league, the players consisting exclusively of film men. At present general and mutual companies comprise the league, but the Consolidated and United exchanges will be added shortly. The teams are evenly matched, as each has won two games. The last so far played resulted in a victory for General by the score of 9 to 7. The bright features of this game were the pitching of Manager Brown of the Mutual office, and the classy backstopping of Catcher King, manager of the local General branch. Treece and Cooper, bookers for Mutual and General, respectively, were the slugging stars, each ringing up two singles and triple during the game.

Unicorn Closes Memphis Office.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Unicorn Film Service Corporation opened a distributing office in Memphis about two months ago, with Sam Shurman as manager. However, it was found that their business in this section did not justify the maintenance of an office here, and E. L. Hammerstein came down from St. Louis to wind up the affairs of the local branch. The office was closed on August 12th, and future business in this territory will be handled out of the St. Louis exchange.

Big Pictures on Lyric Time.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—With assurance that the lyric will reopen this season with a number of stage successes, comes the announcement that the open dates have been filled with motion picture bookings comprising many of the really big productions of recent months, including such features as "Civilization," "Ramona," etc. The playhouse has been thoroughly renovated, and Chattanooga men exclusively are behind the project. It is understood that Howell Graham will assume the managerial reins.

Novel Chaplin Devices at Elite.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Elite's marionette caricatures of Chaplin which appear with each new Mutual release include an appropriate display for "One A. M.," the latest release. A huge hall clock with a continous stroke of one occupied the center of the lobby, to which the staggering Charles held with one hand and groped for support with the other, being operated by electricity. Granville Rives, scenic director for the Crescent Amusement Company, is responsible for the ingenious deviees.

Nashville Follows Strand Idea.

Nashville, Tenn.—Adopting the policy of the New York Strand, the Crescent theater of this city has designated certain weeks in which to feature return engagements of the most popular productions. During the week "Wildflower" and "Tess of the Storm Country" were offered, and the hearty response accorded these two pictures encourages the management to continue the new method. Incidentally, this marked the fifth exhibition of these two features in Nashville.

Theater Changes Hereabouts.

Nashville.—The Victoria theater has been closed down for the present. It will probably reopen in the fall.

Memphis.—The Bellevue and Popular airdomes have been closed by Nathan & Frank, due to the inclement weather.

Washington's Exchange Problem

Another Proposition to Build a Big Central Exchange Building in the Capital City Brings Up Interesting Discussion—Why Local Film Men are Shy of Long Leases—Why Such a Building Would Pay.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Another attempt is being made to float a proposition that will result in the erection of that long-talked-of film exchange building in Washington. This, the third building placed on paper, it is understood, would be located somewhere in the neighborhood of Fourteenth street.

The main difficulty seems to be in getting the film companies to sign a lease for a term of years that would warrant the investment of capital in a special enterprise of this kind. The promoters want to be reasonably sure of a tenancy that will safeguard their interests, but the film people hold out offers of leases of but one or two year-terms. There are too many uncertainties in the business to become tied up for too long a period with a lease for any sort of quarters.

Every time it is contemplated to establish a new exchange in the city of Washington and every time an exchange already located here desires to move to other quarters they run up against the proposition of fire laws, insurance and such engineering problems as whether or not the floors are sufficiently strong to support the weight to be placed upon them. Washington is practically devoid of lofts suitable for the film business. The erection of a film exchange building would obviate all of this.

In all probability should such a building be erected, newcomers to Washington would be referred to it by the city authorities and in fact it may be that some of the quarters at present occupied would be condemned as unsafe and the recommendation made that the business be removed to the fireproof structure. Thus if capital is willing to pin its faith in the permanency of the motion picture business, it would seem as though these backers need have no fear that the space provided will remain unoccupied for any length of time.

The building here under consideration would be six stories in height and of course would be fireproof throughout, equipped with vaults and all facilities that are required for the proper conduct of the film business from this viewpoint. Its advantages are apparent—safety from fire loss, low insurance rates if insurance is desired, quicker express service by reason of the fact that with all exchanges in the same building deliveries and pick-ups could be facilitated, and exhibitors would find it much easier to transact their business with all of the renting concerns under the same roof—and it would be a great boon for operators when returning shows at night, who now have to traverse many blocks with heavy packages if the show happens to come from certain of the exchanges.

Triangle Branch Opened In Capital City

J. H. Bunter Establishes Triangle Film Corporation Office at 708 Thirteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.—Sketch of His Career.

Washington, D. C.—J. H. Butner, formerly Philadelphia manager for the Triangle, has completed the establishment of a branch of that concern in this city, and is now taking care of its business in the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and that part of West Virginia conceded to this territory, in a way that commends itself to the company's customers.

This new exchange is located at 708 Thirteenth street, northwest, where the entire second floor of the building is occupied. This is divided into three sections, that facing the street being used as the manager's office and occupied also by the bookkeeper and stenographer of the exchange. Upon entering the exchange one finds himself in that section in the center which is used as a sort of reception room. Beyond this is the shipping, rewinding and poster departments, occupying a long stretch of floor space to the rear.

Good lighting and ventilation is afforded by windows at the front and the back of the exchange and artificial lighting is obtained from a half dozen ceiling fixtures running the length of the exchange.

Mr. Butner is quite well known in Washington by reason of his former connections, for as a newspaper man with the Associated Press he was stationed here for about four years. He started in the film business about four years ago, when he secured employment with the Mutual. For a few weeks he was a salesman and was promoted to the position of manager of the Philadelphia exchange of that concern. He joined the Triangle as manager of the Quaker City branch, opening that office, when it was founded.

Although in the city but a very short time, Mr. Butner has, one might say, made a very good impression upon the exhibitors with whom he has come in contact. He has a very affable manner and is of that type of man who is accepted as a friend. He is welcomed into the field here with expressions of hope for unqualified success of his efforts.

Last Year's Theater Tax.

Washington, D. C.—The war emergency revenue law of October 22, 1914, was productive of $1,014,911.28, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, insofar as theaters, museums and concert halls are concerned, according to the preliminary report of W. H. Osborn, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which has just been submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury. This sum is $224,914.21 in excess of the collections of the preceding twelve months, which totaled $789,997.07.

Parcels Post Indemnity Rule Changed

Postmaster General Burleson Makes New Regulation Covering Articles Only Partially Injured in Transportation.

By Clarence L. Linz.

Washington, D. C.—With the increasing use of the parcel post service by the film industry it will be of interest to note that the postal regulations covering indemnity on account of injury to articles contained in registered, insured and C. O. D. parcels in the United States mails have been amended by Postmaster General Burleson to cover cases where articles are not rendered worthless, reparation to be made for "the actual, usual, direct and necessary cost of repairs required to place them in serviceable condition."

Up to the time of the promulgation of this amendment, indemnity has been restricted to articles which have been irreparably damaged in the mails. Claims for damages under this amendment must be made by the consigner of the mail matter through the postmaster at the office from which it was sent, as prescribed by the Postmaster General in the regulations governing. Indemnity for injury or loss of domestic registered mail matter is restricted to its value, not exceeding $50 for first-class matter and not exceeding $25 for third-class matter, and subject to a number of conditions prescribed by the Postmaster General.

NASHVILLE NOTES (Continued).

Theater Changes.

Nashville.—The Rex announces a reduction of from ten to five cents admission. This is a feature house, and is just starting "The Secret of the Submarine" serial.

Memphis.—Mrs. A. Gerni, owner of the Beauty and Queen theaters, Main street houses, will open a new house in Memphis about September 1.

Kaufman Secures New Series.

Memphis, Tenn.—Manager A. H. Kaufman of the local United branch has secured exclusive rights on the Mutt and Jeff Cartoons for Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina. This territory is handled by both the Memphis and Atlanta offices. Mr. Kaufman states that United broke its sales record during the week of August 6th, and indications point to still further increases during the coming season.

Robert H. Goodwin Now With Mutual.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Robert H. Goodman, former director for a number of the large producers, was in Chattanooga a few days ago as special representative for the Mutual. Mr. Goodman is well versed on the progress of the industry, as set forth in an interview given the Chattanooga press, and gave out some interesting data as to the cost of production of some of the recent big features.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Nashville Notes.

The pleasure Dome, a north Sixth Avenue house, is closed during the summer.

L. Rudolph of New York was in the city last week in the interest of the Kleine-Edison Company.

Following the return to five-cent prices comes the announcement that the Rex theater will return to the daily change of program, including features, short reels and serials. The "Submarine" serial and Pathe's "Grip of Evil" are late bookings.

The Star theater, operated by Ira Lusky exclusively for negroes, was damaged by fire to the extent of $100. Several reels of film were destroyed.

The Lincoln, a negro house, has been closed due to lack of patronage. This theater is located in the negro business district, with strong competition existing, and has never been a paying proposition.

Memphis.—J. B. B. Loomer, in charge of General's poster department, has returned from a short trip to Texas, and reports business slack at most points in the cactus state.

Chattanooga.—Among the recent visitors at the Chattanooga office of Southern Metro were Messrs. Harry Horner of the Bohemia, Cleveland, Tenn.; Geo. N. Shorey, Gay and Queen, Knoxville, and F. O. Buchanan, manager of the Colpet theater, Cedartown, Ga.

Chattanooga.—E. G. Whitkins, booking clerk for the local office of Southern Metro, is back at his desk after undergoing an operation for appendicitis.

Buffalo News Letter

Young Film Man Drowns.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 15—Carl Warner, a shipping clerk employed by the Victor Film Co., Buffalo, was drowned recently at Crystal Beach, a Lake Erie summer resort near this city. At various times he served on the staff of the Sylvia moving picture theater, in Fillmore avenue, of which his father, Henry G. Warner, is proprietor. The young man struck his head while diving and was unable to keep from sinking. Friends attempted a rescue, but were unable to save him.

"Art" Young Gets Married.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Arthur Young, head broker of the Victor Film, Buffalo, was recently married to Miss Isabelle Schumann of Rochester. On returning from his honeymoon trip, Mr. Young received a beautiful electric lamp as a wedding gift from the Victor Company's local staff. Congratulations accompanied the gift and in a neat speech Mr. Young expressed his appreciation of the tribute.

Olean's New 1,800 Seat House.

Olean, N. Y.—Bordonaro Bros., leading merchants of Olean, will build a new moving picture theater in that city. The house will cost $100,000 and will seat 1,800 persons. The theater will be centrally located in Union street and will be built of brick and tile. In appearance, furnishings, service and general equipment the house will be thoroughly up-to-date. Bardonaro Bros. have the utmost faith in the future of moving pictures in their city and despite plenty of competition in Olean they are willing to back up their confidence in the business by spending their money unsparingly on their new enterprise.

Feared No Hot Weather.

Geneva, N. Y.—All during the recent hot weather L. G. Brady, manager of the Regent moving picture theater, Geneva, showed to satisfactory business. Original advertising in the local newspapers and on the screen helped Mr. Brady's trade. He formerly managed the Hippodrome at Scranton.

Sympathy for Exhibitor Morse.

Penn Yan, N. Y.—Mr. Morse, one of the proprietors of the Sampson theater, Penn Yan, N. Y., is receiving the sympathy of his friends on account of the recent death of his mother.

Gather Here and Hereabouts.

Waterloo, N. Y.—Crawford Wright of the Wright theater, Waterloo, N. Y., is using four Paramount piltures a week, and, according to a report regarding his audiences, he is "standing them up."

Clifton Springs, N. Y.—Many wealthy guests who visit a sanitarium in Clifton Springs, N. Y., each summer are faithful patrons of the Palace, a ten-cent moving picture theater of that village. Williamson & Gresh are the proprietors.

Crystal Beach, N. Y.—Howard F. Brink, traveling representative of the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company's Buffalo offices, is co-operating with many exhibitors in the Western New York territory. Assistance in the preparation of programmes, projection, house service and other features that point to the betterment of the moving picture business is given willingly by Mr. Brink. He recently visited Crystal Beach with his son, Earl Brink, shipping clerk at the Paramount offices.

Cuba, N. Y.—C. U. Gross, manager of the Keller opera house and the Peerless moving picture theater of this city, is ready for a lively fall business. He has just returned from his summer vacation and is as "brown as a berry."

Belfast, N. Y.—Frank James is renovating the Grand theater of Belfast, of which he is proprietor. On account of satisfactory trade Mr. James did not close his house during the hot weather.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. R. Sherry, former manager of the Lyric, Family and other theaters in this city, was a recent caller. Mr. Sherry is considering an offer to manage a Buffalo theater. Details will be given later.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Manager Michaels of the Academy theater, Buffalo, has been using a youthful spieler to attract people to his house. The young man is a forceful speaker and is supplied with a good line of talk.

Corning, N. Y.—J. M. Gorchof, former traveling representative of the Mutual Film, Buffalo, was a recent visitor. He is located in Corning, N. Y. Mr. Gorchof has just given the writer a subscription to the Moving Picture World.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Star theater, Buffalo, which throughout the year plays regular dramatic productions, has opened the season with the film "Civlization," Dr. Peter C. Cornell is manager of this house. The Teck, a similar theater, managed by John Oishei, opened with the moving picture feature, "Ramona," and will follow with high class dramas.

Camden, N. Y.—James Le Richeux will build a moving picture theater here on the site of the opera house which was burned.

Ogdenville, N. Y.—Moving pictures and vaudeville will be featured in a road show organized by William Hayward, who has left Dodgeville on a six weeks' trip.

Harold Filkins, road representative for the Essemar Film, Buffalo, recently visited his father, M. I. Filkins, road representative of the Pathe Exchange, this city. Mr. Filkins, Jr., had just completed a six weeks' trip through New York State. "Florence Rose Fashions," produced by the Pathe Co., is being booked heavily in Rochester and vicinity.

IN PITTSBURGH.

Says Exhibitors Can Be Found in Morning.

Charles F. Schwerin, manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film Corporation, 938 Penn avenue, recently made a two-day trip through the coke region of the state, visiting eleven towns and doing business at practically every point. He made this tour to convince himself that an exhibitors can be located any time during the day. Mr. Schwerin says that to hear salesmen tell it, the exhibitor can only be seen after two o'clock.

Miller Opens Film Booking Office.

H. B. Miller, formerly manager of the Mutual Exchange in Pittsburgh, and a partner in the Rowland & Clark interests, has opened a film booking agency under the name of the Theater Booking Company. Offices have been established in the Peoples Bank building, Pittsburgh, and will be ready for business in the near future. Mr. Miller states the purpose of the new concern is to act as representatives of the out-of-town exhibitors to look after their interests at the source of supply here. Each feature coming to this city will be examined and those not booked here also will be looked up, with the idea of ascertaining the merits of the various releases and then permitting the exhibitors to choose for himself.

TO EXHIBITORS.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.
Helpfully yours,

Use of Theater Name Enjoined

In Pittsburgh, the Rowland & Clark Theaters Have Secured a Preliminary Injunction Against Use of Name "New Regent" by Enterprise Amusement Company—Date of Hearing Set for September 5.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—The Roland and Clark theaters, operated by R. A. Rowland and James B. Clark, of Pittsburgh, has secured preliminary injunction against the Enterprise Amusement Company, formerly known as the Rex Amusement Company, to restrain that firm from operating a moving picture house under the name of the New Regent. The Enterprise Amusement Company recently took over the Cameraphone theater at 1600 Fifth avenue, and after remodeling it announced its reopening under the name of the New Regent. The injunction proceedings were instituted at once by Rowland & Clark, who conduct the Regent theater, at Penn and Highland avenues, to prevent what was regarded by them as an infringement on the title of their house. The Camcraphone was then retained, pending the outcome. Later an effort was made to have the injunction declared permanent by the court. Attorneys appearing for the Enterprise Amusement Company requested that the case be continued and Judge Cohen fixed September 5 as the date for a hearing in the case. A decision is awaited with interest by exhibitors, as the question involved is one that has confronted local moving picture theater owners at various times.

International to Move.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The local branch of the International Film Service, which has been located in the Film Exchange building, 938-940 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, for several months past, is preparing to move back to its former quarters in the Sauer building, 804 Penn avenue. On account of the rapidly growing business of the exchange and the limited space available at the present location, Manager Lyon decided on the change. The fourth and fifth floors of the Sauer building have been leased, but only the fifth will be utilized for the time being. When the International Film Service rented quarters in the new Exchange building, it was with the understanding that two extra stories would be added to the structure and that the firm was to also occupy the seventh floor. The recently enacted code regulating the height of buildings used for film purposes has made it impossible to increase the number of stories and the plan had to be abandoned by the owners. The new quarters of the International are quite centrally located and will afford ample space for expansion in the spring, when the fourth floor will be taken over. Plans are being made for remodeling the Sauer building into an up-to-date fireproof film building, work thereon to be started in May.

The International Film Service has announced the first-run houses in this section on the Beatrice Fairfax series, produced by Wharton. They are the Liberty theater, East End, two days, and the Downtown Cameraphone theater, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, and the Columbia theater, Erie, Pa. Three prints of the film are handled by this office and the subject is booking with marked success.

Takes Over Gamble's.

Altoona, Pa.—M. O'Brien has recently taken over Gamble's Family theater, at Altoona, Pa. A number of improvements have been made in the house which is among the most attractive and up-to-date in its locality. A latest model Simplex projection machine was installed, in addition to other new equipment.

H. W. Johnson Takes Territory.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The central Pennsylvania territory of the Pathe exchange has been placed in charge of H. W. Johnson, who succeeds W. H. Wood. Mr. Wood has entered the exhibiting end of the business at Roaring Springs, Pa. This field of operation embraces Johnstown and Altoona and is known as territory D. Another new Pathe salesman traveling out of the Pittsburgh office is D. L. Faralle. His territory is the northwestern part of the state and was formerly covered by W. K. Provan.

Would Investigate for Exhibitors.

Bluefield, W. Va.—A new concern for the purpose of investigating and reporting on the sanitary condition and safety of moving picture theaters and other places of amusement and issuing certificates of approval of same has recently been granted a state charter of incorporation under the laws of West Virginia. The concern is known as the American Playgoers' Protective Association and is located at Bluefield, W. Va. The authorized capital stock is $10,000. The incorporators were C. B. Banks, E. L. Bowman, G. H. Jolliffee, W. P. Hawley and B. H. Henderson, all of Bluefield.

Operators Claim Rate Agreement

Cleveland Union Says That Picture Men Agreed Two Years Ago to Give Higher Wages at This Time—Managers Ask for Proof of This and Claim That the Union Has Been Working Against Good of the Business.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—An alleged "gentleman's agreement" is the principal basis of recent increased wage demands made by Cleveland moving picture machine operators affiliated with the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employes. This agreement was referred to by speakers for the operators when the latter attended a meeting of the Northwestern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in the Republic building, August 15th. M. B. Winton, president, and Harland Holmden, business agent of the union, declared that when a compromise was made with the exhibitors on wage demands two years ago, the exhibitors promised to grant a further increase in pay at this time. The demand two years ago was for a five-dollar-a-week raise. Two dollars was granted. The operators now assert that their present demand for the equivalent of a three-dollar increase is but a carrying out of their end of the compromise bargain made two years ago.

The exhibitors on their part insist that they have never heard of such a promise as the operators claim was made and declare that if the operators can offer documentary proof that such a pledge was made, it will be promptly fulfilled.

The committee of operators attended the meeting of the exhibitors at the request of the latter and were specifically asked to show cause why their demands should be granted. In addition to the "gentleman's agreement" argument, the operators asserted that they are not now getting a living wage and that if their pay is increased they will no longer be compelled to do outside work to earn a living wage.

Work Against the Business.

Some of the exhibitors took issue with the operators because of their contention that their wage demands have been ratified by the Cleveland Federation of Labor. B. J. Sawyer, president of the exhibitors, made the direct charge that Cleveland labor leaders in the Federation have been friends of censorship and antagonistic to the moving picture business.

Mr. Sawyer further asked the operators why organized labor in Cleveland has not aided the exhibitors in their censorship fight and whether there was any assurance that labor would aid the exhibitors in the future.

No action was taken at the August 15 meeting, but two committees were appointed to meet the operators in special session the night of August 18, at labor headquarters.

Members of these special committees are Ernest Schwartz of the Erie theater; Sam Bullock, Columbia theater; W. J. Slimm, Marquis theater; S. F. Deutsch, Sun theater, and William Miller, Olympia theater. The following three represent downtown houses: Samuel Aubrey, Corona theater; John Sliney, Reel theater, and Henry Lustig, Avenue theater. Two committees were named because it is declared the suburban and downtown houses are facing different problems.

It is being predicted that the wage question will be settled by a compromise and that there is no danger of a strike of operators.

Exhibitors Nail Libel.

Cleveland, O.—Cleveland moving picture exhibitors are planning a vigorous protest against many recently published newspaper stories in which moving picture theaters have been referred to as contributing causes to crime and moral delinquency, particularly on the part of young girls.

"It is a rank injustice," Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the local exhibitors' league, said. "In a recently published story, the statement of one man was made the basis for alleged startling revelations in the white slave traffic and moving picture theaters were held up as a snare for young girls.

"We have never had a single case of this kind in Cleveland and the exhibitors would deem it a great favor if any misconduct in or about any moving picture theater were reported to them. Here our picture theaters have been lauded by clergymen and educators as an educational force second only to the public schools."

Screen Club Outing.

Cleveland, O.—Members of the Cleveland Screen Club held their second outing of the season at Willoughbeach, August 24. A corn roast and swimming contests were features.

Investigating Exchanges.

Cleveland, O.—Deputy State Factory Inspectors have been in this city recently investigating complaints that several film exchanges have been violating the law by working women employes overtime. No warrants have been issued.

Mutual in Its New Ouarters.

Cleveland, O.—The Mutual film exchange has just moved into new quarters in the Belmont building, 750 Prospect avenue, where it occupies the entire second floor. The Mutual exchange was formerly at 108 Prospect avenue. The new quarters include a reception room, general offices, projection room, shipping, booking and advertising departments. This is the third exchange to move into the new Belmont building, the Fox and World having been there several months.

Alhambra Improves Ventilation.

Cleveland, O.—An elaborate new ventilating and cooling system has just been installed in the Alhambra theater. This house is continuing its special matinees for children, despite alterations which are being made to increase the capacity of the house.

Things Lost and Found in Theaters

Louisville Manager Estimates that Half of Ordinary Articles Get Back to Owner—Money and Jewelry About Ten Per Cent.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Building, Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Inquiries relative to the percentage of articles lost in local theaters and returned to the management by patrons, show that about 50 per cent. of ordinary articles find their way into the box office, but in the case of jewelry or money the returns drop off to about 10 per cent. One of the leading exhibitors stated that one of his ushers recently found a roll containing between $40 and $50, mostly in small bills, and returned it to the office. The owner dropped in the next morning, described the roll and got his money. However, if a patron of the theater had picked up the roll the chances are that it would never have found its way to the office. A great many people apparently have the idea that money found in a public place is legitimate prey, and are rather doubtful whether the real owner will ever get it if it is returned to the box office, and the same condition applies to expensive articles or jewelry. Quite often losses are reported where undoubtedly the article lost was lost elsewhere, but the theater is blamed for the loss.

Most of the local theaters supply their ushers with small hand searchlights, and in case an article is reported as lost at the time, an instant search is made. Wideawake ushers, upon hearing a coin drop in a theater come forward at once to investigate without having to be notified. In fact one house some two years ago flashed a light on every seat as it was emptied in order to prove to its patrons that a close watch was kept for the patrons' benefit. To-day, however, no investigation is made unless asked for during regular show hours, but the house is looked over after the last show and again looked over in the morning during the clean-up period. In spite of precautions, however, it is almost impossible to keep some people from feeling that house employees have made away with the lost articles, when in many cases lost articles are either lost elsewhere or carried out by other patrons. Good, honest ushers are therefore about the only asset that the exhibitor has in handling the lost article proposition, as he can bank that the article was not left in the house.

Penalty for Improper Posters.

Covington, Ky.—The City Commissioners last week changed one of the local ordinances to conform with the penal section of the Kentucky statutes as follows: "Placing improper pictures on billboards or in locality within the city limits carries with it a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $100, with a jail sentence of from 10 to 50 days or the assessment of both the fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the police judge." Moving picture posters and advertising are generally well inside of the limit, but the exhibitors of Covington will in the future be careful to see that none of their posters could be construed as improper.

Kentucky Theater Changes.

Mt. Sterling, Ky.—The Paramount theater has opened as a strictly colored show house, and will endeavor to give the negroes of the Mt. Sterling district the best pictures obtainable.

Lancaster, Ky.—Luther Herron is arranging to sell the Rex theater at public auction shortly.

Irvine, Ky.—Elvin Lindon, of Irvine, has sold his interests in the Irvine airdome to J. E. Stivers, Stephen Stone and A. L. Corbett.

Walton, Ky.—R. D. Stamler, of this city, after an unsuccessful venture with pictures at the Opera House, at Williamstown, Ky., has closed the Williamsburg house.

Owingsville, Ky.—The new Owingsville theater will be rushed to completion about September 1. New fixtures, box office and operating booth are being installed, the floor lowered and additional exits cut.

Frankfort, Ky.—C. A. Lowelle, operator at the Capital theater, is laid up as the result of a recent fall. Lowelle in falling in the booth caught at one of the machines and cut his hand to the bone.

Murray, Ky.—The Dixie Theater Company, of Paris, Ky., will open with pictures at the Woodruff Opera House, of Murray, as soon as the building can be made ready.

Dover, Ky.—Curtis & Voorhees, operators of a moving picture theater at Brooksville, Ky., have opened a new airdome in this city.

Berry, Ky.—Doctor Bowman is planning to install a lighting plant and moving picture theater shortly.

Russellville, Ky.—The interior of the Divie theater is being entirely remodeled.

Louisville News Notes.

Announcement was made in Louisville on August 15 to the effect that E. F. Albee, general manager of the Keith circuit, on behalf of the Louisville Keith house, had authorized a subscription of $1,000 to the Louisville Industrial Foundation, which has raised a million dollar factory fund. Lee Goldberg, manager of the Mary Anderson theater, of Louisville, also subscribed personally for a share of stock.

George Starke, representing The Big Features Rights Corporation of Louisville, which recently obtained rights in several states on "The Little Girl Next Door," has started out on a booking trip through Kentucky on this picture. "The Battle Cry of Peace," which is also controlled by this company, is still being booked out in the state, and will probably be booked for return engagement this fall during the political campaign as an additional argument for preparedness. Fred Levy, president of the company, is now in the East, where he expects to book additional pictures.

Walter S. Adams Co., real estate dealers, are endeavoring to sell or rent the Parkland theater at Twenty-eighth and Dumseneil streets. This theater has a seating capacity of about 500, and was built about two years ago by a $15,000 stock company, headed by ex-Governor Thatcher of Panama.

The Central Film Service Co., operating at Louisville and Indianapolis, recently filed suit in the Floyd County Circuit Court, at New Albany, Ind., asking that a receiver be appointed for the New Albany Theater Co., which formerly operated the Royal theater at Market and Bank streets. The film company alleged that the New Albany company was insolvent, and presented a claim for $33.68 representing service handled through the Louisville exchange. Judge John M. Paris later appointed Fred Sauer receiver for the company. The house has been closed for several months.

A good many people were attracted to the Baxter theater of Louisville last week when cards were given to every person entering the house, these cards being later mixed up, and ten withdrawn. Those named on the ten were presented with building lots in the New Glendale addition of New Albany, Ind., the managers of which have adopted this form of advertising in order to get the property started.

CINCINNATI NEWS ITEMS.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

G. W. Noyes Owns Forest Theater.

CINCINNATI, O.—Some confusion arose recently in connection with the sale of the Forest theater and airdome, in Avondale, and it develops that the purchaser of the property was erroneously reported. For some time, ever since the Forest Amusement Company disposed of the property, it has belonged to George W. Harris, and has been operated under a lease of several years by the well-known firm of McMahan & Jackson. Several weeks ago Mr. Harris disposed of the theater and the adjoining airdome to Geo. W. Noyes, of the Brunhoff Mfg. Co., of Cincinnati, and Mr. Noyes is now the owner, subject to the lease of McMahan & Jackson. The operation of the theater under the lease will be continued, as far as any plans now contemplated are concerned, the airdome being especially prosperous on account of the extremely hot weather experienced this summer.

Rex Weber and Marjorie LaFern Go to Essanay.

Cincinnati, O.—Returning a short time ago from a vacation spent at Michigan and other Lake resorts, Rex Weber and Marjorie LeFern (Mrs. Weber) announced that they will work during the coming season season with the Essanay Company, probably in the East. Mr. Weber who established the Five-A Studios and produced some excellent pictures in Cincinnati, at first contemplated continuing his producing work in and around the Queen City, but the attractiveness of the opportunity for a return to work with a leading producing company led him to give up his plans.

A. E. Brandt in Town.

Cincinnati, O.—A. E. Brandt, special representative of the Universal Film Corporation, was in the city recently making arrangements for the return engagement at the Grand of "Where Are My Children?"

"Grip of Evil" Well Advertised.

Cincinnati, O.—Manager W. S. Wessling, of the Pathe exchange, has been supervising some first-class publicity work in connection with the newest Pathe serial, "The Grip of Evil." Posters in advantageous locations have familiarized the public with the new subject, and the big electric sign at Pathe headquarters on Fifth street, which is visible for several blocks, all the way to Vine street, bears the query, "Is the World in the Grip of Evil?" This makes them look and wonder, and it all helps at the box-office.

Popular Hits at the Lubin.

Cincinnati, O.—The Lubin, always one of the most popular of the Fifth street houses, is enjoying prosperity which seems to have been little affected by the heat of a torrid summer, with its new policy of five features a week, as distinguished from the usual down-town policy of two changes of program a week. Manager Hennegan has been running some of the best of the recent releases, the fact that they have previously been seen rather adding to than detracting from their drawing power. Blanche Sweet in a Lasky production, "Stolen Goods," and Ethel Barrymore in "Final Judgment," were among the features on a recent week's Lubin program.

Picture House Escapes Forest Fire

Theater Building Plans in Town of Timmins, Ontario, Nearly Destroyed by Recent Forest Fire, Will Not Be Changed.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto, Ontario.

TORONTO, ONT.—The appalling forest fire which swept a northern section of Ontario has not daunted the enterprising spirits who had gone ahead with moving picture theater enterprises in the affected district. The amusement houses escaped destruction because the majority of populated centers were saved. Surrounding territory was wiped out, however, and the catastrophe was a distinct blow to the community on account of the great loss of life.

One of the mining camps which narrowly escaped the conflagration was Timmins. At this place plans had been adopted before the fire for the reconstruction of the local picture house, the Empire theater. It is understood that the fire will not cause the abandonment of the projected building and this decision means that Timmins will have one of the finest places of amusement north of Toronto. The building will be a three-story structure, making it one of the large features of the small center. The seating accommodation will be 900, 200 of which will be located in a balcony. The seats will be of the latest opera chair design. There will be a stage for vaudeville and traveling shows, but the attractions at the Empire will be mainly photoplay features. A satin fibre screen will be installed.

The front elevation of the theater shows practically an office building, as there are two stores on the main floor, four business offices on the second and six offices on the third floor. The basement will accommodate a billiard hall and bowling alleys.

Toronto's New Regent Growing.

Toronto, Ont.—The opening of the new Regent Theater on Adelaide street west will form, when completed, one of the principal amusement houses in the down-town section of the city. With the structure nearing completion, Mr. Thomas W. Lamb, the New York architect, paid a visit here for the purpose of inspecting the house and to confer with Cassavant Freres regarding the installation of a concert organ. Mr. Lamb announced that an indirect lighting system, similar to the illumination idea adopted for his recent New York houses, would be used in the Regent, changeable colored lights to coordinate with the picture themes being the adopted idea.

The president of the company which controls the Regent theater is E. L. Ruddy, who is also head of a well-known local billboard firm, and the billboards will be used extensively for the advertising of attractions. The vice president of the theater company is J. P. Bickell of Toronto. The board of directors includes W. J. Sheppard, a director of the Royal Bank of Canada; James Tudhope and N. L. Nathanson, all of Toronto.

The theater will be opened about the middle of September, it is expected.

Stratford's Majestic Sold.

Toronto, Ont.—Announcement has been made that the Majestic theater at Stratford, Ont., one of the largest and best-equipped houses in Western Ontario, has been purchased by Stratford interests from the Canadian Theaters, Limited, which owns a string of theaters in Ontario and Quebec. A. Brandenberger is now the manager of the Majestic.

Col. Balderson Opens Theater.

Colonel Balderson, a member of the Canadian militia, who owns the Balderson theater at Perth, Ont., has opened the Princess theater at Smith's Falls, Ont. It has been almost completely remodeled. P. R. Ball of Perth has charge of the Princess theater, while his brother, J. Ball, has become manager of the Balderson at Perth. The Ball brothers formerly had the Royal theater at Perth.

Orangeville's Dufferin Reopens.

Extensive improvements have been made to the Dufferin theater at Orangeville, Ont., and it has been reopened after two months' darkness under the management of Mr. J. Donohue, formerly an exhibitor of Tweed, Ont. A new wiring system has been installed, while the ventilating arrangements have been greatly improved. New chairs have also been placed in the house, and several hundred dollars have been spent in decorating the interior. Mr. Donohue has decided to pay the amusement war tax for patrons himself, but the prices of admission on Wednesday and Saturday nights will be 10 and 15 cents. On other evenings a scale of 5 and 10 cents will prevail.

Censors Pass "Inspiration."

Toronto, Ont.—The Theatrical Board of Appeals for Ontario reversed the decision of the Ontario Board of Censors with regard to the Mutual release, "Inspiration," in which Audrey Munson takes the part of an artist's model, the appeal board finding that the subject was acceptable because of its art theme.

Maritime Exhibitors To Organize

Film Men in the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edwards Island Get Together—Committees Appointed.

By Frederick F. Sully, Box 1229, St. John, New Brunswick, Can.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—Over a score of exhibitors, representing the trade throughout the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island, recently gathered in St. John for the first general get-together of the trade ever held in this section of the Dominion. For several months the film men of St. John have cherished hopes of forming an organization that would be of general and permanent help to the exhibitors and their associates, but there seemed to be little to call them together. The announcement that F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World, woud visit the city and discuss trade problems, offered the opportunity that had long been wanting and little difficulty was experienced in getting the men together.

Mr. Richardson proved an able counsellor. His informal platform talks were helpful, practical and comprehensive. The conference opened on a Saturday evening at the Imperial theater immediately after the last performance. Mr. Richardson with his daughter, Miss Nellie, made the trip from New York on a motor cycle, and after the opening session an informal reception was given for them in one of the main anterooms. This afforded a splendid opportunity to establish more of a social equation, and was succeeded the next morning by a delightful sail up the St. John River in the steamer Lord Kitchener. The various managers, exhibitors, members of the New Brunswick Board of Censorship, and the employees of the St. John theater made up a party of over 100. After the sail through the most picturesque part of Canada and on the return home there were some informal speeches on deck.

The gathering had proved so helpful and the social intercourse such an inspiration that the Halifax exhibitors extended an invitation to the entire party to be its guests in Halifax on Sept. 16 to perfect a permanent organization and to take advantage of the elaborate program that will be carried out in conjunction with the annual exhibition. For completing arrangement for this conference, from which a real, live organization should grow, the following committee was appointed: W. H. Golding, St. John, chairman; S. Hurley, St. John; S. W. Dimick, Campbellton; L. Rosenfeld, St. John; Charles E. Stevens, Archie Mason, S. Tory, Moncton; A. A. Ayre, Sackville, and W. T. H. Fennety, Fredericton.

Among the representatives were: N. V. Gastonguay, Orpheus hall, Halifax, N. S.! G. J. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; F. B. Metzler, Empire theater, Halifax, N. S.; J. M. Franklin, Strand vaudeville and picture theater, Halifax, N. S.; M. Herschorn, Imperial theater, Halifax, N. S.; A. E. Wall, chief Board of Censors, Halifax, N. S.; Roy Holman, "Happy Home," Alberton, P. E. I.; S. W. Dimock, theaters at Campbellton, Dalhousie and Athol, N. B.; James F. Cripps, Digby, Middleton, Annapolis and Shelburne, N. S.; C. A. Walfield, Bridgewater and Lockport, N. S.; J. J. Gaudet, Summerside, P. E. I.; A. A. Felding, Princess theater, Truro, N. S. The St. John managers were: Stepphen C. Hurley, Unique; Gilbert D. Sweeney, Palace; A. B. Farmer, Star; William C. Smith, Empress; Fred K. Trifts, Gem; W. C. McKay, opera house; W. H. Golding, Imperial; F. G. Spencer, Lyric, Unique and opera house.

R. J. McAdam Is Building Theater.

Halifax, N. S.—Manager R. J. McAdam of the Casino, Halifax, hopes to have the new theater, which is now in the course of construction, ready for occupancy by the latter part of the fall. The structure when completed will cost slightly over $75,000. It has a seating capacity of 1,200 and will be one of the most modern theaters in this section of Canada.

Lockport's New Theater Ready.

Lockport, N. S.—C. A. Walfield has just completed the erection of a small theater in Lockport, N. S. The building will be put into use within a week or two, and will be ready in time to catch the latter part of the summer patronage, which is heavy in that section.

Interesting Maritime Notes.

L. Rosenfeld, manager of the St. John exchange of the Famous Players Service, has just returned from a three weeks' business trip through the Sydnies and Nova Scotia. He reports that the larger communities are doing an excellent business, but the smaller town theaters are being less generously patronized.

C. W. MacKay, manager of the opera house, St. John, has announced that the house, which has always been run legitimate during the winter season, will continue its policy of Famous Players features during the coming year.

K. Kelty of the People's theater, Yarmouth, N. S., says that he is having the heaviest patronage this year of any season he has been in business. The influx of summer visitors has been large and has greatly helped the moving picture business in that section.

"The Yellow Menace," one of the new serials of the Famous Players service, is to be released in the near future, and exchanges say that it is being booked the strongest of any of the recent introductions in the provinces. Among Paramount features that are running strong are "The Eternal City," "Madame X," and "Nurse Cavell."

J. R. Kaufmann, who has been in charge of the shipping department of the St. John exchange of the Famous Players service, has been transferred to Toronto and will be succeeded by J. Liberman, who comes from the Toronto office.

STRAY WESTERN NOTES.

Washington State.

Pathe's Inspector-Auditor Here.

Seattle, Wash.—We could not get a look-in at the Pathe office this week. They all seemed terribly busy. We don't know why. The booker informed us hurriedly that Fred C. Summers, Pathe's inspector-auditor from New York, was spending ten days in the city, and that he was making a tour of the Western offices.

Everett Theater Sold.

Everett, Wash.—W. C. Gowan, former owner and manager of the Princess and two other theaters at Everett, Wash., has sold these and bought the Electric theater at Hoquiam, which he is operating under the name of the Orpheum.

Clemmer Gives Benefit Concert.

Seattle, Wash.—A benefit concert was given on Wednesday morning, August 9th, at the Clemmer theater, by its eight piece Russian orchestra for the wives and families of the late Sergeants Wiley and Weedin of the Seattle police force, who were killed in a recent shooting aflair in Seattle. Mr. Clemmer has also shown his charitable inclinations by donating this week 10,000 tickets to aid a Jewish settlement house. The tickets were sold by the society who keeps up the house.

Big Horn Theater Sold.

Thermopolis, Colo.—Otto Schmit has sold his big Horn theater at Thermopolis to M. C. Gerhart of Cheyenne. Schmit will go to Lewiston, Montana, where he plans to open a moving picture house.

California.

Exchange Man Leaves for London.

San Francisco, Cal.—Ernest Bru, a well known exchange man of this city, for some time in charge of the local Apex interests, left recently for New York and London. He has been making his headquarters for some time with the Apex exchange at 116 Golden Gate avenue.

New Manager for Apex.

San Francisco, Cal.—Marion H. Kohn, head of the Apex Feature Service, returned recently from a trip made to Los Angeles for the purpose of selecting a location for a branch film exchange. He will return to the southern city shortly to open this and will remain in charge, having secured the services of Morris Epstein to manage the local exchange.

Oregon.

Portland, Ore.—The Service Film Company has an interesting exhibit of new and old picture machines in the foyer of the People's theater. Manager Pumphrey recently sold a new Powers 6B to the Peoples and has placed a 1906 Edison alongside of it to show the advances in projection machines.

Portland, Ore.—The equipment of the Hawthorne theater has been bought by A. S. Graeper, of the Union avenue, to be used in remodeling his house.

Portland, Ore.—Among the week's visitors at the exchanges were E. R. Redlich and Robert Montgomery, of the Fox, en route to San Francisco, C. C. Waters, of McMinnville, and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Sparks of Estacada.

IN DETROIT.

Big Shows for Detroiters.

"How Britain Prepared" ended a two weeks' run at the Detroit Opera House, Sunday, August 6, and was succeeded by "Ramona," which came with special operators, Motiograph projection machines and special music. "Civilization" is reported to be slated for a two weeks run following "Ramona," after which the opera house will start its regular season with Klaw & Erlanger legitimate attractions.

H. N. Nelson's Cartoons.

Detroit.—H. N. Nelson, 79 Woodward avenue, Detroit, is now turning out comedy cartoons that give promise of becoming nationally prominent. He has associated with him several well-known cartoonists who are now at work on two series. One of each series has already been completed. In addition to this class of work, Mr. Nelson is doing a good commercial business.

Some Gilligham Announcements.

Detroit.—A. J. Gilligham announces the appointmentof David Kline as manager of the Majestic gardens, Grand Rapids, Mich. Mr. Kline was formerly manager of the Orpheum in that city, both houses being under the control of the Gilligham & Smith corporation. The opening of the Majestic gardens takes place August 27th. Before the opening the Majestic will be completely redecorated and a new stage setting along Venetian design will be provided. The ice-cooling system is also to be improved. In addition to Paramount productions, the Majestic will show Triangle films, and the new Billie Burke serial, "Gloria's Romance." Mr. Gilligham announces that there will be no change of policy at the Strand.

No Films on Street Cars.

Detroit.—The Detroit United Railway, operating the local street car system, has made a new ruling relative to film—effective September 1st. This ruling is that no film will be permitted on street cars on and after that date. As a result of this, a "pick-up" system is being arranged for by several of the truck and transfer companies. Some theater owners question the right of the street car company to carry out its ultimatum and may take the matter into the courts.

Lew W. Foster.

Detroit, Mich.—Among the many popular and well-liked film exchange representatives in the Wolverine State is Lew W. Foster, whose photograph it is a pleasure to reproduce herewith. (We mean this, Lew.) Mr. Foster was for some time a successful exhibitor in the city of Cincinnati. Later he got into the exchange end of the business and has been there ever since. He is now special ambassador in Michigan for the Triangle Film Corporation, making his headquarters at the Detroit office, 73 Broadway. He has been in Detroit, you might say, since the inception of the Triangle Company, coming here to establish the Triangle office.

Summer Shirt Sleeves in Theaters

Detroit Film Men Are Arguing About Comfort vs. Decorum for Men Patrons of Picture Shows on Sultry Days.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit, Michigan.

DETROIT, MICH.—There has been considerable argument among managers of the high-class motion picture theaters and the public as to whether men should be compelled to wear their coats in such playhouses during extreme hot weather.

The manager's side of the controversy is: "It is not becoming to the dignity of a high-class theater to have men on the main floor with coats off, sleeves off and possibly collars off. If you granted the privilege to one you would have to do the same to all. Furthermore, it is not exactly fair to the well-dressed man or woman who has to sit next to such person. Quite a number of men have asked me why they could not take off their coats, but when I explained the reason, they thanked me and said they understood thoroughly and conceded I was right."

Here is the argument on the other side as given by several high-class theatergoers: "When the thermometer is hovering around the 90 and 100 mark, theaters no doubt do everything in their power to make their auditorium cool and comfortable for their patrons, yet they insist that men wear their coats which prevents them from keeping comfortable while viewing a photoplay for several hours. One manager argued to me that 'how would you like it to be dressed up and have a forelgner or workingman come in with coat off and sleeves up.' I told him that a high-class theater seldom gets that caliber of men on its first floor, mainly because of the increased price for seats over the balcony and upstairs seats. When it is extremely hot there isn't a single reason that I can see for restraining men from taking coats off, because a theater manager should be ready to concede anything that will mean greater comfort for his patrons. Speaking for myself, I have decided to keep away from such playhouses during the summer because it is impossible to enjoy a picture when you can't be cool and comfortable."

On Future of Film Business.

Detroit.—A. E. Whitbeck, one of the promoters of the Washington and Orpheum theaters, Detroit, and who is promoting a number of moving picture theaters outside the loop in the city of Chicago, has been in Detroit for the past week. He said to the World correspondent: "I used to think that the picture business would not last, but what makes the industry look substantial and permanent to me is that the producers are turning out better pictures than ever before and are constantly striving to improve them. With such a spirit better pictures are bound to be the result and that means theaters will be able to hold their patrons."

Propose Central Exchange for Detroit

Local Film Men Get Offer of Big, Up-to-Date Exchange Building, Provided Lease Prospects Are Encouraging.

DETROIT, MICH.—A meeting of a half dozen exchange managers was held August 15th at the office of Manager G. Spencer Trask of the Mutual exchange. The exchange managers have received an offer from a real estate company to build in the downtown district a special building designed for use exclusively by moving picture exchanges and allied trades. He has agreed to proceed with the erection of the building on one of three sites, providing he can be assured of tenants among the local exchanges. He is willing to put up just the kind of a building that will be suitable to the needs of the exchanges. Among those at the meeting were Mr. Trask of the Mutual; Mr. Ames of the General; Mr. Duncan of the V-L-S-E; Mr. Kingsley of the Fox Film Corporation, and Mr. Dembow of the World. Manager Parkhurst of the Pathe and Mr. Fishman of the Standard have expressed a willlngness to enter into the proposition and will gladly take space if the project become a reality.

Not Balked by Luck.

Detroit.—Knowing just how much business should be done with certain pictures with well-known stars is something that exhibitors should watch carefully. For instance, Eddie Murphy, manager of the Gladwin Park, Detroit, booked "Silks and Satins" with Marguerite Clark. That night it poured continuously from seven until midnight and the result was his receipts came to $50 only. But Mr. Murphy knew that had the weather been right he would have done a great deal more, so he immediately booked the picture for the following week on his "open" night. On the second showing of the film, he packed them in for all performances. "I know that that picture should get more money than it did, so I booked it again," he said.

To Mr. and Mrs. J. L. McCurdy, a Boy.

Detroit.—On August 12th an eight-pound baby boy was the stork's deliverance at the residence of J. L. McCurdy, representative in Detroit for the Bluebird Photo Plays, Inc. Congratulations.

H. P. Seaborg Trustee of Grand Circus.

Detroit, Mich.—Henry P. Seaborg, of Detroit, has been elected trustee by the creditors of the bankrupt Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue. He has been authorized to continue the theater business until further order from the court. He was also instructed to file a petition by August 15 recommending a way to dispose of the theater company's property.

Asks Refund on License Fee.

Detroit, Mich.—Petitions with the common council have been filed by the Plaza Theater Company, East Jefferson avenue, and Your Theater Company, operating the Your and Forest theaters, asking $75 refund on their license fees because of the recent enactment of an ordinance reducing the fee.

Four New Theaters.

Detroit, Mich.—The Russell Realty Co., comprising Messrs. Hall and Mitchell, are building a photoplay theater on Russell street, near Farnsworth. It will seat about 1,500 and will be ready in the fall. A Wurlitzer organ is to be installed. The builders are the Frank Farrington Co.

Detroit, Mich.—Work has already started on the new Iris theater, corner of Joseph Campau and the East Grand Boulevard.

Detroit, Mich.—It is definitely assured that the new Madison theater, Broadway and Grand Circus Park, will be ready by Thanksgiving Day.

Iron Mountain.—The contract for erecting a new moving picture theater at Iron Mountain, Mich., for A. E. Brauns, has been awarded to Hans Nelson, of Green Bay, Wis. The building will be 60 by 120.

Local Film Men Get Together.

Detroit.—There was a large attendance of exhibitors and exchange men at the Griswold House, Friday evening, August 18, to attend the special meeting and Dutch lunch. The real purpose of the meeting was to create a better understanding between those engaged in the moving picture business and the city officials. The principal speakers were Hon. John Gillespie, police commissioner, and Ira W. Jayne, head of the Recreation Commission. A. J. Gilligham acted as chairman of the meeting as it was through his efforts that the get-together was held. Mr. Gilligham is president of the Detroit Screen Club. (We will have a complete story in next week's issue.)

Detroit Metro's New Quarters.

Detroit.—There are very few theaters in Michigan playing a daily change that do not book Metro features at least one day out of the seven. The Detroit exchange is now located in new quarters on the second floor of the building at 73 Broadway, where everything is complete for the accommodation of exhibitors. A. J. Richardson is manager of the Detroit exchange. There is also a Metro exchange at Escanaba, Mich., which handles business in the upper peninsula in charge of Joe Ferte.

W. H. Hoffman Guiding the Ferry Park.

Detroit.—The Ferry Park theater at 1701 Grand River avenue, Detroit, is now being operated by W. H. Hoffman, who purchased same from Clarence Seebald. The theater is being redecorated, refurnished and remodelled. It seats 400.

C. Davies to Manage Schram Houses.

Detroit.—Charles Davies, formerly in the exchange business, and one of the organizers of the Michigan company of the Metro Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the Monroe and Bijou theaters on Monroe avenue, Detroit, owned by Wesley Schram. Mr. Davis is thoroughly conversant with the demands of Monroe avenue theatergoers.

Sunday Arrests In Huntington, Indiana

William Rudolph, Owner of the Princess and Empress Theaters, with Four Other Exhibitors, Is Arrested for Sunday Show.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

HUNTINGTON, IND.—The climax of a long newspaper campaign in which the pulpit speakers joined, against opening the moving picture theaters on Sunday, came when five Huntington theater owners and employes were arrested by the police following a Sunday opening. The sentiment in the city has been decidedly against the opening of the theaters and an acute situation has arisen because of the publicity which has been given the opening of the theaters.

William Rudolph, the owner of the Princess and Empress theaters, was one of the five arrested. He had previously announced that the theaters would open for the usual performance on Sunday and a big crowd had collected near his theaters, for it had been rumored that the police would stop the Sunday shows. When the doors were thrown open and the picture on the screen plain clothes men entered the theater and several minutes later uniformed men appeared and made the arrests. It was with difficulty that the picture people obtained bond, a special session of the court being necessary to fix the amount of the bond. The cases have not been heard.

Manager Murray Injured by Fire.

Bedford, Ind.—Charles Murray, manager of the Star theater, which was damaged by fire recently, was burned about the hands and arms while fighting the fire. Films became ignited and caused the fire. The audience got out without trouble.

Manager Clevenger Loses Finger.

Columbus, Ind.—Henry Clevenger, manager of a moving picture theater here, says he is inclined to believe there is some truth in the old adage about the charms of music. His finger was cut off to music and did not hurt a bit, he says. There is an orchestrelle in the show managed by Clevenger and it was playing a dreamy waltz when he decided to shut it off. He reached for the switch but missed it and his fingers went into a set of cog wheels. The first finger was ground off at the first joint. Clevenger says for publication that the finger did not hurt a bit while the music went on but afterward and when it was dressed it hurt quite a little.

Mark Gates to Guide Circle Theater.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Announcement is made that the new manager of the Circle theater, the latest addition to the photoplay houses, will be Mark Gates, who last winter was treasurer of the Murat theater, of this city. H. P. Stothart, who last winter was musical director for High Jinks, will be the conductor of the orchestra. It is further announced that the Circle is to have the benefit of the experience of New York's big picture house director, S. L. Rothapfel, of the Rialto. Rothapfel will help direct the opening of the Circle, which is expected about the first of September, and advice from him will be forthcoming during the season. It is quite likely that there is an established connection between the New York theater and the Circle, although there is no official information to this effect. Many of the productions will come from the Rialto here.

Colonial Theater Showing Paramount.

Indianapolis, Ind.—It is announced that the Colonial theater, one of the big downtown houses, will show the Paramount program exclusively hereafter. Change days will be reduced from three to two days, Sundays and Thursdays being the change days selected.

The Colonial, while a big theater, is out of the downtown district, though in it, and enjoys the patronage of many children who can go unescorted. The Burton-Holmes travel pictures are to be shown.

Singer Killed by Train.

Kokomo, Ind.—Karl McDonald, brother of Gail Sherwood, one of the most popular of Indiana's moving picture theater singers and himself a singer of some reputation, was killed beneath the wheels of a train in this city recently.

Strand Goes Back to Melodrama.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Strand, formerly one of the finest of the big downtown motion picture houses, will go oack to melodrama. Negotiations are now under way for the lease of the house by the Strand Company, which recently went into the hands of a receiver after showing feature motion picture productions for several months. The out of the way location of the Strand and the fact that there are so many other houses downtown brought about the failure of the theater.

Exchangemen Buy Automobiles.

The automobile craze has got into the motion picture business and a number of exchangemen have motoritis. Among the latest victims are L. M. Day, of the Metro; Fritz Wathne, of the International, and Earle E. Reese, assistant to the latter.

Trade Notes.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—The lobby of the Palace theater is to be redecorated, and with the beginning of the work comes complaint from one of the managers of the theater to the effect that, while the lobby is still new, vandalism on the part of the supposedly well-bred theatergoers is responsible for the marring of the lobby. His complaint is well taken and other theater managers over the country probably have experienced the same trouble.

"Strange enough," he says, "an investigation has developed the fact that this destructive work has not been done by irresponsible boys from the gallery, but by men of affairs who have occupied the best seats in the house—men who seem to think that their presence there entitles them to do damage to the building entailing a loss many times greater than the price of their admission."

Announcement is made of the opening of the Transfer Theater, in the business district of Ft. Wayne. The theater introduces something new in a 10 o'clock opening. Other theaters of the city have remained closed until the afternoon. The management will cater to the class of trade which goes to a movie at noon. A. W. Collier is general manager of the new theater.

Kansas City News Letter

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building, Kansas City, Mo.

A Trump for a Circus's Ace.

SCOTTVILLE, KAN.—A ribbon bedecked girl in a riding suit and boots rode up and down the main street of Scottville, Kansas, right in front of the motion picture theater. She had a megaphone through which she announced in loud tones that the "greatest tent show on earth will start in a few minutes in the large canvas covered tent around the corner from the square."

This announcement was not music to the ears of Manager Christie of the picture show on the main street. He stood in front of his theater and gritted his teeth and called down curses on tent shows. But even while he cursed the great idea came and with it came action. Action of the dynamic type.

Flash—the idea: "What's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

Five minutes later the girl's voice in the street was drowned by the stentorian tones of real bally-ho man. And he announced "Pathe's greatest feature, 'Excuse Me' will be started in five minutes and all those who want seats will have to hurry, as the house is rapidly filling."

Immediately after this announcement the electric piano was started and the crowds came. And "Excuse Me" went over big while the tent show showed to ten.

Moral: It sometimes pays to carry the fight into the enemy's camp.

K. E. Portor's Attractive Window Card.

Kansas City, Mo.—K. E. Portor of the New Cater theater and airdome, Marceline, Mo., has prepared an especially attractive window card, 13x21 inches, in which the 10 inch Paramount trademark cut is featured. Mr. Portor runs Paramount Tuesday and Friday nights and on this card these dates are given; the cards being useful indefinitely. They are put up in windows, on posts and elsewhere in the town and nearby and the Paramount trade-mark, attracting attention, centers the interest on his theater.

Donald C. Thompson Back.

Topeka, Kan.—Donald C. Thompson, known internationally as a war photographer, has returned to the United States after a stay in Rome. On his arrival at New York, word was sent to his mother at his home town, Topeka, that he would stop here before joining his company at the border. Mr. Thompson, before leaving for Europe, accepted a captaincy in the Nebraska National Guard.

Turn Back to Winter Shows.

Topeka, Kan.—Roy Crawford, manager of the Hippodrome theater at Topeka, has announced that that house will revert to stock this fall. The play "Under Cover," by the Theodore Larch Stock company, which will put on the plays at the Hippodrome this winter, will open the house Labor Day.

The Novelty theater will open on August 28. The Grand theater will open to vaudeville about the middle of September. Both of these theaters have been showing moving pictures during the summer. During the past winter they afforded both vaudeville and moving pictures for their patrons. The Novelty, as was the case last season, will put on five vaudeville acts instead of four.

Sinopoulo Bros. Buy Tulsa House.

Tulsa, Okla.—The Broadway theater here has been purchased by the Sinopoulo Brothers of Oklahoma City, who will take complete charge by August 20. The same men own the Lyric, one of the best houses in Oklahoma City. With a policy of five vaudeville acts and six reels of pictures each performance, they have built up a large patronage. This same policy will be pursued in their Tulsa branch. These two boys are ranked as the leading exhibitors of the state of Oklahoma and their actions are closely followed by those in the industry. The service used in both houses will be of the General Film.

New Producing Company Formed.

Kansas City, Kan.—The Kansas Film Corporation has been organized in this city to make a number of high-class pictures. The men composing the new organization are: John B. Born, general manager; A. D. Allison, assistant manager; L. E. Barnard and H. J. Kaelin, associate directors. These men are all experienced in the making of picture plays, and A. D. Allison, assistant manager, was formerly Pathe general manager of France and Belgium. The office is on the second floor of the Grossman building.

Visitors to Kansas City.

Kansas City, Mo.—Charles Townsend, manager of the Lyceum theater at Leavenworth, Kansas, dropped in to the local exchanges last week.

O. A. Bandy, Pittsburg, Kansas, was one of the exhibitors who visited the Kansas City exchanges last week.

Roy Burford, an exhibitor of Arkansas City, Kansas, came to Kansas City last week and while here visited all of the shows "around town." He said that he had had a record house on the nights he showed the "Iron Claw."

Heard at Local Exchanges.

Kansas City, Mo.—Preparations are being made in the George Kleine moving picture exchange for the reception of J. M. Sheldon, president of the Randolph Film company, New York City, which controls "Gloria's Romance." This serial, the territorial rights for which have been held by the Willis Wood theater, will now be open to the exhibitors of the city. A. C. Melvin, manager of the local office of the George Kleine company, has gone to the convention at Topeka.

The local Pathe exchange, Incorporated, held a very successful private Trade Show at the Willis Wood last week, at which several episodes of the serial "The Shielding Shadow" were shown. A large crowd of exhibitors attended the show, and many favorable comments were extended to the Pathe Exchange men.

F. L. Kiltz, manager of the local exchange of the Mutual Film Corporation, reports that the two serials: "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine" are going good in all of the surrounding territories.

Charley Harden, manager of the Metro exchange, has gone to the convention at Topeka. With him went Harry Skirboll, the road representative in this territory. The trip was made in Mr. Harden's motor car.

William Wraner, formerly with the Mutual and handling the serials of that exchange, is now in charge of the serial department of Metro. He is managing the serial "The Crimson Stain," which has sixteen episodes.

Earlville, Iowa.—A. H. Jennett has purchased the Nemo theater here.

Storm Lake, Iowa.—Fire destroyed the opera house here last week. W. C. Skiff was the owner.

Hardin, Mont.—Work has been started on the Dan King theater on Center avenue here.

Helena, Mont.—A five-story building costing $200,000 will be erected here shortly and will include a spacious moving picture theatre in its construction.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—A new moving picture theater is soon to be erected on Phillips avenue and Eighth street here.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Bert Barnett, Sr., manager of the Paramount exchange here, has returned from New York, where he made arrangements for a publicity manager. Mr. Ver Haelen, formerly connected with the Raver interests, was Mr. Barnett's selection and the new member of the staff will be at his desk August 1.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Victor H. Hodd, assistant to Mr. Seelye of the New York Pathe, after spending a month at Minneapolis going over the affairs of the Minnesota exchange recently taken over by H. E. Friedman, has gone to Cleveland, O., and will return to New York shortly.

A. Malone, Twin City salesman for Pathe, has gone to Denver to work at that Pathe exchange and he has been succeeded by J. E. Schwartzbein, formerly of the Minneapolis Tribune advertising staff.

Sunday Show Referendum In Michigan

Traverse City, Michigan, Is Going to Let the People Decide Whether Sabbath Shows are Needed or Not Wanted.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

TRAVERSE CITY, MICH.—The city commissioners decided to let the people settle the question of whether Traverse City should have motion picture shows on Sunday. The proposition was placed on a special ballot to be voted upon in connection with the regular primary election, August 29. The city has always been without Sunday shows, but a recent opening brought about the issue. Instead of charging admission the exhibitors took free will offering. This aroused the church people and they were instrumental in having an ordinance submitted prohibiting Sunday shows. City officers, however, decided it was a matter for the referendum.

Films to Boost Western Michigan.

Traverse City, Mich.—A special train made a trip over the G. R. & I. railroad, making moving pictures of the agricultural, horticultural and pleasure advantages of western Michigan. The G. R. & I. is receiving the co-operation of the East Jordan & Southern railroad and Pere Marquette railroad, Western Michigan Development Bureau, the Chicago "Herald's" motion picture travelog service and the federal bureau of commercial economics. In addition to using these films for exploitation purposes in the United States, they include sufficient information to be of value in the development of foreign trade and will be shown abroad.

New Theaters and Changes.

Owosso, Mich.—Fred R. Patterson has purchased the Temple theater from B. L. Converse and will operate it on Saturdays and Sundays until his new theater now under construction is completed. Later the two will be combined. He will use Paramount program.

Marion, Mich.—J. Piper has opened the new Crescent theater here. A. B. McLeod is manager.

Flint, Mich.—Fred C. Phillips, formerly manager of the Rex theater on North Saginaw street, has opened the Gem theater at Stever avenue and Lewis streets. The house, which is fireproof construction and seats 300, is now showing moving pictures, vaudeville will be had.

Manistee, Mich.—When local merchants declared a half-holiday, Manager Otto Laurer of the Lyric had as his guests at a special matinee, 200 newspaper men, merchants, clerks, and office employes. "The Fourth Estate," a story of a big newspaper, was the feature.

Ludington, Mich.—"The Land of Sky Blue Water" was the name of the local film made here by the Standard Motion Picture company. The slight plot details, the historical development of the Pere Marquette river [illegible] Pere Marquette in 1675.

Didn't Need Any Special Sabbath Vote

At Beatrice, Nebraska, Manager Hal Kelly's Petitions Get So Many Names That Plainly No Special Election Is Needed.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

BEATRICE, NEB.—Manager Hal Kelly of the Gilbert and Lyric theaters secured so many signatures to his petitions for Sunday moving picture shows that he thought a special election upon the issue was not necessary. Therefore he suggested that the City Council attain the desired result by amending an ordinance so as to allow Sabbath performances. He promises that if the seventh day shows are legalized there would be nothing offered at an exhibition in the Gilbert or Lyric theaters that could call for criticisms from any reputable citizen.

Warren Film Co. Incorporates.

Omaha, Neb.—The Warren Film company has filed certificates of incorporation in the office of the county treasurer. The concern, which has a capital stock of $60,000, has been doing local and industrial moving picture work in the middle west for several years. It is expected to center the production in Omaha, and in addition to the special work some comedy subjects will be made here. Incorporators are W. T. Warren, who has been located at Chicago, Edward Wetzel and H. M. Sherman.

Omaha, Neb.—The season's bookings for the municipal auditorium include an exhibition of the big Fox Film featuring Annette Kellerman, this for some time in the winter. The film industry also is expected to be represented at the auditorium by the middle west show for exhibitors.

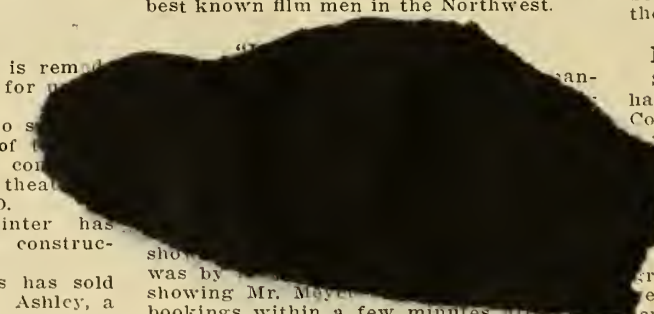
Minneapolis News Letter

By G. C. Johnston, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Local Business Freshens.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The picnic over and the weather gradually becoming cooler, exchange men and exhibitors have settled down to plug hard for a good fall business. The light rain of Wednesday last broke up the long, hot spell and incidentally cheered those interested in the industry who have been doing a very poor business of late owing to the weather. Exchange men hereabouts are busy sending out circulars, circular letters and advertising extensively in preparation for a busy season and the outlook for a big fall and winter business in all locations is exceedingly bright. Serials which have done much to hold up the summer business are coming to an end and snappy features are now much in demand. Several serials are to be released shortly for use during the months of September, October and November. "The Crimson Stain," "Grip of Evil," "Yellow Menace" and the Beatrice Fairfax series are the fall serials.

Andress Gives Business Show.



Minneapolis, Minn.—Hugh C. Andress, Northwest representative for the International Film Service, gave a special showing of Hearst releases at the New Grand theater Thursday, August 10. Two weeklies, three cartoon reels, the first of the Beatrice Fairfax series and several slides were shown. Admission was by invitation only. Members of the press, clergy, censor board and exhibitors were present. Mr. Andress is now located in new quarters in the Produce Exchange building.

Changes in Independent Film.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Nelson & Moor have taken over the work of booking "The Yellow Menace" for the Lochren Film Corporation. The Independent Film Corporation, with which Messrs. Nelson & Moor are connected, recently took over the National Film Corporation features and now ranks among the leading film exchanges in Minneapolis. The Independent has recently opened branch exchanges in Omaha and Milwaukee.

Harry Rowe Heads Local Unicorn.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Harry Rowe of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" fame has taken charge of the Minneapolis Unicorn exchange. During the last few months J. C. Wolf, W. R. Merrill and E. R. Schlaifer have been in charge of the Unicorn offices. Mr. Rowe was one of the big guns at the recent film men's picnic and is one of the best known film men in the Northwest.

"Reel Facts" a New Weekly.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Reel Facts," a Western moving picture magazine for exhibitors, exchange men and film fans, is scheduled to make its appearance in the territory Saturday, August 19. It is published by W. J. Egan and edited and illustrated by John L. Johnston. "Reel Facts" will cover the territory from Missouri to California to Washington to Northern Michigan and will be issued weekly.

Kimball & Cobb Open Laboratories.

Minneapolis.—Kimball & Cobb have opened their laboratories and studio in the Jeweler's Exchange building and are now prepared to handle orders for cartoon, commercial, news and other film and lantern slides. The new quarters include six spacious rooms and many of the latest types of studio equipment.

Personal and Business Notes.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Otto N. Davies, manager of the Minnesota Metro is in New York attending the monthly meeting of the Metro directors. A. A. Hixon, assistant to Mr. Davies, is touring Wisconsin and Central Minnesota talking up "The Crimson Stain Mystery" serial.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Messrs. Harry Rathner and Myron Conhaim, owners of "Civilization" rights in this territory, have made elaborate preparations for the premier presentation of the gigantic spectacle at the Minneapolis Shubert, August 11. The run at the Shubert is unlimited. The production is to be put on identically as it is staged at the Criterion theater, New York, and the Cohan Opera House, Chicago. One hundred persons are used in the prologue alone.

Minneapolis, Minn.—George Carroll Johnston has been chosen to manage the "End of the World" road show which M. R. Dick of Minneapolis will put on the road September 1. Bookings for the show have reached the middle of October.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Mr. and Mrs. Ben E. Drum of the Minneapolis V. L. S. E. exchange have returned from Chicago, where they spent a two weeks' vacation.

The Dixie Becomes the Variety.

St. Louis, Mo.—Ansell and Fienshriber, who purchased the Dixie theater at 13 North Broadway, have changed the name of the house to the Variety. The Dixie is one of the oldest theaters in the city, and the first one to be opened in the downtown shopping district. The place has always been in a prosperous condition and since the present firm has taken hold of it things are humming along at a brisker rate than ever. A great many improvements have been added to the place, and things have been freshened and brightened up in general.

J. J. Barrett Buys the Acme.

St. Louis, Mo.—James J. Barrett, of the Chippewa and Knickerbocker theaters, has added the Acme, on 1417-19 Cass avenue, to his string of amusement houses and is getting it in readiness to open within a few weeks. The Acme seats 800 persons, and it is being treated to a set of new furnishings and equipment. Mr. Barrett has made a huge success of his other two houses, and the same system of management will prevail at the Acme.

The Astor Theater Sold.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Astor theater, 7 North Broadway, has been purchased by the Rainbow Amusement Company, and has been thoroughly overhauled, redecorated. John Angelich is the manager of the Astor, which seats something like four hundred persons.

St. Louis, Mo.—Harry Leonhardt, traveling representative of the Fox exchanges, was in St. Louis for two days last week, looking over the Fox office, and Joe Levy, the manager.

Will Build Theatre at Salt Lake

Harry A. Sims Heads New Company That Will Erect a Fine New Picture House in Salt Lake City—Will Stand on Site Now Occupied by the Isis at East Third South Street and Will Seat 1,200 Persons.

By H. W. Pickering, Address, Deseret News, Salt Lake City, Utah.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah.—According to announcement made last week by Harry A. Sims, Salt Lake is to have another magnificent motion picture theater.

The new house, to be built by a corporation, known as the Deseret Theater Company, headed by Mr. Sims, will be called the Deseret theater, and will be built on the site now occupied by the Isis theater, in East Third South street.

The house will be built strictly for the exhibition of pictures and will have a seating capacity of 1,200. The total estimated cost of the building has not been divulged, but from the plans and specifications will require the expenditure of a large sum of money.

The front elevation of the theater will be built of rough-texture golden-brown brick, laid up with buff-colored mortar and trimmed with cream-colored terra cotta. Tall towers will be on either side of the building and will be surmounted by a great light ball, sixty feet from the ground. A panel in green bronze tile, with buff joints, will form the principal decoration of the towers. On the east tower will hang the large electric sign, and to the west tower will be attached a bronze flagstaff. A glass marquise will extend over the full width of the sidewalk across the full width of the entrance.

A feature will be the large plate glass "studio windows" covering a large part of the facade from the marquise to the cornice. This window will furnish light for the general offices and private office and for the women's rest room and writing room on the mezzanine floor.

The lobby and foyer will be finished in tile with marble trimmings. The very latest and most up-to-date lighting and ventilating systems will be installed, the latter designed to circulate 24,000 cubic feet of fresh air through the house every minute.

The Deseret theater will be pushed to completion with all possible speed and should be ready for opening before the winter season.

The company forming the corporation are: Harry A. Sims, president and manager; Herbert S. Auerbach, vice-president; Levi N. Harmon, secretary and treasurer. These officers, with H. J. Wallace and Susie M. Sims, form the board of directors.

Censorship Invades Colorado

Greeley, Colorado, City Council Institutes Board to Censor Theatrical Morals—No Sunday Shows Allowed.

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Col.

GREELEY, COLO.—Legalized censorship of moving pictures has finally been put into effect in Greeley. An ordinance was passed at the last meeting of the city council providing for a board of four members with power to compel all managers of amusement places to conform to the accepted ideas of the board.

This is the first town in Colorado to have an officially recognized board of censors. Denver has an amusement inspector appointed by the city, but the duties of this official have more to do with the conduct of dance halls and the interior arrangement and lighting of moving picture theaters, with respect to the morals of the young, than with the photoplays shown on the screen.

Censorship in Greeley is the outgrowth of an apparently innocent plan entered into by the exhibitors, whereby they permitted a self-constituted board of censors to pass on film productions. Now there is agitation in Boulder and Fort Collins, neighboring towns in Northern Colorado, for similar action.

The ordinance passed by the Greeley council empowers the board to have charge of the legitimate theaters as well as the moving picture houses and contains a clause prohibiting the opening of theaters on Sunday for the showing of any kind of moving pictures. The mayor is given power to appoint the members of the board and it is probable that the members of the old board which included two women, a minister and a layman will be named on the official body.

At United Exchange.

Denver, Colo.—M. Levy, president, and D. J. Chatkin, vice president of the United Film Corporation, spent three days in Denver last week arranging with H. Bradley Fish, local manager, for the exploitation of "The Yellow Menace" serial, distributed by the company. A trade showing of the first three chapters of the serial was given for the benefit of local exhibitors during their stay and elicited much favorable comment.

Following the departure of Messrs. Levy and Chatkin, Manager Fish announced the addition of a road man to his local staff in the person of A. A. Chatkin, former manager of the Kansas City exchange of the United.

W. B. Glasser Back With Distributors.

Denver, Colo.—W. B. Glasser, who for years has been connected with the various film exchanges of the West, is to return to the distributing end of the film game after a short whirl in the exhibiting branch. Glasser came to Denver recently to manage the Paris theater and later took charge of the Strand. Now he is negotiating with one of the large film corporations and probably will accept a responsible poposition in one of the Denver exchanges.

Milton H. Cohn Recovering.

Denver, Colo.—Milton H. Cohn, manager of the Notable Feature Film Company of Denver, distributors of Paramount pictures in the Rocky mountain region, is convalescent after a three weeks' illness of mumps and typhoid fever. Cohn is one of the most popular exchange managers in Colorado and news of his rapid recovery is received with much pleasure by moving picture people. In Mr. Cohn's absence J. W. Scott has been acting as manager.

Paris Theater Returns to Jitney.

Denver, Colo.—The first break in the campaign to establish Denver as a ten-cent moving picture city occurred this week when the Paris, one of the largest downtown houses, announced a return to the five-cent admission price. The action followed a rather eventful two-month period in which three different managers guided the destinies of the theater.

Denver Operators Demand Higher Wages

Local Union Files Notice of New Wage Scale and Asks Extra Compensation for Operators Who Have to Carry Films.

DENVER, COLO.—The Moving Picture Operators' Union filed notice simultaneously with the State Industrial Commission and Theater owners of an increase in its wage scale to take effect at once. All of Denver's downtown houses and some of the neighborhood theaters will be affected.

The new scale provides for a weekly wage of $25 for operators in the larger downtown houses where an eight-hour shift is worked; for $15 a week for relief operators who work not over five hours and for $15 a week for operators in neighborhood houses which are open only in the evenings and on Sunday afternoon. Fifty cents per hour is demanded for overtime in all instances except between the hours of 12 midnight and 7 A. M., when double time is demanded.

A new feature contained in the wage scale submitted by the union provides for compensation for the operator where he is required to carry films from the exchange to the theater and return. He is to be paid $2.50 extra per week for this service.

At the present time operators in Denver's downtown houses receive from $18 to $21 a week, depending largely on the man, while in the smaller theaters the pay ranges from $8 to $14 a week. Practically all of the downtown houses employ union operators, but only a small percentage of the neighborhood theaters have union men.

Musicians Ask $5 Increase.

Just what action will be taken on the demands for increased wages probably will be decided at a meeting of exhibitors this week. At the same time the question of increased wages for the union musicians employed in the downtown houses will be discussed. The musicians have demanded a flat increase of $5 per week. Only four of the larger houses, the Princess, Strand, Rialto and Iris, are affected by this. The other Curtis street theaters have organs, while the suburban houses employ only a pianist or a pianist and violinist.

Propose Big Exchange Building

San Francisco Capitalists Feeling Way Toward a Great, Centrally Located Exchange Building in Heart of Film Row, Between Jones and Levenworth Streets—Depends on Prospect for Leases—Details.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The erection ofin a film exchange building on Golden Gate avenue, between Jones and Leavenworth streets, in the heart of what is now termed Film Row, is being seriously considered by property owners and the project has reached a form where architects have been employed to prepare preliminary plans. These have been submitted to owners and managers of local film exchanges and in case sufficient space can be leased in advance, the erection of the structure will be commenced at an early date. A number of firms are now seeking larger quarters but are unable to secure locations on Film Row, as the available stores are all taken.

The preliminary plans for a Film Exchange Building are for a six-story structure covering a ground area of sixty-five by one hundred and thirty feet. The building is to be of strictly fireproof construction and will embody all of the improvements that have been found to be of advantage in structures of this nature. Projection rooms are to be established on each floor and special equipment will be installed for the rapid and safe handling of films.

Operators Plan Grand Ball.

San Francisco, Cal.—The fourth annual Movies Ball will be given under the auspices of the San Francisco Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 162, on the evening of September 2d, the Exposition Auditorium, the largest structure of its kind on the Pacific coast, having been secured for the occasion. A grand electrical display and cabaret show will be given in connection with the ball and it is anticipated that the attendance will exceed that of any previous event of this kind tendered by the organization. Plans for the event are in the hands of a committee of five members headed by P. Boyle, and a large amount of advertising is being done through the medium of window cards and slides. Music will be furnished by a fifty-piece orchestra and everything will be on an elaborate scale.

San Francisco, Cal.—The American Photo Player Company, which has for several years conducted offices and salesrooms at 130 Kearny street, has removed to 109 Golden Gate avenue, where it occupies the entire top floor of the Film Exchange building with more than sixteen thousand square feet of office and display space at its command. A large amount of remodeling work has been done and this has delayed the removal plans of the concern but, judging from the splendid appearance of the new quarters, both the delay and the expense incurred have been justified.

The main display room is located directly at the entrance and here it is planned to show the various types of instruments made by the firm, from the small ones for the suburban house to the large ones for the very largest theaters, such as the New Mission. Off this room are smaller ones for the display of special lines, shipping rooms and offices. One large room is being fitted up as a theater for reviewing pictures and it will be possible to present these with proper music, something that is lacking in most of the private exhibiting rooms. A large space has been set aside as a gathering place for exhibitors and here are tables, desks, chairs, stationery and reading matter for visitors.

Since the opening day Edward B. Baron, who is in charge of the floor, has welcomed many exhibitors to the new quarters and is inviting all who are interested the moving picture business to make this place their headquarters while in the city.

World Film Manager a Busy Man.

San Francisco, Cal.—M. E. Cory, manager of the local office of the World Film Corporation, has been very busy of late and reports a fine summer business. His former assistant, H. W. Stubbins, recently resigned to go to Los Angeles with the General Film Company, and no successor has been chosen as yet. Mr. Cory is particularly busy at the present time in furnishing the opening programs for new houses, having booked several films of late for such occasions. The new Searchlight theater on Church street was opened on August 5th with the attraction "What Happened at 22" and on August 26th the splendid Reliance theater at Oakland will open with "A Woman's Way," and will feature World productions four times a week. On September 2d the beautiful Royal theater on Polk street will open with the attraction "Miss Petticoats."

Equipment Business Good.

San Francisco, Cal.—Walter Predde has been doing a splendid equipment business during the summer, having made several installations of note of late. He has installed two Powers Cameragraphs No. 6B in the Roman Ampitheater at Idora Park, Oakland, and has also furnished Powers machines for the Lyceum theater, a new house at Fresno, Cal.

Creditors Give Producer More Time.

San Francisco, Cal.—A meeting of creditors of the California Motion Picture Corporation of San Rafael, Cal., was held recently and it was decided to allow the concern and the new manager who will shortly be in charge a year in which to pay the general claims. A committee was named, this consisting of E. E. Bogle, Charles O. Jensen, P. A. Powers, M. L. Mayers and Albert H. Elliott and the members of this will keep in close touch with the affairs of the corporation. M. L. Mayers represents the Eastern creditors, while Albert H. Elliott represents most of the local creditors.

Two Exchange Men Off for New York.

Metcalfe Issues Fine Catalogue.

San Francisco, Cal.—G. A. Metcalfe, 117-119 Golden Gate avenue, has just issued a handsome illustrated catalogue of moving picture theater equipment. This catalogue, which contains 178 pages, is noteworthy for its arrangement as well as for its completeness. There is no index, but instead everything is listed alphabetically, making the title "The A-B-C of Moving Pictures" quite appropriate. This handy volume was compiled by Walter L. Stern, the efficient sales manager of the firm.

San Francisco News.

Harry C. Drum, formely with the World Film, is now with the Pathe exchange.

Fox features are now being shown regularly at the Rialto on Market street and will be shown at the Franklin theater, Oakland, commencing September 6th.

The Breck Photoplay Supply Company has been busy of late sending out projection equipment, among the machines sold of late being a simplex for the C. & O. Lumber Company at Brookings, Ore., an American Standard machine for the A. & B. theater at Tonopah, Nev., and machines for the Bray Lumber Company, Bray, Cal., the Elite theater, Merced, and the Crystal theater of San Rafael.

The Searchlight theater has been opened at Twenty-eighth and Church streets by G. E. Seymour. This new house is a very attractive one with a seating capacity of 400 and takes its name from the searchlight that is to be erected on its roof.

Seattle Sees an Elaborate Production

Alexander Pantages and Isaac Rosenthal Doing Excellent Business With "Civilization"—Is Magnificently Put On—Former Big Films.

By J. S. Anderson, East Seattle, Washington.

THE big Ince spectacle, "Civilization," with all of the elaborate lighting and mechanical effects of the New York production, is in its second week at the Metropolitan theater, Seattle, with packed houses indicating a probable run of several weeks.

The big prologue, staged under the direction of J. J. Cluxton of San Francisco, and Michael J. Hooley, a veteran stock actor, has created a sensation as it is the first time that such a feature has been shown in the northwest. An orchestra of twenty musicians under the direction of Charles Lombard, president of the Seattle Philharmonic Society, interprets the score for the picture.

To Alexander Pantages and Isaac Rosenthal goes the credit for the first success with a multi-reel feature in Seattle. "The Birth of a Nation" and "Cabiria" met with poor success in "legitimate" houses, while "The Battle Cry of Peace" did little better on its first offering, but made good later on a return showing.

"Civilization" is being produced in Seattle by the Western Corporation, Alexander Pantages, president; Duncan Stewart of New York, vice president; W. I. Rosenthal, secretary, and Lois A. Pantages, treasurer. The corporation has a capital stock of $150,000 and owns the rights for ten western states and Alaska. The next opening will be at the Heilig theater, Portland, and Spokane, Tacoma, Butte and other northwestern cities will follow in rapid succession.

The Northwestern Corporation is "in the money" on "Civilization," for which achievement its officers are receiving congratulations.

Strand's Censorship Troubles.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Smythe, manager of the Strand, is not one of the complainers. He says business is good; but he has his troubles, anyway. During his recent showing of "War's Women," which had been passed by the national and city censorship boards, Mayor H. C. Gill entered the Strand on Friday, after the picture had run unmolested for five days, and, after viewing the film, ordered it taken out by the police. The mayor held that certain eliminations ordered by the city censorship board had not been made and fined the manager fifty dollars. Mr. Smythe claimed that the eliminations had been made and appealed the case to the superior court, where it will be decided in September.

Class "A" Changes Hands.

Seattle, Wash.—W. H. Smythe sold the the Class "A" theater a short time ago to E. A. English, who has put a fotoplayer and several other improvements into the house. The Class "A" is a popular five-cent, first run house, situated in the best part of the downtown district.

Big Features at the Grand.

Seattle, Wash.—Eugene Levy, manager and owner of the Grand theater, a combination vaudeville and picture house, this week announced the closing of an arrangement with the leading film producing companies of the country for the dispaly of their best features at the Grand at no advance in the regular house prices.

World Film Office Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—John W. Drum, who has been World's special traveling representative in Washington for the last 60 days, has just left for Spokane.

Manager Rennie has just signed a new contract with W. D. Gross for Southeastern Alaska.

J. H. Baum is now making boat trips to the coast towns around the Puget sound.

Alaska Exhibitors Visit Seattle.

Seattle, Wash.—Four of Alaska's picture men are leaving this city on Sunday, August 13th, for their homes, viz.: Captain Lathrop, who owns theaters in Anchorage, Cordova and Seward, W. D. Gross of the Alaska Film exchange, Juneau, P. E. Jackson, who is getting out plans for a new theater in Juneau, and Dick Thorne, who spent the winter in this city, is returning to his theater in Fairbanks.

Mutual Moves to Fine New Home.

Seattle, Wash.—The Mutual exchange has moved to a new building in the heart of Seattle's new business district at Third avenue and Virginia street. The building was erected at a cost of $20,000, and is fitted with all the latest improvements needed by film exchanges, such as automatic fire prevention, a fine auditorium for showing film and daylight inspection room.

SPOKANE NOTES.

By S. Clark Patchin, E1811 11th avenue, Spokane, Wash.

Theater Managers Picnic.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Members of the Spokane Theater Managers' Association are now contemplating a big picnic for managers, their employes and their families. The matter was up for discussion at a recent meeting and plans will be outlined at the next meeting. It is the aim to hold it in August.

New Uniforms at the Liberty.

Spokane.—Manager Ralph Ruffner, of the Liberty theater, has purchased new uniforms for the ushers and the doorman of the theater. They are of the dark maroon broadcloth, trimmed in sterling silver. The coats have velvet collars and cuffs and a double row of silver buttons.

Gathered Among Spokane Exchanges.

Kelner & Arena took over the old Orpheum theater in Whitefish, Mont., and have signed for the Mutual service. E. J. Sissel, former owner of the Orpheum, has built a new theater which he recently opened.

J. Harrington, roadman for the Mutual Film Corporation on the coast, and formerly manager of the Universal exchange in Seattle, is traveling in this territory for a couple of weeks for the Mutual.

E. Auger, of New York City, special representative of the Mutual Film Corporation, spent a couple of days here. He is making a tour of the northwestern offices of the company to get into close touch with managers and exhibitors and also to learn conditions.

Roy Maddern, manager of the local Mutual Film Corporation exchange, met with an accident in an automobile smash-up last week. Aside from a few bruises and a good shaking from the jolt he appears all right at this writing.

Petitions Put To Council

Portland, Oregon, Exhibitors Make Plea for Fairer Censorship Before Commissioners—The Mayor Is Antagonistic—Upholds Censor Colwell—Commissioner Baker Proposes New Ordinance—It Goes Over to Third Reading.

By Abraham Nelson, 809 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The motion picture interests of this city had their first real inning with the City Commission on August 9 in their fight for fairer censorship. Notwithstanding the fact that the table about which the commissioners sat was loaded with petitions from theater patrons siding with the picture men, statements by Mayor Albee were evidently given more weight by some than the voice of the people. The ordinance was read the first and second time in a matter of fact way and the final answer to the motion picture men's plea for fairness, if there must be censorship, will probably be made August 23 when the proposed ordinance comes up for the third and last reading.

Commissioner George L. Baker presented the ordinance and made an able address in favor of the right of appeal to the courts from censors' decisions. He reminded the other commissioners that it was their duty to do what was best to conserve the interests of the city. D. Solis Cohen, representing the picture men, related their grievances against Portland's no-appeal censorship, stating that it was not the purpose of the proposed ordinance to do away with censorship, but merely to give the picture men that protection to which they are entitled as American citizens.

A. F. Flegel, a Portland attorney and recently a candidate for Congress, argued vehemently in favor of the present no-appeal censorship. All the theater men and the attorneys present were surprised that a man of Mr. Flegel's standing should take such an un-American view of the situation. It is generally believed by the film men that Mr. Flegel's opposition to the ordinance was due to a lack of knowledge on the subject and that he spoke at the request of his wife, who is one of the Mayor's stanch supporters for no-appeal censorship, and who refused point-blank to listen to the film men's side of the case. Mr. Flegel drew comparisons between the regulation of motion pictures and the regulation of saloons and vile dives that the picture men resented as palpably unfair.

Thomas McCusker, secretary of the Employers' Association, evidently in the interests of his daughter, whose work as a viewer was criticised in the newspapers, also sided with Mayor Albee against giving the picture men an appeal.

G. T. Holtzclaw, of the Circle theater, spoke on the unfairness of Portland's censorship and other exhibitors cited instances of the injustice of the no-appeal feature.

Mrs. Millie R. Trumbull, representing the National Board of Review, read the following telegram from that body: "The National Board authorizes you to represent us in opposition to the present drastic, erratic and impractical ordinance and in favor of appeal to the courts. We favor skilled official expression of real public opinion on motion pictures."

The session was interspersed with interruptions by the mayor and Mrs. E. B. Colwell, the secretary of the board, taking exceptions to some of the speakers' remarks. The mayor finally succeeded in evading the big issue, namely, the right of appeal, and the session before the Commission became a petty quibbling match. When pinned down to a question why he objected to an ordinance giving the picture men the right of appeal to the courts, Mayor Albee stated that the present ordinance was working fine and there was no reason for a change.

Organized Labor Gives Support.

Eugene Smith, representing the Central Labor Council, also spoke before the Commisson. "The people who are trying to hold control of picture censorship are the same who would dictate what we should read or where we should go," said Mr. Smith. "This long-haired stuff in this Western country of some one always trying to censor some one else is what is ruining our country. You can't make a progressive nation if you don't let the people develop themselves."

Since the session before the Commission, the Labor Council, responding to an address by G. T. Haltzclaw, passed a resolution favoring the picture men. The theater men are laying their case before all classes of organizations.

Commission Government a Failure.

It is conceded by many of Portland's business men that the city's tyrannic censorship is merely one of the evils of the commission form of government with which Portland has been experimenting during the past few years. They say it places arbitrary power in the hands of a few men. The commission form of government is stated by the business men in question to be the greatest drawback to the city's progress, and there is a smouldering sentiment against it that will undoubtedly burst into flame before the next election.

Exhibitor Wins.

Dallas, Ore.—O. C. Smith of the Orpheum Theater won his appeal on the Sunday closing issue when Judge Belt ruled that the city ordinance prohibiting the opening of theaters on Sunday evening was in direct conflict with the state law. The appeal was taken from a decision of the municipal court of which Mr. Smith intended to make a test case.

Murphy Back at the Sunset.

Portland, Ore.—J. E. Murphy is back at the Sunset as house manager. J. A. Jennings, owner of the theater, is now running it personally, but the possibilities are that he may soon put his house man in entire charge. Mr. Murphy was manager of the theater when it first opened about two years ago and is very popular with the Sunset patrons. The house recently added Paramount and Triangle to its program.

Another Newcomer.

Forest Grove, Ore.—C. A. Hoffman, owner of the Star theater, is the proud father of a baby boy. Mr. Hoffman was on Portland's film row shortly after the happy event and did not hesitate to say that he would start the youngster in as an operator as soon as possible.

Pertinent Briefs.

Marshfield, Ore.—The Orpheum theater opened August 19 with Pathe's "Little Mary Sunshine." Marsh & Potter, who opened the house, were in Portland recently and purchased a new Powers 6A machine with motor attachment and rectifier from Pete Sabo. The house is built to seat about 1,200.

Star, Idaho.—Johnson Bros. opened a new theater here August 26. They formerly operated a store show here.

Portland, Ore.—Freedman & Bullier have opened the Richmond theater. It is under the direct management of C. S. Ayres.

Corvallis, Ore.—Byron Taylor, who operates the airdome here, is meeting with fine success. This airdome is about the only one in the state.

Ashland, Ore.—O. F. Bergner, who controls the theatrical situation here, is one of the chief promoters of the local Round-up.

Portland, Ore.—C. P. Merwin, traveling representative for V-L-S-E, recently returned from a trip over the entire territory and reports excellent business for his firm.

OUT OF THE MIST (Three Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Louise Dillon (Fritzi Brunette); Harry Grandin (Wm. Scott); Ben Ali Hashim (Guy Oliver); Grace Wilson (Gertrude Oakman); Arthur Marchand (Frank Clark); Mrs. Dillon (Lillian Hayward). Written by Emma Bell. Directed by Wm. Robert Daly.

Harry Grandin, a shipping clerk, is in love with Louise Dillon, a stenographer, who, after working temporarily for a firm, is notified that her services are no longer required. Ben Ali Hashin, an Arabian painter, has Grace Wilson pose for him. He is not satisfied with his work, and says he is tired of painting pretty women, as he cannot give them what they lack, namely, a soul.

Harry Grandin tells Louise that he is nearly through with night law school, and after his graduation they can be married. Grace tells Ben Ali of Louise, who she thinks would be a perfect type for his coming picture. Arthur Marchand, a libertine, wins the affections of Grace Wilson. Ben Ali, looking out of the window during a storm, sees the aged wreck of a woman selling newspapers. He is inspired with the desire to paint her, and says he will call the picture "Out of the Mist." He gives the woman money and starts the picture.

After many weeks Grace Wilson is cast aside by Arthur Marchand, who becomes infatuated with Louise Dillon. Harry Grandin cautions Louise against Arthur Marchand, and tells her that the attention of rich men to artists' models can result in no good. The statement is not relished by Louise. Grace Wilson vows to be revenged upon Marchand. When he calls at Ben Ali's studio he finds Louise alone and seizes her in his arms. The aged woman who sold newspapers then confronts him and tells him to turn back the sinful leaves of his memory and recall the time when he made love to her when she was young and beautiful. She tells Marchand: "The girl you just held in your arms and whose downfall you were planning is your own child and I am her mother."

Marchand, overcome by this news, staggers from the building and is confronted by Grace Wilson, who takes the man's life. Louise and Harry Grandin are reunited and the aged woman is cared for by Louise.

TOM'S STRATEGY (Sept. 2).—The cast: Tom Miller (Tom Mix); Florence Manton (Victoria Forde); Betty Dunn (Betty Keller); Howard Dunn (Howard Farrell). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom Miller, a cowpuncher, is in love with Florence Manton. Howard Dunn and his wife Betty visit Tom and his pals, who are in camp. A bear frightens the horse Betty is driving, she loses control of the animal, which runs away. Tom, seeing Betty's danger, rescues her. Florence, riding along, sees Tom stooping over Betty and thinks he is kissing her. She will have nothing more to do with the cowpuncher.

Tom and his pal spy a bear, which Tom shoots and kills. He then writes a note to Florence to the effect that he has been clawed by bruin. Florence and her friends then start for the scene where it is believed Tom has been clawed up. As Florence takes Tom in her arms he smiles and tells her it was only a joke. Florence is again angered, but Betty's husband comes upon the scene and thanks Tom for saving his wife's life. Then it is that Florence realizes that Tom is loyal to her and they are reunited.

THE REWARD (Sept. 1).—The cast: Pokes, a secret service man (Robert Burns); Jabbs, the pseudo doctor (Walter Stull); Butler, also a secret service man (Robin Williamson); The Girl (Mabel Best); Her Father (Frank Hanson); Her Mother (Helen Gilmore).

Masked behind the garb of respectability accomplished by the pseudo title of doctor, Jabbs conducts a gambling den in one of the most exclusive districts of the city. Although warned by a confederate that the hand of the law is about to grasp him, Jabbs refuses to leave. Pokes, a secret service man, who is delegated to watch Jabbs, saves Mabel from death at the peril of his own life. Jabbs, however, claims the credit for the rescue and later entices Mabel to come to his office. Once he has Mabel inside the office, Jabbs drops his mask and attacks the girl. Pokes on guard outside hears the noise of the struggle and the screams of the girl and dashes into the waiting room.

He finds his way to the private office barred, but nothing daunted, Pokes batters down the doors, and enters the private office. In the private office Jabbs, hearing the hammering on the doors, throws Mabel into a back room and now awaits Pokes' rush. The two men clinch and a struggle ensues during which both Pokes and Jabbs fight for the possession of a knife. Locked in a death-like clinch the fighting men roll out of the window and off the roof to the yard below.

Eluding Jabbs again, Pokes risks his life once more and reaches the room where Mabel is confined. Just as Jabbs enters the room Pokes seizes Mabel in his arms and dives out of the window into a passing machine. Inside the room, Jabbs is raging as Robin, another secret service man posing as a butler in Jabbs' office, clamps the handcuffs on the ruthless villain, while in the car Pokes now discloses his identity to Mabel, and wins his just reward.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

THE LEMON IN THEIR GARDEN OF LOVE (Aug. 23).—Hubby (Harry Myers) and wifey (Rosemary Theby) are happy but for Fido, "the lemon in their garden of love." Wifey showers more attention on Fido than upon her husband, which makes hubby angry. They quarrel and leave breakfast unfinished. When hubby gets to the office everything he touches or looks at turns into a little dog. Later hubby is notified that Fido has been killed, having fallen from a window sill where wifey placed him to get a sun bath. Hubby thinks he will be the "peach" in their garden of love and everything runs along smoothly until a package arrives. Hubby is advised that it contains the ashes of wifey's Fido.

Dinner is being served and the maid has just placed a plate of hot dogs on the table. Wifey attempts to place the jar containing Fido's ashes on the table and trouble commences again. He declares he will live with live dogs, eat hot dogs, but will not have his table decorated with cremated dogs. In reaching for the jar he accidentally knocks it over and breaks it. Wifey insists that he have it repaired. Realizing that he must get rid of this "lemon," hubby throws the jar away and concocts a story that he was held up and robbed of everything, even the jar. Although she is sorry for the dog, wifey is also very sorry for poor hubby.

Later on, when she is out walking, she is attracted by the sale of an antique jar, and returning home for her check book tells hubby, who has been reading about the jar, that it reminded her so much of the dog's jar that she must try to get it. Realizing that it must be the jar, hubby also decides to attend the auction and try to prevent wifey from getting the jar; he has a man bid against her. When the bid finally reached $1,500 hubby stops and wifey gets the jar. Upon returning home they discover that the jar is the one containing Fido's ashes. Wifey never intends to leave the jar out of her sight again and places it by her bed after kissing it good night. Upon seeing the jar turn into a dog hubby throws a pillow and knocks the jar to the floor. Wifey woke and tells him it is time for him to go. He goes as the picture fades out.

ESSANAY.

A MAN FOR A' THAT (Two parts—Aug. 22).—The cast: Frank Willard (Francis X. Bushman); Count Ver Sailles (Bryant Washburn); Ruth Davis (Ruth Stonehouse); Grace Meredith (Irene Warfield).

Frank Willard, a wealthy clubman, becomes disgusted with society. He chances to see a newsboy sharing his slender funds with a beggar, and this gives him an idea. He will live among the poor and obtain their point of view. Clothing himself in shabby attire, he leaves a note for Grace Meredith telling her he has gone out of the city, and then seeks the newsboy. He says he is out of work and starving and the boy takes him into his own home, where he lives with his grown sister, Ruth Davis. Willard goes to work as a laborer and continues to live with them. The girl falls in love with him, and he reciprocates the affection. One day the boy comes home excitedly displaying a paper with the photographs of Willard and Miss Meredith and the announcement of their engagement. He accuses Frank of deceiving his sister. Willard leaves, but is overtaken by Ruth and together they go to his home. There they find a letter notifying Willard that Grace Meredith has eloped with Count Ver Sailles.

THE FABLE OF HOW WISENSTEIN DID NOT LOSE OUT TO BUTTINSKY (Aug. 23).—Once there was a Steady who over-played his Stand-In and came within an Ace of losing his Ticket. One Evening he took a Friend with him to inspect the One Best Bet. The Friend, a clever two-handed boy, had practiced a few folds of his own. He declared himself in on the Close-up and made it a Three-some. Neither was a Quitter. Wisenstein played a deep system. He painted Buttinsky in bright colors and told the girl that lot of Women were spreading their nets for dear old Buttinsky. When the lady urged Buttinsky to demonstrate his Accomplishments he sang in a tenor that straightened the Princess out and had her biting at the Doilies. He helped matters a lot by advising the Princess to have no Dealings with a man who Drank, meaning Wisenstein. She became indignant because he roasted his friend who had always spoken so Lovely of him, and immediately classed Buttinsky as a false alarm.

MORAL—Beware of the Friend who tells how Good you are.

THE FACE IN THE MIRROR (Three parts—Aug. 26).—The cast: Conway Royle (Edmund F. Cobb); Gail Harvey (Patrick Calhoun); Helen Terrane (Josephine Sylvester); Warren Terrane (John Thorn).

A letter from the penitentiary informs Helen Terrane that Conway Royle, her first sweetheart, has been drowned while escaping. Hardly does she finish reading it than through her mirror she sees his face as he peers in a window. She mentions it to her husband, who sneers at her. Angered, she tells him she believes it was his treachery that sent Royle to prison, and declares that she married him only because of a letter from Royle urging such.

Gail Harvey phones Terrane as he is about to leave his home and by threats of revealing how the two committed the bank theft for which Royle was sentenced, demands money. He goes to the Terrane home that evening. Royle, who was believed drowned because he left his prison clothes near a swamp, has secreted himself in the house. He overheard how the two plotters had him, their fellow bank clerk, accused of the crime. Helen, too, overhears, and compels Harvey to telephone a confession to the newspapers. The police arrive, but Terrano picks up the pistol his wife had laid down, and ends his life. Royle and Helen begin anew.

HIS STOLEN FORTUNE (Two parts—Reissue—Aug. 29).—The cast: Frank Wentworth (Francis X. Bushman); Lola Holcombe (Beverly Bayne).

Frank Wentworth, an adventurous young American, is left a vast fortune by an uncle. After enjoying it for six months and engaging himself to a society girl, he discovers a letter from the deceased relative, confessing that the fortune was stolen from a Pole, named Max Illnski. Frank is ordered to return it. He advertises for the rightful heir and hundreds of Illuskis appear.

Mrs. Holcombe, his prospective mother-in-law, denounces him publicly. His experiences in seeking the lost heir give him a thrilling twenty-four hours, at the end of which he is found exhausted by the attorney for the estate. The latter informs him the letter was merely to test his honesty and that he is the rightful possessor of the fortune. All ends pleasantly.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF WASHINGTON AND SCENIC (Aug. 30).—The internationally famous beauties of our capital, repeatedly photographed, are here pictured more graphically than ever before in these motion drawings. They offer the best idea of what the seat of government is like from an architectural standpoint, attaining this result by perfect development of perspective.

This split reel, picturing as it does the White House, the Capitol proper and the various department buildings, together with the numerous embassies, legations and such, is highly educative and is the next best thing to a trip there in its vivid description. The other 500 feet of the reel is made up of beautiful scenic.

THE HIGHER DESTINY (Three parts—Sept. 2).—The cast: Helen Blair (Warda Howard); Richard Standing (Sydney Ainsworth); John Standing (Edward Arnold); Allene Blair (Gertrude Glover); Philip Cobb (Patrick Calhoun).

A physician advises Helen Blair to seek a different climate. She is without money. Philip Cobb, her daughter's sweetheart, tells them his employer, Richard Standing, has refused him an increase. Thus Mrs. Blair discovers the whereabouts of Standing, whom she rejected years before to marry Blair.

Standing treats her savagely when she appeals to him. His son, John, overhears the conversation and, seeing the girl, forces them to take the necessary funds to save the mother. The father discovers his love affair and sends him to Honolulu. The jealous Cobb gets a letter from a friend there and forges a new note telling that young Standing has become a drunkard. Allene and Cobb are married. John Standing returns after months and he and Allene learn of the deception. Cobb repents his deceit and drowns himself.

LUBIN.

THE USURER'S DUE (Two parts—Aug. 22).—The cast: Larry Finn (L. C. Shumway); Mrs. Dell (Velma Whitman); Martin Keen (George Routh); Italian Fruit Seller (Melvin Mayo); gang leader (Robert Gray). Written by Kenyon T. Nolan. Directed by Paul Powell.

Henry Dell, a clerk, becomes involved in debt to Martin Keen, a loan shark, and when Dell dies, his widow discovers that Keen holds a judgment note for $125 for which her furniture is security. Keen tells her he proposes to collect. Larry Finn, leader of a tough gang, becomes involved in a quarrel with the leader of another gang in a dance hall. The quarrel leads to a bitter feud. On the day when the widow Dell must either pay the judgment or lose her furniture, Finn is discovered by the opposition gang in their district. None of his followers is with him and he is obliged to seek safety in flight. He is pursued when Mrs. Dell opens the door of her home. Finn takes this avenue of escape, dragging Mrs. Dell inside with him and slamming the door just before his pursuers arrive. When he has explained the situation to the frightened woman, he finds her sympathetic.

Finn is still in hiding in the apartment when Martin Keen arrives for his money. Thinking it may be one of his enemies, Finn hides in an adjoining room and overhears Keen bullying and threatening Mrs. Dell. Keen leaves to obtain a constable to eject the poor woman. Finn returns to the living room and tells the woman to follow Keen and tell him that if he will return a few hours later, the note will be paid. Finn then leaves and proceeds to put into execution a plan which he has made. He knows that an Italian fruit dealer in the vicinity has saved up a sum of money to bring his sweetheart to America and he calls on the Italian. By pursuasive arguments he succeeds in borrowing $125 for a few hours. He takes the money to Mrs. Dell and instructs her to pay Keen and destroy the note.

Keen calls on Mrs. Dell at the appointed time and receives the money surrendering the note. Then he starts back to his office, but on the way meets with an unidentified footpad who relieves him of his fat purse. Later in the evening Finn turns up at the fruit stand and repays the money he borrowed from the Italian. Several months later Mrs. Dell changes her name to Finn.

VITAGRAPH.

A RACE FOR LIFE (Aug. 4).—The cast: Kitty (Mary Anderson); A Studious Student (William Weston); The Cook, Oliver (Otto Lederer); The Waitress, Mollie Mush (Jack Mower). Written and directed by William Wolbert.

Bill Strongarm, a college student, is in love with Kitty. Kitty is a hero worshipper and as there is not much of the hero about Bill, she pins her affections on one of the athletes of the college. When Bill goes to a restaurant for his luncheon, he interrupts the reading of a dime novel by Mollie, the waitress, who sees him as the incarnated hero of the book and proceeds to fall in love with him, much to the annoyance of Bill and Oliver, the cook who loves Mollie. Enraged Oliver chases Bill from the place and in seeking a haven of refuge Bill stumbles into the room of a stranger who, objecting to his presence, proceeds to throw him out.

In the process of expulsion, Bill loses all his wearing apparel with the exception of his nether garments. Outside once more, the cook resumes the chase and Bill keeps on going in fine style. A college meet is going on nearby and Bill's college is on the losing end. The last race—one mile—is about to start and on it the college bases its last hopes. Just as the pistol shot goes off, Bill appears on the scene, followed by the cook. He runs along the track outdistancing all the other runners, breaks through the tape and wins the meet for his college. After a triumphal ride around the field on the shoulders of his admirers, Bill finds that he has worked his way into the good graces of Kitty, who now considers him her hero.

THE BOND OF BLOOD (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Aug. 5).—The cast: Holden (Van Dyke Brooke); Evelyn (Leah Baird); Tom Ware (George Arvine); Jack Moore (Jack Ellis). Written and produced by Van Dyke Brooke.

Penniless, forsaken by all his friends, and with nothing left to live for except the vain hope of finding the daughter he has not seen for a great many years, Holden, a former actor, determines to consign his body to the mercy of the waters and thus end his misery. He is rescued by a fellow vagabond and they both drown their sorrows in liquor. A clerk from a theatrical agency, in search for "down and out" types for a new play, sees Holden and hires him to play a "super's" part in the show. During the first rehearsal the leading lady enters and Holden on seeing her face and hearing her voice recognizes her as his daughter, but when he tries to approach her, she repulses him. With a pained heart, Holden watches the rehearsal and sees his daughter clasped close to the breast of Gray, who plays her father.

The night of the show's opening approaches and everything is in readiness. The company gathers for a final rehearsal and all goes well until the reunion scene between the leading lady and her father whom she has not seen for many years. Then Gray, the father in the play, is stricken with heart trouble and is unable to go on. The company is in a panic—their biggest scene has been spoiled—and there is no one else acquainted with the part. Holden steps forward and asks permission to play it—it will be his only chance to caress his daughter. Although skeptical, the producer consents to give him a chance. The leading lady, however, revolts against playing with the old tramp. The rehearsal goes on. Holden throws his heart and soul into the part and when, after he has been roundly applauded by all those present for his excellent work, he breaks down from the effect of conflicting emotions. Even the leading lady becomes sympathetic. The rehearsal over, Holden claims his daughter and she accepts him willingly.

CONDUCTOR KATE (Aug. 14).—The cast: Kate (Kate Price); Her Husband (Templer Saxe). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Directed by Edmund Stratton.

When her husband, a conductor, comes home considerably "under the weather" and unable to go to work, Kate, about twice his size, hands him a good beating, and after donning his coat and hat, starts off to take his place. The inspector objects to her running the car, but a large size fist overrules his objections and with two pulls at the bell rope, she starts off for a day's work. A large, important looking individual, contentedly smoking a quarter cigar, refuses to heed her request that he "clinch the rope" and finds himself nicely bruised up and minus the cigar in jig time.

With an old woman and her child enter the car and none of the "gentlemen" offer her his seat, Kate once more takes matters into her own hands and gently removes one of the men. Now that she has established herself as the boss of the car she has no further trouble until three or four "roughnecks" enter and refuse to pay their fare. A real scrap ensues, making the others look like mere skirmishes, and this time Kate's job is not so easy for the odds are too great against her; but hubby, sobered up a bit, comes to her assistance just in time, and saves the day.

THERE AND BACK (Aug. 18).—The cast: Hughie (Hughie Mack); Vampire (Josephine Earle); Mrs. Hughie (Patsy DeForest). Authors, C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. Director, Lawrence Semon.

Hughie is a past master at the well-known art of "double cross." When he uses the old "sitting up with a sick friend" alibi, it misses fire, and although wifie allows him to believe that she has swallowed it "hook, line and sinker," she really plots to trail him and see the sick friend herself. Hughie chuckles to himself at how easily he has deceived friend wifie and starts out to have one jolly little time.

In the cabaret, Hughie starts a flirtation with the vampire detective his wife has hired for the purpose and is having a jolly time when wifie enters. Hughie sees her first, though, and beats a strategic retreat with a table covering his manoeuver. When wifie, baffled in her search, returns home she is met by her irate husband, who jumps out of bed and demands to know where she has been. She explains and begs forgiveness for suspecting him. After delivering a little lecture to her, Hughie is well satisfied to let the matter rest.

THE WANDERING HORDE (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Aug. 19).—The cast: Carlton Wood (Evart Overton); Paul Travers (Denton Vane); Lola (Adele Kelly); Renshaw (Edward Elkas). Author, James Oliver Curwood. Director, Eugene Mullin.

The brakes are applied. With a screech the long freight comes to a halt, and from one of the cars a band of hoboes scamper to the ground and leave the yards to find a secluded place where they may eat. A newcomer enters the scene, young, handsome, frank, but lacking the signs of poverty which distinguish the others. When they hear his hard luck story, he is welcomed as one of the band and invited to partake of their frugal meal.

Wood, the stranger, soon makes friends with the "hoboes," especially a man named Brown, who tells him his tale. He had been unemployed for a long time, he says, and was unable to support his wife and daughter. Then when he obtained a position in a town far away, and by dint of careful saving, has amassed a fortune of $100. He felt reluctant to spend part of it on fare, and had chosen the "side door pullman" as a cheaper conveyance than the real way. When the trip is resumed, Wood goes on with the others. In a wreck, he suffers injuries and Brown takes him to his house to be cared for by his wife. After his recovery, Wood becomes fond of his new friends. Lola, Brown's daughter, finds herself fast losing her heart to Wood, and is disappointed on learning through a newspaper clipping that he is really wealthy and is not one of them. She takes the paper to Wood and shows him the clipping, which says that he has been ruined by a reversal in the stock market. Suspecting that this is the work of Travers, who has been working against him, Wood starts out for revenge. He learns that Travers is out driving in an auto and follows him, but discovers that vengeance has been taken from his hands when Travers' machine is destroyed in a railroad blast, and all its occupants are killed.

Wood now completes his book on "The Wandering Horde" for which he had been obtaining material when he sojourned with the "hoboes," and the sale of the work nets him a tidy sum. With this money he returns to Brown and becomes his partner for the purpose of pushing his invention. Still Wood feels that there is a void somewhere which he cannot analyze—but when he does analyze it, he has no difficulty in persuading Lola to fill it, by becoming his partner for life.

DID HE OR DID HE NOT? (Aug. 21).—The cast: Adam Bluffer (William Lytell, Jr.); The Boss (Geo. O'Donnell); Cynthy (Shirley More); Stenographer (Dorothy Long); Mrs. Shannon (Florence Natol); Hiram (Ralph Whiting.) Author, Charles Israel. Director, Frank Currier.

Buying farms in the country is a much more congenial occupation than laboring over a desk in the sultry atmosphere of the crowded city. Unable to get his boss to give him a vacation, Harold decides to be overcome by the heat and thus obtain the desired rest. In Pumpkinsville he announces his intention of buying a farm, and all the real estate owners of

THE YELLOW GIRL (Aug. 25).—The cast: W. Aiston Black (Webster Campbell); The Yellow Girl (Carmen Phillips); Corinne (Corinne Griffith); Flora (Florence Vidor). Writtend and produced by Edgar Keller.

W. Allston Black, an artist of the futuristic school, goes to a performance of "The Yellow Girl" hoping to be bitten by the inspirational germ. The classic lines of "The Yellow Girl" give him an idea and he succeeds in making an appointment to paint her portrait. Allston's fiancee, seeing "The Yellew Girl" enter the studio, thinks he is untrue to her and determines to make sure. While Allston is busy on his painting, she hides behind a screen where she may see and hear all that takes place. She hears enough to convince her that Allston really loves her and feels sorry that she should have suspected him. Allston tells "The Yellow Girl" that he is going to marry as soon as he can get enough money, and she, when leaving, helps him toward his goal by leaving a large advance check for the portrait.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE

FAITH'S REWARD (Three Parts—Aug. 25).—The cast: Joseph Haynes (Henry King); Belle (Marguerite Nichols); Grace Careive (Ida Van Tine); Mrs. Careive (Mollie McConnell); Harvey Livingstone (Fred Whitman); "Old Joel Rogers" (Daniel Gilfether).

The dreamer, Joe Haynes, a prospector, sees Grace Careive in company with her mother and her fiance, Harvey Livingstone, as they are stalled on a siding. She is on an observation platform of a private train. He makes her the center of his dreams, although he has previously been interested in Belle Rogers, the station master's daughter, who loves him.

When he accidentally strikes gold, he leaves to find Grace Careive to ask her to marry him. Belle, heartbroken, remains at home. After a month in a hotel, Joe meets Grace and Harvey in a peculiar way, while at luncheon. The Careives are greatly in need of money and when Grace learns Joe has millions she encourages him. He proposes and is accepted, although she loves Harvey, who is almost penniless.

They are married and Grace takes no pains to conceal dislike of her husband and entertains Harvey. He finds them together one day in each other's arms and denounces them. Grace tells him the state of things. The dreamer is awakened and he leaves to patch up matters in the West, where his mine has failed.

Six months elapse and he is working hard in the mine. The dreamer is no more. He is shaken to earth. He receives a letter from Grace telling of her receiving her first decree and she is to marry Harvey. He is absolutely immoved and realizes he never loved her.

He goes into his shack and the vision that has always come before with Grace comes again only this time it is Belle. He realizes he has always loved her and rushes to her home. The dream materializes and he asks her to marry him. Later his dream materializes.

BIOGRAPH.

A CHANGE OF SPIRIT (Reissued Aug. 28).—The cast: The Girl (Blanche Sweet); Her Sweetheart (Walter Miller); Her Father (William J. Butler); Crooks (Henry Walthall and Charles H. Mailes).

Denied by her narrow-minded father all associations except that of her chaperon, the girl, while strolling in the park, indulges in a little flirtation with a young man who is one of a couple of gentlemen thieves. A self-introduction comes when he gallantly picks up a book she has dropped. In restoring the book he cunningly takes her handbag in order that he may have an excuse to call on her later and return it, giving her the impression that she had lost it.

When he calls her father is away, and so, in the spirit of bravado, she invites him in. While there he surreptitiously secures the key to the house, intending to return later with his partner. However, upon accidentally meeting the girl the second time, he becomes deeply impressed and the thought of his promise to his chum to enter the house that night palls. As can be imagined, the work laid out is odious in the extreme, but it is the means of causing in him a change of spirit.

ENOCH ARDEN (Reissue—Two Parts—Aug. 29).—The cast: Enoch Arden (Wilfred Lucas); Annie Lee (Linda Arvidson; their children (Florence La Badie and Robert Harron; Philip Ray (Frank Grandon).

This subject tells of the betrothal of Enoch and Annie, the despair of Enoch at his inability to cope with the demands of his increasing family obligations, and his sailing away to recoup his fortunes on a vessel bound for China. A storm is encountered, the vessel wrecked and Enoch and his two companions are washed upon a tropical island, where they are forced to stay. Annie all the while is ever hopeful of his return, while Philip, though an unsuccessful rival, shows a kindly interest in the little grief-stricken family. Finally Annie accepts Philip for the sake of her children, and when her new baby came, Philip's child, she is Philip's all-in-all. Meanwhile a ship in quest of water puts in at the island and Enoch, now alone, his comrades having died, is rescued. His homecoming is sad indeed and he welcomes the death that keeps Annie in happy ignorance.

SEVEN DAYS (Three Parts—Aug. 23).—The cast: Flannigan (Charles E. Mailes); the burglar (Dave Morris); Bella Wilson (Louise Orth); Kit McNair (Florence Lee); Jap Servant (Jack Pickford); Dal Brown (Walter Miller); Jim Wilson (Jack Dillon).

Jim Wilson arranged a financial settlement with his wife, Bella, after their divorce. Bella and Jim still care for each other, but both are too stubborn to admit it.

A year later Jim prepares to celebrate the anniversary of his divorce by giving a dinner. A burglar enters the Wilson home and hides behind a screen. Jim is greatly handicapped by his butler's illness, and his dinner is delayed.

Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Brown, Tom Harbison and Kit McNail, Jim's friends, are invited to the dinner. Tom and Kit are in love with each other, but their jealousy leads to many quarrels. Tom quarrels with Kit and refuses to accompany her to the dinner, and she joins the Browns. Mrs. Brown has been studying spiritualism and believes she is a great medium. Her belief is augmented by a few cocktails.

The butler is taken to the hospital, and Jim is shocked when told that he may have smallpox. Flannigan the cop calls on the cook.

Jim receives a telegram from his Aunt Selina that she is coming to see him. He knows that if his aunt learns he is divorced, she will cut him out of her will. She has never met Bella and he pleads with Anne to pose as his wife during his aunt's stay. Anne refuses, but Kit volunteers. Tom arrives and is insane with jealousy to find Kit posing as Jim's wife. Jim explains his position to Tom and is forgiven.

Bella sees the ambulance and, thinking the invalid is her husband, she determines to know the truth and enters. She meets Anne, who has had too many cocktails, and when she inquires about the invalid, Anne sends her to the kitchen. The burglar accidentally moves the screen, and Anne believes more firmly in her power as a medium.

Belle finds Flannigan intoxicated in the kitchen and, forgetting her position, tries to put him out. Bella becomes jealous when told Kit is in the house, and determines to stay. Aunt Selina arrives and is introduced to Kit as Jim's wife.

The Board of Health orders the house quarantined. The next morning the burglar sees Bella and hides in the dumbwaiter. Jim, Harbison and Brown spend a very uncomfortable night in one bed, and greet daylight with pleasure. Kit finds Bella, who explains that she is there to see the cook. To prevent Jim seeing her, Bella hides in the coal cellar and accidentally falls into the coal bin. Jim discovers her and she explains her presence as the result of a call on the cook.

Bella is introduced to Aunt Selina as a friend of the cook's. Aunt Selina decides they must all do their share of the housework, and they draw lots. Kit draws "Cook," Anne "Butler," Dal "Laundress." Jim "Scullery maid and chamberwork," Harbison "Assistant Cook and Plumber," Flannigan "Ladies' Maid," Selina "Barber," and Bella "Furnace."

Bella and Tom keep up their pretence of being engaged, and complain that the quarantine prevents them from being married. Dal suggests they be married by phone. Tom, frightened at this idea, tells Dal the phone is broken and throws it down the chimney. Anne discovers the phone missing and, hearing the burglar sneeze, she believes the spirits are in attendance. She lowers the clothesline down the chimney and is delighted on pulling the rope to find the missing phone which the burglar has tied to the line.

Kit and Tom decide to make up, and Aunt Selina is amazed and shocked to find them embracing. Jim and Bella give her a second surprise by doing the same. The Board of Health announce that the Jap has not had smallpox and the quarantine is lifted. The presence of the burglar is discovered, and through him Aunt Selina learns the true state of affairs. Jim and Bella are forgiven and the burglar makes his escape.

THE DESERT RAT (Two Parts—Sept. 2).—Written by Gertrude Mason. Produced by Romaine Fielding.

Pete is a wanderer of the desert who has been looking for gold for many years, but who has never been successful. One day he sees a man dying of thirst. He gives the crazed fellow some water and takes him to his camp. Here they agree to go partners on the claim.

Years before Pete had been the proud possessor of a home and family and a friend. But the friend had stolen into the home and had taken his wife's love. So Pete had left and gone to live on the desert. It so happened the young man Pete rescued was his son, as he discovered by a picture of his mother that the lad had in his pocket. But Pete does not reveal his identity.

At the edge of the desert lived Tom and his daughter Helen, who make a living by selling supplies. One day Roy comes to buy some bread just as the girl is being attacked by a half-breed. He saves her; after this a love grows between them. A few nights later the half-breed comes to wreak his vengeance on Roy. Pete sees him, but does not shoot quite quick enough and the half-breed succeeds in knifing Roy.

The boy is taken to the hut of Tom and there he hovers between life and death for weeks. Continually he calls for his mother and at last Pete realizes that the only way to save the boy is to send for the mother. When the mother arrives Pete cannot stand the pain of a meeting, so he departs to the desert to live out his life in wandering penance and solitude.

RED FEATHER.

THE FOLLY OF DESIRE (Five Parts—Aug. 28).—Written by Alice and Claude Askew and Edward Kurnblauch. Produced by George Loan Tucker.

In an Eastern palace the fair Shulamite awakened love in an aged King and death and fears were the ministers of that love. Long centuries afterward a girl at the door of an African hut woke passion in the heart of an old Boer farmer.

Simeon Krillet wedded the penniless Deborah, to the disgust of his sister, Tant Anna, and the secret grief of that sister's son, Jan. He loved her, but only as the dearest of his chattels, something of which he was absolute master. To this household came Robert Waring, seeking forgetfulness of his wife, a morphine fiend. A fierce pity awoke in him for the "poor little Shulamite." He was kind to her; he gave her a book; he threatened the life of her husband if he struck her again.

Krillet found her reading, and Deborah stopped the uplifted jambok with a lie prompted by mortal terror: "Do you want to kill a woman—and her child?" A storm threatened. Waring was off to town to buy stores. Krillet, now subdued, asked him to bring back books for his wife. He went to the Englishman's room and was attracted by the binding of his diary. He opened it, and this met his eyes: "What will Krillet do when he finds out that she has lied to him? . . . I wish I could take her away." Mad with rage, the old man showed his wife the book. She seized it joyously, quite content to die since she had won the love of the Englishman. Krillett ordered his wife to put on her wedding gown, and went out to dig her grave. Then he took her to the burial field. Deborah's little Kaffir maid warned Waring. Deborah was saved and Krillet was killed by a flash of lightning just as the Kaffir girl fired.

Deborah insisted that the dead man be buried at once. When it was over the strain and exposure brought on a fever which nearly proved fatal to Waring. Deborah's nursing saved Waring's life. He was filled with passionate love and gratitude, but the figure of his wife Joan stood ever between him and Deborah.

Meanwhile the mail from England brought news of Joan's illness, of her desperate effort to conquer her vice; Waring was told that it was his place to help his wife; Joan was even then on her way to him. Deborah sadly assented; his duty was clear. Deborah and Waring were left alone; but the departing Boers almost brushed the skirts of an Englishwoman at the door of the farm. It was Joan, at the point of death, who had come to her husband. She died with his forgiveness. Deborah comforted the bewildered, suffering man.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE HEART OF A SHOW GIRL (Two Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Elspeth Marner (Ella Hall); Frank Masterson (Franklyn Farnum); Mrs. Marner (Mrs. Muir); Mrs. Burnes (Helen Wright). Written by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Wm. Worthington.

Elspeth Marner is a seventeen-year-old premiere danseuse. Frank Masterson is the most hated as well as the most respected critic of dramatic art in New York. When the story opens, Elspeth, flushed with applause, enters her dressing room where her mother and the maid rush to do her bidding.

The next morning, in bed, Elspeth reads Masterson's scathing criticism; that her real name is doubtless Lizzie Schmitt; that she is spoiled and petulant and not at all a lady, etc. Elspeth is furious, hysterical, angry and her mother, after telephoning Masterson to tell him her opinion of him, calls in the doctor. He sees that it is only a case of jaded nerves and in spite of the mother's protestations, orders the girl away, alone.

Elspeth is sent to the seashore and placed in charge of some simple fisher folk. At first, Elspeth is inclined to be willful and very trying but gradually the kindliness of Mother Burnes wins her over. Meantime, to get away from the confusion of the city life, Masterson, incognito, takes a small fishing shack at the seashore.

The two meet—and neither recognizes the other. The friendship ripens each discovers himself becoming younger, happier, gayer until on a fishing trip one day, when Elspeth is almost drowned, they realize that they are madly in love with each other. But arriving at the Justice of the Peace's office, they, for the first time, learn the other's true identity; there is defiance, hesitation, petulance for a time. Then all ends happily.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 3—"American Blood"—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Jose Leon (Bertram Grassby); Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Pedro (Eddie Polo). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Liberty Horton, the American heiress, having escaped from her abductors who are led by Lopez, rides toward the town of Discovery, to warn the Americans there of the plot of the insurrectos to attack the place. Lopez sends out several rebels who shoot and wound her, but the coming of some American soldiers from the camp frighten them away. She is placed in a hospital tent and when she recovers consciousness tells the American soldiers that the rebel chieftain, Alvira, has 1,000 insurrectos under his command and intends to attack the town of Discovery at once. A band of Texas rangers give battle to the Lopez band and rout them.

The military camp officers then try to send a telegram of warning to the operator at Discovery, but he fails to receive the message. Alvira and his army attack Discovery. While the battle between the rebels and the citizens is raging, the timely arrival of a large detachment of American soldiers results in the routing of the insurrectos.

Liberty, having recovered somewhat, is able to ride with an armed escort, to her late father's hacienda, and here she seeks recreation during her recovery. Major Winston, one of the guardians of Liberty, gambles heavily, and gives notes of his indebtedness of the total of $20,000. Jose Leon, the other guardian of Liberty, has a son, Manuel, who desires to wed Liberty, and so the father and son plot to use the gambling notes against Winston to try to force him to agree to the prospective marriage of Liberty and Manuel.

Liberty, whose sweetheart is an American army officer, Captain Rutledge confers with him, and they pledge affection to each other. Jose taunts Major Winston about his betrayal of his duty as guardian in losing money belonging to Liberty, but the latter refuses to comply with Jose's demands.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME (Episode 3—"He Becomes a Cop"—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); The Landlady (Margaret Whistler). Written and produced by Wallace Beery.

Timothy has just returned from an unsuccessful visit to one of the well known studios. With the funds gone, Timothy and Jeff are forced to secure new quarters and they end up at a second-rate boarding house run by an old maid. She threatens to put them into the streets if they don't pay up and Timothy, realizing the desperate nature of their situation, decides to use flattery to prolong their stay in the house.

He makes love to the old maid in a gallant manner and wins her consent to have them remain a little longer. The landlady is transported to a new heaven of delight over the ardent love making of the handsome boarder. He learns that at one of the comedy companies men are wanted to act. The next day he and Jeff hurry to the studio. At last Timothy gets in and is given an extra part as one of the cops. He has a rough and tumbled time. In a chase he finally falls out of the automobile and is dragged through the streets. Jeff sees Timothy as the car passes and sets out in pursuit.

Were it not for a fortunate sandpile, poor Timothy would be dragging yet. But he is stopped very suddenly and when Jeff comes hurrying up, all that can be seen of Timothy is his feet sticking out, the balance of him being covered with sand. Jeff rescues him and the two friends sadly return to the boarding house.

The old maid sees her gallant lover all bruised and bleeding and bandages him up. Timothy comes to and sees the old maid sitting beside him. He frantically pleads with Jeff to take him away, even to the studio, anywhere to be away from his persistent admirer.

THE CHANCE MARKET (Three Parts—Aug. 29).—The cast: John Marmaduke and Jim Fowler (King Baggot); Mary Cullen (Irene Hunt); Tim Cullen, her father (Jack Ridgeway); Buxton (Frank W. Smith); John Coyle (Howard Crampton.

Mary Cullen is engaged to be married to Jim Fowler, a crook. Jim's pals come to get him to go on a big job, and Jim leaves in spite of the protests of Mary. The house that the crooks have picked out to rob is that of John Marmaduke, a wealthy bachelor. Jim is picked as the one to go inside to do the work. John is still up and hears the man enter. A struggle ensues and it ends as John kills Jim. The butler comes in and both men notice that there is a striking resemblance between John and the burglar. The bachelor decides to take the crook's place and to leave the body there to make it appear as if he has committed suicide. The butler swears secrecy so John puts on the other man's clothes and sallies forth.

Jim's pals scamper as soon as they hear the shot but linger just outside the grounds. When John comes out they attack him to get the swag. Mary finds him bleeding and sore and leads him to her home. The next day Marmaduke goes to his own funeral and notices that his erstwhile fiancee is not at all grieved at his death. He resolves to keep his character as a crook. That evening at supper Mary is surprised at Jim's improved noble manners but does not suspect anything until the next day when the butler comes to see his master. Mary denounces Marmaduke for the deceit he has played.

In the meanwhile Jim's pals have found out that he is at Mary's house and they come to thrash him. Mary warns him but he says that he will not leave without her. But they have taken so long to argue that the thieves come and trap John. Joba succeeds in getting the best of one of the crooks but is having a hard time with the other when Buxton, the butler, whom Joba has sent for a real meal, arrives in time to save his master. Mary is rushed into a waiting auto and as the picture fades out the two are seen in the toaneau of the car embracing each other.

LITTLE BROWNIE'S BRAVERY (Sept. 1).—The cast: Doctor (Arthur Allardt); "Brownie" (Elizabeth Janes); Her Father (Edward Hearn); Buster (Cameron C. Coffey). Written by L. Canfield. Produced by C. S. Elfelt.

Tom was formerly a life-guard on the beach, but an accident made him an invalid. His only chance of recovery is a costly operation and he and his little daughter, Brownie, are saving up to have it performed. The girl is an expert swimmer and makes quite a little by diving for pennies or any other coins that people throw in the water.

One day Tom is despondent and is about to end it all when Brownie comes in and says that she has had a very successful morning and has earned all but twenty-five dollars of the money for the operation.

That afternoon a doctor is leaning against the railing on the boardwalk when it gives way and he is thrown into the water. Brownie saves him and the doctor comes that night to thank his little heroine. When he sees the father in bed he inquires the trouble and volunteers to perform the operation. The father recovers so that Brownie does not have to risk her life any more for the sake of a few paltry pennies. The little family rejoices in their new-found happiness.

L-KO.

THE RIGHT CAR BUT THE WRONG BERTH (Two Parts—Aug. 30).—The cast: Mr. Cowbull (Dan Russell); The Lady (Katherine Griffith); Her Husband (Vin Moore).

The duties of a floorwalker should stop at showing ladies the right counters, but Mr. Cowbull lets his duties go further. Unfortunately, a nasty-tempered husband thought otherwise regarding dressmaking shops. Mr. Cowbull did not heed, however, until matters reached such an unpleasant state that he was told he had five minutes to get out of town.

He was perfectly sincere in wishing to escape, but unluckily husband picked out the same train. Mr. Cowbull jumped on a mail catcher to save his life, but the mail catcher threw him back again into a woman's berth. The husband was not supposed to be there, either, but he was, and so was the conductor, and so was the porter and so was a flirt-hater.

All picked out the top of the train for the exercising grounds. The train had to be in the great city on time and couldn't stop for a mere killing. This made running on top even more unpleasant and Mr. Cowbull ran from one end to the other or until he caught on a bridge. The husband, however, also caught on the bridge, but neither one knew that this bridge was a drawbridge and went up 250 feet.

How drawbridges, trains, steamboats, hand cars and flying machines could all meet in one spot and not get mixed up any worse than they did is a problem.

JOKER.

A MARRIAGE FOR REVENGE (Aug. 26).—The cast: Nancy Mopes (Gale Henry); Obidiah Amutt (William Franey); Jack Amutt (Milburn Moranti); Silas Gabb (Charles Conklin); Neva Gabt (Lillian Peacock). Written by W. W. Farmer. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Amutt and Gabb meet and decide that their son and daughter shall marry to unite the families. But the young folks do not take kindly to the proposal, as they have never seen each other. So Neva, who is summering in the country with Nancy Mopes, an old maid, sends her picture to the prospective bridegroom and then leaves for the city, where she takes a position in a lunch room.

Jack receives the picture and nearly passes away when he sees the awful face. The only way out for him is to get married to some one else, so he sets out to find some likely girl. By chance he meets Neva and she agrees to marry him, as a marriage will save her also. So they force a minister, who happens to come into the lunch room, to marry them.

The two fond parents are angry when they learn that their children have not married according to their wishes, but when it is discovered the pair have unwittingly married anyway everybody is happy except Nancy, who is still minus a husband.

THE ELIXIR OF LIFE (Sept. 3).—The cast: Doctor (Wm. Franey); His Wife (Gale Henry); Queen (Lillian Peacock); Friend (Milburn) Moranti; Crook (Chas. Conklin). Written by Harry Wulze. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Doctor has an elixir of life and desires to borrow a mummy to try it on. His friend, a keeper of a museum, refuses to lend the mummy. The friend gives a dance and his fiance dresses as Egyptian girl to dance for the party.

Meantime doctor hires a crook to steal the mummy. A janitor takes a mummy from its case to clean the case and forgets to return it. The Queen exits from the platform, falls in a faint and drops into the casket. The crooks arrive, steal the casket and take it to the doctor's house. He gives it some elixir and the Queen recovers. She thinks the doctor a bug and pretends to revive like a mummy to humor him. The doctor's wife sees this and then sees the Queen dancing for hubby. Finally she catches the Queen and doctor, places them over burning powder chamber to get revenge for doctor's perfidy.

Meanwhile the crowd in the museum have missed the dancer and are out looking for her. They find the cops, who explain crooks' confession. All return to laboratory just in time to save Doctor and Queen from the wrath of wify.

NESTOR.

THE TERRIBLE TURK (Aug. 28).—The cast: Eddie (Eddie Lyons); Lee (Lee Moran); Girl (Priscilla Dean); Father (Fred Gambie). Written by Harry Wulze. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Eddie, calling on his girl, hears her father state that he needs the great Majah ruby to complete his collection. Eddie leaves and comes to store, where he sees a big ruby. He buys the ruby and goes home, where he gets Lee to impersonate a Hindu jewel vendor. They then go to the girl's house, where father treats Lee with great respect.

Meantime a real Hindu, looking much like Lee in his disguise, has learned that the cheap ruby Eddie bought is the genuine article, and he has followed the boys. He gets in the house and suddenly comes face to face with Lee. The Hindu knocks Lee out and takes his place at the banquet table. Lee, recovering, gets into a mess in the antique room and the crowd rush in to see the trouble, leaving the Hindu and the girl alone. The Hindu now tries to get the ruby. Lee comes in and the Hindu is forced to run. He leaps out a window and hides in bushes outside. Girl explains what has happened. Lee walks into the trouble and is accused of attacking the girl. Lee runs, the crowd after him.

The chase leads back to the room, where Eddie is consoling the girl, and here Lee is cornered. He is trying to make himself understood, when the real Hindu returns and is caught by Eddie. Eddie now learns the truth and the situation is explained to the girl's father, who is grateful for having the ruby saved, and the Hindu is taken away, while Lee is left to congratulate Eddie and the girl.

Donohoe, the leader of a band of crooks, takes a vacation in the country and there meets Mary Phagan. The two marry, without her knowing the kind of a chap he is, as he assumes another name. Donohoe decides to make one more haul and then settle down to the right kind of a life. He leaves for the city and gets in touch with his confidant, John Logan. His friends are all delighted to see him and they begin to frame up a job.

"Squint" Duffy, a detective, is promised promotion if he can land Donohoe. Duffy knows Logan and tips him off that he has a "sucker." Donohoe and the gang decide to fleece him and rig up a fake pool room. He is caught and a fight ensues in which Donohoe shoots and kills one of the stool-pigeons and makes his escape with Logan. Later Mary's grandmother dies and Mary goes to the city to seek work—and her husband. In the tenement house where she lives she meets Logan and they become good friends.

After a year or so Donohoe obtains Mary's address from the postmaster and seeks her—but she is not at home when he arrives; when she and Logan come in he hides behind the door and surprises her, but not as much as he does Logan. Donohoe signals for him not to give him away, as Mary knows nothing of his past life.

"Squint" Duffy has been watching Mary and Logan for some time and now makes a call. He is surprised to see Donohoe and tells Mary that he is wanted at headquarters. Because of his love for Mary, however, he insists he is the one who killed the stool, and so Donohoe is free to live an honest and happy life.

BIG U.

THE DEVIL'S OWN (Aug. 25).—Written by George E. Marshall and W. B. Pearson. Produced by George E. Marshall. Cast: Vera Browning (Olive Fuller Golden); "Shifty" (Harry Carey); "Snake" Matthews (Joe Rickson).

"Snake" Matthews is the leader of a notorious gang of outlaws. "Shifty" is the laughing stock of the bunch and never has he been known to strike back or resent anything. The gang plan a particularly bold hold-up of the stage, as there are rumors that a large shipment of bullion is on the way. "Shifty" is among those who are to protect the hold-up men.

Vera Browning is returning home after a several years' stay in the city. When the stage is held up "Snake" at once finds an interest in her and after looting the stage takes her with them to their camp. He orders "Shifty" to cover their trail and the gang set out.

Upon arrival at the camp "Snake" is surprised to find "Shifty" has followed them. For some unknown reason "Shifty" finds that the girl appeals to him in a way that he has never felt before and could not refrain from following her. He is impressed with the look of fear on the girl's face and determines to watch "Snake." A short time later he hears a terrific struggle and enters the room to find the girl struggling with the drunken bully. Her appealing look touches him and he knocks the man out. Securing two horses, he and the girl set out for the town. The others pursue and seeing that they will be overtaken, "Shifty" sends the girl on ahead while he stays and meets the boys. There is a short, sharp fight, terminating when "Shifty" runs out of ammunition. Seeing he has no chance, "Shifty" makes a swift drive at "Snake" and the two go over the cliff.

THE LADY FROM THE SEA (Aug. 27).—The cast: The Girl (Claire MacDowell); The Islander (Nobel Johnson).

On the beach of an island the one inhabitant, a man, finds a girl who has been shipwrecked; he endeavors to be kind to her, but so great is her fear of him that she will not let him come near her. He catches fish and toasts them for her, but she will not accept them.

He finally leaves fish for her, which she prepares herself. Then one day comes a yacht; two men row to shore and take the girl and the dog back with them, but the dog gets away and swims back to shore, where he is joyfully received by the man, who sadly watches the yacht as it disappears beyond the horizon.

VICTOR.

A LUCKY LEAP (Aug. 29).—The cast: Fatty (Ed Sedgwick); Bess (Nell Bennett); Her Mother (Evelyn Nesbit); Her Father (Andrew Arbuckle); Detective (Harry Griffith.) Written by Harry Wulze. Produced by Roy Clements.

Fatty leaves his country home to go to the city. Bess, who lives in the city with her mother and her father, who is a detective, takes a novel and goes to the park to read, where she strikes up a flirtation with Fatty. The father goes to his office, while the mother purchases a watch as a birthday present for him, but she is seen by a crook, who follows her. When she stops in the park to rest he gets the watch.

On his way out of the park the crook passes Fatty and sells him the stolen watch. The crook then tries to flirt with Bess, but is thrown out by Fatty, who has fallen in love at first sight and is invited to Bess's home, after he has made her a present of the watch. When Bess and Fatty enter the house the mother is out in the hall telephoning her husband of the loss, and he starts home immediately.

Bess leaves Fatty while she shows her mother the watch he gave her. The mother recognizes the watch and starts for Fatty, being joined later by her husband. The crook sees an open window in the living room and is about to enter, when Fatty, still chased by the father and mother, jumps through the window and they go down in a heap. Fatty knocks out the crook, explains everything, and learns that he receives a thousand dollar reward for his capture of the desperate criminal.

ARTHUR'S DESPERATE RESOLVE (Sept. 3).—The cast: Arthur Botts (Wm. Garwood); Sibly Grey (Lois Wilson); Her Father (Alfred Allen); Jepson (Edwn. Brown); A Suitor (Ed. Brady). Written by E. J. Clawson. Produced by Wm. Garwood.

Arthur Botts thinks he is in love with Sibly Grey, but he is really in love with her money. She has another suitor, but he does not count in Arthur's plan. He announces to Sibly that he is going to marry her and she is willing; but not so is father, who is of a commercial frame of mind. Arthur is turned down. The girl tries to cheer him, afraid he might kill himself—which gives Arthur an idea. He later writes her a note telling her he is going to die, but when it comes to deciding how, Arthur is in a quandary.

Contemplating all this, Arthur visits the shop of a chemist who thinks he has produced a deadly poison for which there is no antidote. He is trying it out on a dog and feels confident that it will work—but it takes three days for the effect to be consummated. Arthur takes the poison unknown to the chemist.

Then he reads in the paper that he has been left a large sum of money by a relative. So does Sibly's father, and the latter calls Arthur, telling him that he has changed his mind about having him for a son-in-law, Arthur is heartbroken, but it all turns out right when, three days later, he sees the little doggie running about the streets. The poison is a failure.

NELL DALE'S MEN FOLKS (Two Parts—Aug. 25).—The cast: Nell Dale (Anna Little); Zeb Dale (Frank Borzage); John Dale (Webb Parker); Bart Trevis (Harvey Clark); Dick Remson (Oscar Gerard); Bill Remsen (Chick Morrison). Directed by Frank Borzage.

John Dale runs a small, decent road house on a main trail between distant towns. Nell is his right-hand man. Nell has a half-witted brother, Zeb. She keeps their house and tends the small bar in Dale's absence. Zeb is trusted only with simple, odd jobs about the place. Nell is self-reliant and well able to hold the guests of the place at their proper distance. She is devoted to her incompetent brother. Bart Trevis and young Remsen are rivals for her favor. Trevis is favored and Remsen is not.

Through circumstantial evidence Trevis is involved in a crime. Though innocent, he dare not risk standing trial. He escapes to the road house, tells Nell of the fix he is in and asks her to jump the country with him. He remains hidden there for the day. Zeb nearly betrays him while the pursuing sheriff and his son also stop at the road house. But in the end Zeb makes a supreme sacrifice and Nell runs away with Bart at nightfall.

VOGUE.

GOING TO THE DOGS (Aug. 22).—The cast: A Man About Town (Arthur Moon); His Wife (Gypsy Abbott); The Dog Catcher (Paddy McQuire); His Songbird Wife (Margaret Templeton). Directed by Henry Kernan.

The story opens with the man about town and his wife at breakfast. He has a big head from his celebration of the night before with the dog catcher's cabaret wife. The dog catcher starts on his daily work and encounters all kinds of mishaps in dog chasing and is quite a failure until he steals the man about town's wife's poodle. She takes him home to get the license money, where they are caught by the man about town's sudden return home. The dog catcher is shoved into an icebox, where he enjoys himself while hubby hunts for him.

The cabaret singer suddenly comes on the scene, pushes her way into the house and demands her husband. A mixup occurs. The dog catcher falls out of the icebox and is spied by hubby. He is chased with a gun and finally runs into the ocean as the picture ends.

FALSTAFF.

"GUIDERS" (Aug. 15).—The cast: Oscar (Frank E. McNish); Conrad (Claude Cooper).

Oscar and Conrad become "gentleman guides" and decorate themselves with secret society emblems for reasons best known to themselves. Oscar gets a job as a "guider" and Conrad goes along as an assistant. At the alligator farm a sleepy old codger took a liking to Oscar's trouser leg and managed to bite off a memento. Later, on the beach, Conrad started a flirtation with a strange girl, but fortunately for the miss she knew how to scream. A mile away the police reserves heard it and came on the run. The sea was the only means of retreat, and into it the badly scared "guiders" sought refuge. Lifesavers, coming to the rescue of the fair maiden, pulled them into the boat. Fear of capture put new life into the fleeing men, who turned on these men in the boat and threw them into the water. Then they rowed to liberty.

BEAUTY.

IN A PROHIBITION TOWN (Aug. 23).—The cast: Mr. Boozely (Orral Humphrey); His Wife (Jo Taylor); Black Beard (Joe Massey). Directed by Orral Humphrey.

Mr. Boozely resides in a prohibition town, but manages to keep himself pretty well supplied with the demon rum, to the disgust of his wife. She is a temperance advocate, and when a gentlemanly purveyor of corkscrews and bottle openers calls upon her she reads him a blistering lecture on the evils of drink. She also discovers Boozely taking a surreptitious nip from a bottle, and, seizing it, hurls it through the window, striking the peddler, who is just leaving the house.

Boozely dashes from the house to find a drink and, snatching a bottle from men drinking, he is about to drink when he discovers it to be ginger ale. He next tackles a workman eating his lunch, but finds he has only coffee.

Thirsting for a drink, he finally discovers men entering a suspicious looking joint by giving a secret rap on the door. Boozely concludes it is a blind pig emporium and, studying the signs, gains an entrance.

Here his real experiences begin, as the place is an anarchist meeting and he barely escapes with his life. When he finally reaches his own domicile he finds an express package of booze awaiting him, but he hurls it out the window, and raising his right hand vows, "Never again."

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (No. 15—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—"I am Miss Burke," said Cleo, addressing the driver of a closed taxicab in front of her hotel. "Is this the car Lieutenant Hope sent for me?"

"Yes'm," answered the man.

Little did Cleo know when she clambered into the vehicle that the conspirators who had pursued her were weaving another net to get her in their power. When the car had left the main thoroughfare she was bound and gagged. The chauffeur was given instructions and the next thing Cleo remembered was when she was being carried along a dilapidated pier. At the far end was a weather worn cabin. Into this she was thrown. The silence was broken by one of her captors. A light was brought in and she discovered to her horror she was the prisoner of Mahlin and Satsuma. The men questioned her about the secret and when she insisted she could tell them nothing they left, vowing to return and make her pay the penalty.

Meantime, Lieut. Hope, returning to his hotel, learned that Cleo had left an hour before. He went to police headquarters to urge the authorities to do their utmost to locate the girl. Just as he was leaving the police headquarters, a patrol wagon backed up and out of it scrambled two policemen with a fashionably dressed young man between them. Lieut. Hope recognized the prisoner as Gerald Morton.

Hope inquired the reason for Morton's arrest, but failed to connect him directly with Cleo's disappearance. Morton paid for Olga's murder on the gallows at San Quentin. Morton partly repaid the injury he did to Cleo by telling Hope the key to the secret for which Olga made a desperate attempt ending in her death. Hope felt that the secret of the submarine was now as good as solved. His musings were luterrupted by the receipt of a note which read "If you wish to see Miss Burke alive come to 1121 Panuco street, at nine tonight bringing with you the work on motallurgy formerly bolonging to Dr. Burke. The door will be unlocked. Enter without ringing, ascend three flights of steps and give four short raps at the door on the left. If you commuuicate with the police or briug anyono with you it will result in Miss Burke's death. The only way you can save her is to follow theso directions to the letter."

Hope prepared for his trip by placing au automatic revolver in his coat pocket. In another pocket he placed the book. As he was leaving he encountered Hook, who pleaded to go with him. Hope declined to take him but told him if he did not receive word from his by midnight to communicate his disappearance to the police. Hope entered the tumble down buildings. Hope gave the four short raps on the door, which swung open to disclose the face of Mahlin. Satsuma entered the room. Mahlin demanded the book, but Hope refused to give it to him until Miss Burke was released.

"If you won't hand over the book I'll take it," Mahlin suddeuly snarled. Hope prepared for treachery and gave battle. Satsuma feeling the first blow, and in an effort to save himself, reeled against and out of a window dropping in a tangled heap on the pavement four stories below.

Hope covered Mahlin with his revolver. He forced him to reveal the hiding place of Cleo under penalty of death. Then Hope summoned Hook, and together they searched the piers and boathouses without fiuding trace of the missing girl. A month passed without trace of Cleo. Hope was discouraged when an acquaintanco of Hook's gave that worthy a clew to the girl. The search was renewed.

A start was made for Ignacio where a girl answering her description had been seen. Hook crossed a sandy strip of beach where nets were being dried and approached the miserable dwelling. There he found Cleo. As the motorboat carrying Cleo and Hook returned to San Francisco, it ran close up to a submarine on the deck of which Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N., was receiving the congratulations of his superiors for recovering the lost secret of the submarine. Suddenly the motorboat came within his vision. He could see Hook and Cleo. He ordered the submarine stopped and springing over the rail to the motorboat he clasped Cleo in his arms—the girl and the secret were his now by right of might.

HOW WATER POWER IS DEVELOPED (Reel Life No. 16—Aug. 20).—Vivid pictures showing the development of water power and the various methods by which it is transmitted, is the leading feature presented in the sixteenth release of Reel Life. These pictures throw on the screen every known method of water development from the primitive water wheel which requires approximately twenty-four hours to grind a bushel of corn to the stupendous electric power plants which have hundreds of thousands of horsepowers developed by water.

In the same release is the initial of the Gaumont tabloids, a motion picture production occupying but 250 feet of film, released under the title of "What Would You Do If—." This comedy, filmed under the direction of Edwin Middleton, asks what one would do if he or she were so very fat that their spouses preferred other company.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 50—Aug. 23).—Qualut Cape Cod is the subject of this release. The Gaumont cameraman who spent several days in filming the many places of interest presented in this release, photographed many important historical places, among them Plymouth Rock and the grave of Miles Standish. Also there are shown pictures of the famous old grist mill at South Yarmouth, and many characteristic pictures of the sea coast.

CENTAUR.

THE TRAP (Sept. 2—Two Parts).—The cast: Dick Benton (William Clifford); Neil Benton (Jessie Buruett); Tom Drake (Al Blake); Jim Morris (Victor Rottman). Directed by Alvin J. Neitz.

Dick Benton divides his existenco between his youug wife and his work. Tom Drake, a gambler, starts a flirtation with the young wife, who is spending a few days at the seashore. During their numerous clandestine meetings he fascinates her and at last pleading his love she falls an easy victim. He receives a letter from a pal in a small town out west who speaks glowingly of the ease with which a clever gambler can reap a harvest from the chance-loving townspeople, and urges Tom to consider the proposition. He decides to leave and persuades the wife to go with him.

On the first anniversary of his wedding, Dick prepares a surprise for his wife. As he departs for his work that day he presents her with a beautiful bracelet and a personal bank account of twenty-five hundred dollars. Returning to his home that evening with more tokens of affection, Dick is stunned to find that his wife has gone. Dick renounces all women and giving up his substantial business and his home he goes west to spend the rest of his life in seclusion.

Tom and the woman arrive in a western town and he establishes a cheap saloon and gambling resort. As time passes, Tom's sham love displays itself and the woman is subjected to ill-treatment. Jim Morris, a youthful tenderfoot, who has come west to make a fortne, becomes tangled up in the roulette wheel run by the gambler's mistress and urged on by his losses in an effort to win back his squanderings, he soon finds himself falling in love with the woman.

Dick has a prosperous mine which he works alone. Returning from his mine one evening he sees his dog almost at the mercy of a wild puma. Dick fires at the animal but misses, however, saving his dog's life. Knowing that the dog is unable to guard the chicken coops from the beasts, Dick builds a trap. Jim has lost all of his money and he decides to start out fresh again. He is wandering through the hills when he is attracted by Dick's house. In making his way to the place, Jim steps in the trap and plunges below. His moaning brings Dick to the scene and he is rescued. His ankle sprained, Dick befriends him and nurses him back to health and induces the youth to remain and help work the mine. Jim goes to the village frequently for provisions but each time he is lured to the gambling resort when he thinks of the girl at the wheel. At last he asks her to elope with him. The woman accepts the youth's proposition and slips away to join him at Dick's cabin. Tom, discovering that his mistress has fled, directs his suspicion toward Jim, and he starts off for the cabin. While riding his horse at terrific speed down an embankment he is thrown from the saddle and hurled headlong to the bottom. Stunned and lame, he remounts, determined to have revenge on the woman.

The woman arrives at the cabin and there is confronted by Dick. The sight of her causes Dick to become enraged and in a temper he attempts to strangle her, her fate being saved by the screams of a man outside the house. Tom reaches the cabin only to become a victim of the trap set for the beasts and in his downward plunge his neck is broken and skull fractured. Jim and Dick hurry to help the victim, but when his body is dragged from the trap it is lifeless. The sight of Tom's face brings a scream from the woman which reveals the fact that he is the one who lured her from her husband.

Feeling that his wife has been punished for her wrongdoing but not inclined to forgive her and take her back, Dick rides with her to the stage station where he gives her money enough to take her to her home. He then returns to live the life of a hermit and to help the youth attain the end which brought him to the west.

AMERICAN.

ENCHANTMENT (Two Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Faun and Helen Carew (Vivian Rich); Faun's Mate and Jack Carew (Alfred Voshurgh); Nymph and Celeste (Laura Sears); Billy Norhert (George Periolat). Director, Carl M. LeViness.

In the forest a wood nymph sits playing with a pipe of reeds. From their cavern home come a faun and his mate. He leaves her. As the faun nears the place where the wood nymph sits she succeeds in attracting him by her music. He soon forgets the mate he left behind in the cavern. The faun's mate begins a search. She hears the pipes of the nymph and feels the first thrill of impending danger. She follows the music to its source and there finds the faun. Distressed at the faun's attraction for the nymph his mate now gives way to anger. She seizes the pipes from the nymph's hands and hurls them into the stream. As she does so, the nymph's spell over the faun is broken. The faun realizes the fool he has been and returns to his mate while the nymph disappears into the woods. The scene dissolves out.

In an artist's studio Jack Carew gives a supper in honor of his success. Billy Norhert rises to a toast—may he obtain even greater success in his future work. To this toast they all agree and the suggestion is made that he prepare another example of his art for exhibition at the fall salon. His wife, Helen, keeps in the background and listens to the unstinted praise of Jack's friends. Only when Billy Norbert suggests the subject of his masterpiece, The Lorelei, does she experience a shudder of fear at some impending danger. Asked the reason for her silence, she can give neither answer or explanation. Eventually the party breaks up.

Billy Norbert sees the condition into which Carew is falling. Time after time he tries to start work but the lack of a suitable model prevents him from getting into the spirit of his subject. When things have reached the state where Carew has absolutely stopped all attempts to paint, he, Helen and Norbert visit the cafes and resorts of the artist quarter. In one of these Carew at last discovers his ideal. She is Celeste. Carew works ceaselessly but, after the first few days of his preliminary work he becomes secretive, hiding his canvas from all eyes and even locking the studio for hours at a time. Between him and Helen comes an estrangement of which Norhert is not slow to take advantage. He listens to her expression of fear that Carew is falling under the influence of Celeste and while he defends him in a way, yet he leaves the doubt alive in Helen's mind.

Eventually, the picture is completed. On the canvas is the exact reproduction of the nymph as in the prologue. The evening of its completion a celebration is planned; Carew and Celeste plan a little dinner party for themselves. Norbert has uncovered and frankly suggests to Helen that she leave Carew. She realizes that Carew no longer has a claim upon her and at last she succumbs to Norbert's pleas and agrees to go with him. Carew and Celeste leave for the cafe in which they are to have dinner. Helen believes it only fair to Carew to acquaint him with the fact that she intends to leave him for Norbert and to offer him an opportunity to explain the past. Accordingly she goes to the studio to see him.

Carew proposes a toast to the newly-completed painting as Helen, in the studio, discovers him gone and the finished painting. Rage seizes her. She picks up a knife from Carew's pallette, cuts the canvas from its frame and tosses it into the fire. Carew sits with his glass poised in his hand. Something seems to arrest his arm. The glass falls from his hand and upon the floor; Celeste looks at him in surprise. The spell is broken; Carew rises slowly from his chair and leaves the place. In the studio Helen sits in front of the ashes and weeps. When she looks up Carew stands before her. Without a word she indicates the fire. Carew looks and sees what has happened but he does not blame her. He sits down beside her on the arm of the chair and places his arms about her.

Just outside the studio door Norhert enters in search of Helen. One glance through the door into the studio and he realizes that by some means a reconciliation has been effected. He slips away without being seen. Carew silences Helen as she begs his forgiveness for her hasty action. He appreciates that the destruction of his work has meant, also, the destruction of his infatuation for Celeste.

A MILLION FOR MARY (American—Five Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Louie (C. William Kolh); Mike (Max Dill); Mary, at 10 (Dodo Newton); Mary, at 18 (May Cloy); Bob (King Clark). Scenario written by Al Santello. Directed by Rea Berger.

Louie is the vendor of an article of diet known to the trade as "hot dog." Mike is a sandwich man, who carries the advertising legends of a tent and awning manufacturer. They observed a gang of urchins maltreating a little pup. In trying to assist the little dog Mike and Louie were treated to a bombardment of sundry loose building materials close to the hands of the small boys. But the dog was rescued and Mike and Louie were united in friendship through the common cause of the pup.

Mike and Louie sought an adjacent drug store for first aid to the dog. The drug store was operated by an unprincipled person, whose chief trade was in "dope." Mike and Louie happened in just at the time the alleged druggist was apprised that a police raid impended. He was preparing for a hasty retreat. He seized the opportunity and presented Mike and Louie with the drug store until he should return if in return they would keep a little girl Mary, aged ten, who had been left to his care. Mike and Louie become owners of a drug store, guardians to the child, and masters of a pet dog. The police, not knowing that the place had changed hands, decided to raid it. Mike and Louie were dragged to court, where they had to prove that they had just come into possession of the drug store and assumed guardianship of the child. The judge commended them after a pathetic scene and Mike and Louie returned to the drug store.

Eight years later the drug store is more dilapidated than ever. Mike and Louie were eking out a bare existence, giving all their money to the education and desires of Mary. Some time during the eight year lapse, Mike and Louie had acquired a clerk, Bob, who had graduated from a school of pharmacy and who had come to them to gather practical experience. Mary and Bob fell in love with each other. Things took a bad turn when the "Drug Trust" refused to grant Mike and Louie more credit. They were forced to make spurious drugs. Through an accident Mary learns of the trickery. The next day she imparted to Bob the details of her discovery. Contrary to her expectations, he laughed and told her that it was far more harmless to sell the stuff that Mike and Louie were making than the actual dope which was harmful to the customers. In the midst of the explanation Mike and Louie came in and saw the two youngsters in an embrace. They demanded that Bob stop his love making. He replied that he intended to marry Mary. He was told that if he had any business ability he would be working some place for a salary instead of with Mike and Louie for nothing—and to make the thing harder Mike suggested that before Bob marry Mary, he make a million to buy her all the little trinkets that she might want. Bob decided to make a million for Mary.

Sitting in the park reading the paper, an article on the new "Science of Mind" caught his eye. He stopped to think and recalled his argument with Mary that it isn't what you take, but it is what you believe when you take it. So Bob got the great idea. Bob rushed back to the drug store and imparted his idea to Mike and Louie, who merely scoffed and asked him where he would get the money with which to advertise and distribute the wonderful pills. Bob had an idea and betook himself to the "Drug Trust" and impressed them with the fact that he had the greatest drug panacea ever discovered. They drew up a contract with him, and agreed to pay Mike and Louie one million dollars on date of distribution of the pills. An enormous system of advertising was instituted. All over the world appeared the legend, "Mike's and Louie's panacea for all ills, take a pill every hour, pray and have faith."

Orders flocked in from every portion of the globe. The night before the day upon which the pills were to be released, Mike, Louie, Bob and Mary were so engrossed in their work that they forgot poor Fritz, the dog, who became hungry and ate a cake of soap. Finally he was discovered by Mike, who knew he was sick. They looked for remedies and could find none, when Louie had the great idea that if the pills could help people, they could help the dog. But Mike answered that the dog could not pray. However, they decided they would pray for him so Fritz was handed a bunch of pills. Unknown to Mike and Louie, the pills contained a light narcotic, so that when taken in large quantities they caused profound sleep. They thought that the pills had killed him. Immediately they had visions of thousands upon thousands of dead people, all of whom had taken the pills. After due consideration they made a suicide pact deciding to kill themselves with their own pills.

Mike and Louie slept and dreamed that they had gone to Heaven. Here they met the druggist. Mike, certain that the druggist was in the wrong place, decided to throw him out.

This started the noise. Mike, Louie and the druggist were dragged before St. Peter. Mike woke up. Outside the drug store the crowd had gathered, led by officers of the "Drug Trust." They heard the noise and were certain that the relations of the dead people who had taken pills had come to wreak vengeance on them. Finally they were quieted and handed what was found to be a check for a million. Thus did Mary get her million, and Bob his Mary.

JERRY AND THE BANDITS (Sept. 1).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Jack (George George); Father (Jefferson Osborne); Mother (Janet Sully); Daughter (Claire Alexander); Bandit Chief (Ray Lincoln); Mexican Joe (Harry Jackson). Written and produced by Milton H. Fahrney.

Disguised as an army officer, Jerry finds himself close to the Mexican border. He gets in trouble with Lieut. Jack and the police interfere. At Jerry's command Jack is placed under arrest, although he protests. Jack's sweetheart sees the fight, but before she arrives her lover is taken to the guard house. Jerry then returns to the girl's house to plead his love. In the meantime Jack manages to get in touch with the Colonel and he is released.

Jerry is progressing nicely with his love scene when Jack enters. Another mixup follows and as Jerry rushes from the house he takes a photograph of the girl with him. Jack follows and soon the two are at it again. They decide to end the quarrel over the girl in a duel. As they measure off the distance they are suddenly aroused when a band of bandits pounce down upon them. Both are made prisoners and taken to a cell.

When Jerry is searched the picture of the girl is found and the chief of bandits orders Jerry to write her a note, telling her he is ill and needs her. He is forced to do this and then with Jack is cast into a dungeon. One of the bandits delivers the note to the girl and she hurries to the scene. She is greeted by the chief, who ties her hand and foot and then takes her to the dungeon to display his prize to the two men. He next orders Jerry and Jack removed to another cell and then he places the girl in a room and locks her up.

One of the bandits drops a gun and Jerry grabs it, quickly he disarms the rest of the band while Jack ropes them together. Leaving the band helpless, Jack and Jerry start out to find the girl and they rescue her when Jerry stands on Jack's shoulders and lifts her from a window. As the trio start to escape Jerry finds some hand bombs and when another squad of bandits start after the trio they are blown to bits by the bombs which Jerry throws among them.

Mounting horses, Jack, Jerry and the girl rush back to the zone of safety and the girl is returned to her worried parents. There Jerry gives up his efforts to win her, places her hand in Jack's and, giving his blessing, bravely goes forth to fight the bandits alone.

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, INC.

THE UNATTAINABLE (Five Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Bessie Gale (Dorothy Davenport); Mrs. Goodman (Mattie Witting); Robert Goodman (Emory Johnson); Henry Morton (Richard Morris); Theatrical Manager (Alfred Allen). Scenario written by Eugene B. Lewis. Directed by Lloyd B. Carleton.

Bessie Gale, known in New York night life as "the unattainable," is pursued by Henry Morton, wealthy clubman. Morton follows Bessie across the continent, traveling with the theatrical company of which she is a member. In crossing the Sierra Nevada Mountains the girl is particularly impressed with the scenery, and at a way station where the train stops for a few moments Bessie alights and strolls so far away from the depot she is unable to return in time to board the train when it proceeds.

She finds shelter for the night at Robert Goodman's home, intending to rejoin her company when the next train comes along the following day. The receipt of a telegram discharging her for missing her train changes her plans, and Bessie settles down at the Goodman home for a stay of indefinite duration. Robert Goodman's mother takes a great fancy to Bessie and Robert falls in love with her.

Finally they are married, but the longing for her old life is never quite stifled within her and Bessie rejoices when she is sent to New York by her husband to negotiate the sale of his formula for preventing disease among sheep that is just then devastating the flocks throughout the country. Bessie collects an immense check and contracts for royalties that make Robert a millionaire, and is about to start home when she accidentally meets some of her former associates.

The call of the stage is renewed with resistless vigor when Bessie is offered an engagement by her former manager. Morton hears of her presence in town and renews his efforts to attain "the unattainable." Bessie writes to her husband that she is going back to the stage. Robert senses trouble for her and comes to New York without notifying her. He finds her dining with Morton under conditions any husband would resent, and when Morton is unable to defend himself from the physical retribution Robert rains upon him Morton shoots the husband in the coward's target—his back.

The tragedy restores Bessie to a realization of her perfidy and folly; Morton acquires a streak of unheard of manliness and when Robert is taken to the hospital the clubman offers his blood for transfusion to Robert's veins that the life of his victim may be saved. The blood test reveals that Morton's blood would poison the stricken Robert and then Bessie is accepted as a volunteer to give her blood to save her husband's life, an operation that is entirely successful.

THE FUGITIVE (Gold Rooster—Five Parts—Aug. 14).—Margery Carew and her widowed sister, Anna Prentice, find themselves penniless through the dishonesty of their guardian. Both young women obtain employment in the same office. James Gray, the junior partner in the firm, falls in love with Margery, while William Cleves, the senior partner, casts lustful eyes at the older sister. Anna agrees to go to Cleves' home to take dictation from him. While there Cleves attacks her and, in defending herself, Anna kills him. Worried at her sister's absence, Margery arrives at the Cleves home just as Anna is fleeing. The younger sister forces the other to permit her to take on herself the blame for Cleves' death, explaining that Anna owes it to her little child to live. Margery goes West and marries.

Years later Margery's husband goes to New York, where his watch is stolen by a pickpocket. The thief is arrested and Margery's picture is found in the watch. The police recognize the photograph as that of the young woman they have been seeking for the murder of Cleves. A fake telegram asserting that her husband is ill lures Margery to New York, where she is arrested.

Previous to this Margery's elder sister and the latter's child had been killed by an automobile. Margery, though, is so loyal to the memory of her sister that she refuses to tell the true circumstances of Cleves' death even under the merciless questioning of the police. A policeman who had seen her leaving Cleves' home on the night of the tragedy is enmeshing Margery in a net of circumstantial evidence when a veiled woman, dressed just as Margery was the night of the murder, enters the room.

The policeman recognizes the clothing. Suddenly the newcomer lifts the veil and is revealed as Gray, the junior partner. He confesses that it was he who killed Cleves. Margery attempts to expostulate with Gray and refuses to accept his sacrifice, but he tells her that he is doing little. He is the victim of a deadly malady, he says, and his physicians have given him only a month to live. Learning this, Margery accepts Gray's offer and returns to her husband to live in the perfect happiness they had been enjoying.

BRAVER THAN THE BRAVEST (Rolin—Aug. 14).—Heinie is a hen-pecked husband. So much under the thumb of his cute little 250-pound wife is Heinie that he wears a lace cap and a carpet sweeper is his favorite plaything.

But one day Louie comes as a physician to attend Mrs. Heinie. This is too much for our hero. He rises up in his wrath and—runs away from home. Good fortune, though, takes a hand at this juncture, and Heinie gets hold of a magic liquid that transforms him from a weak-kneed atom into a roaring terror. He returns home, and what he does to his wife and her relatives—to say nothing of a squad of police that is brought in to subdue him—is a caution.

LUKE DOES THE MIDWAY (Rolin—Aug. 21).—The particular Midway that Luke "does" is at the San Diego Exposition. Luke goes there to see the sights, and he wouldn't be Luke if he didn't get into trouble immediately. There isn't a sideshow or an amusement device in the whole park that Luke doesn't try to get ready for the scrap-heap as soon as he sees it. Moreover he accords the same treatment to the other visitors to the fair. The result may be imagined. Luke leaves the exposition via the back of a wild ostrich, and the exposition heaves a sigh of relief when he departs.

John Van Houck is an old, expert Dutch engraver. He came to this country from Holland. Things have not gone any too well with him, but he sends for his daughter Gretchen to come and join him. In the tenement to which Gretchen goes to make her home is Pietro, a young Italian immigrant who is fast making his way in the new world and who finds Gretchen the inspiration to strive for the best and finest things in the world. Gretchen smiles not unkindly on Pietro.

There comes among the good people of the tenement Rodgers, a thoroughly bad man who 407 South Dearborn St. CHICAGO, ILL.

Note above what a compact little device the AUTO-ARC is. Then note in the illustrations to the left how snugly it fits under the lamp house out of the way.

Note below how the AUTO-ARC frees the operator and gives him a chance to properly look after his films, his machine, the screen, and other important details. Works perfectly without attention on his part.

This shows the operator's enslavement at the feed rod. No chance to do hardly anything else but keep his hands right on the rod. And, then, he can't keep a continuous, perfect white light on the screen. The AUTO-ARC frees him and maintains a perfect arc.

sees in the old Dutch engraver a tool whereby he can better do his evil work. He works on Van Houck's pride in his skill as an engraver, until the old man one day makes a plate from which Rodgers and his gang are able to print counterfeit bills so well that they defy detection.

When the old man learns to what use his engraving is put and, what is far worse, discovers that Gretchen is being made an innocent tool to pass the spurious money, he determines to expose the gang. To frustrate him, he is kidnapped and thrown aboard a vessel. Gretchen is also taken captive and Rodgers, who has long had his eye upon the little Dutch girl, seems more than likely to accomplish his evil intentions towards her.

The Garrity kids, however, have to be reckoned with. From the day Gretchen appeared at the tenement, they became her best friends. When they saw her rush off, evidently in great trouble, one of them followed and when he saw his beloved Gretchen being carried aboard the boat he rushed off to give the alarm. Pietro was the first one he sought.

The alarm was given and a desperate chase after the boat followed. The fast motorboat overhauled the fugitive and after a real fight, the counterfeiters were captured and the old Dutchman and Gretchen were rescued. The final scene disclosed old John Van Houck hurling the hated engraving and all the counterfeit money overboard.

THE PATRIOT (Ince—Five Parts—Sept. 3). The cast: Bob Wiley (Wm. S. Hart); Little Bobs (George Stone); Joe Good-Boy (Joe Good-Boy); Pancho Zapilla (Roy Laidlaw); Billy Allen (Francis Carpenter); Denman Hammond (Milton Ross); Jordan Mason (P. D. Tabler); Colonel Bracken (Charles K. French); Rags (By Himself).

Bob Wiley had staked out a homestead in New Mexico, five miles from the border town of Lawton's Ridge. Wiley was a pioneer, a veteran of the Spanish-American War, and a devout believer in the superiority of his country to any other land on the face of the globe. He lived in a whitewashed cabin, over which the Stars and Stripes forever waved, with his little son, Bobby, and a faithful Indian, Joe Good-Boy. Wiley had lost his wife in the rough pioneer days.

When his boy was yet a baby, he chanced on gold in the bed of a stream that ran through his clearing which gave him another incentive—to save all he could and make his boy a rich man. While, however, he was drawing out more gold daily and his bank account in Lawton Ridge was growing steadily, a pair of corrupt local politicians, attracted by the wealth of the find, conspired to rob him of his homestead on a technicality. In this they succeeded and Bob Wiley finds himself dispossessed by the agents of a government he has served in its hour of need. He goes to Washington to prove his claim, gets no redress, and returns to find his land pre-empted and his little boy dead. His heart is filled with bitterness against his own country and he seeks revenge by joining the bandit forces of Pancho Zapilla who is preparing to raid Lawton's Ridge.

Entering the village as a spy he tells the colonel in command of the American troops that Zapilla contemplates a raid on a town several miles distant. This information sends the troops off on a false scent and leaves Lawton's Ridge open to an attack by the bandits. But Wiley gradually awakens to the enormity of his offense and by courage and devotion he saves the town, thwarts the bandits, pledges his allegiance to the Flag, and becomes once again a loyal, patriotic American.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

THE UPHEAVAL (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Jim Gordon (Lionel Barrymore); Joan Madison (Marguerite Skirvin); Jim Gordon, Senior (Franklin Hanna); Henry Madison (Edgar L. Davenport); Benjamin Waters (John H. Smiley); Sidney Benson (Paul Lawrence); Alec, delegate from the Union (James Malaidy); Myles McCool (Howard Truesdell); Jerome Hendricks (George Stevens); Frank Wagner (Frank Lyons); Liza Poke (Myra Brook). Written by Lawrence McCloskey. Directed by Charles Horan.

On Jim Gordon falls the political mantle of his father, "Big Jim" Gordon. The father has been the leader of a corrupt ring, but the son determines to be true to the teaching of his dead mother, and use his position for good purposes.

However, he is not given credit for altruism. It is taken for granted both by the general public and by the politicians whose leadership he has inherited that he is a grafter, as his father has been. He succeeds in getting the Utilities Bill passed. The New American, a newspaper under reform management, warns the public against what it calls his hypocrisy. When he gets the Water Rate Bill passed they still accuse him of having some nefarious scheme "up his sleeve" to defraud the public.

Gordon's only mistake is in making Sidney Benson Director of Public Safety. Benson is a fraud, who is posing as a reformer to further his own ends. He is engaged to Joan Madison, who is interested in the passing of the Sanitary Bill to provide for better conditions among the tenement dwellers. She goes to Benson for aid in the matter, but he gives an evasive answer. She then goes to Benjamin Waters, the editor of the New American, and he asks her to write a series of articles exposing local conditions. She consents, but goes to a mountain resort for quiet in order to write. Through an accident she meets Gordon, who has also gone to the same county for a rest, and they fall in love.

On her return to the city she decides to plead with Gordon himself to have the Sanitary Bill passed, and is surprised to meet her friend of the mountains. He tells her that her own father is the owner of the houses in the debated district and that the destruction of these buildings will mean penury for her. Principle triumphs over selfishness and she tells him to go ahead and have the bill passed. He does so, and her father is left without means. Gordon tells him that all his money difficulties will be solved if he will influence Joan to become his wife. Joan's instinctive fondness for Gordon is clouded by what she thinks is his contemptible bargaining, but she consents. They are married, but she still believes that her husband is a grafter.

A new traction company comes into the field to fight the methods of the old one. The original company accuses Gordon of no longer looking after its interests. His answer, which is an offer to buy the concern, is gladly accepted. Joan learns of the transaction and tells Benson, thinking her husband intends to defraud the public. An accusation of Gordon is made on the front page of the New American on the morning the franchise bill is to come up before the city council.

A great crowd congregates, determined to fight Jim Gordon and any measure he may advocate. He demands a hearing. Briefly outlining the benefits he has conferred on the city, he tells them he has bought the company in order to make a present of it to the city in honor of his dead mother and to atone for the wrongs his father has done the community. Gordon and

PARAMOUNT.

THE HONORABLE FRIEND (Lasky—Five Parts—Aug. 24).—The cast: Makino (Sessue Hayakawa); Toki-Ye (Tsuri Aoki); Kayosho (Raymond Hatton); Goto (G. Kino); Hana (M. Matsumato); Murphy (Billy Elmer).

Kayosho, a Japanese-American curio dealer, is living in luxury made possible by his ill-gotten wealth. He is old aud ugly, selfish and unscrupulous. Iu his employ is Makino, a young and honest Japaneso, who has handled tho flower nursery so profitably Kayosho asks him if there is aught he desires. Makino can think of nothing unless it be a wife, and he has not the six hundred dollars necessary to bring a picture-bride from home.

Goto, employed by Kayosho in his curio store, receives a picture of his niece, Toki-ye. Goto's daughter, Hana, shows the picture to Makino and Kayosho. The former views the picture with a sacred desire to possess the little Japanese beauty as his wife—while Kayosho's evil mind formulates a dishonorable scheme to bring her to America, and evade the laws of the country. Goto is roused to great indignation, as Kayosho has promised to marry his daughter, who is facing disgrace.

Toki-ye comes to America, is met by Makino. The American marriage ceremony is performed at the dock, and she is taken to Kayosho, who was unable to meet her himself on account of an accident. The old curio dealer tells Makino he has brought Toki-ye to this country for himself, and that she is not his (Makino's) wife until the Japanese ceremony is performed. There she must be treated as his guest. Toki-ye learns of tho deception—that Makino's photograph has been substituted for the ugly Kayosho's and is heartbroken, as she has learned to love Makino.

Kayosho is found murdered, his body having been thrown into a pool near his house. Toki-ye is suspected as she has sworn vengeance upon Kayosho for his deception, and when accused, fearing Makino has sought revenge for her, she says she did it. Makino, on the other hand, believing Toki-ye committed the crime to preserve her honor, confesses to shield her, and is imprisoned. Murphy, the policeman to whom Makino appealed for assistance, traps Goto, and hears from his lips the confession that he killed Kayosho, "for Hana's sake."

The two alien hearts are at last united, and their happiness is firmly established in a little home Makino has provided for his bride.

THE VICTORY OF CONSCIENCE (Lasky—Five Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Louis, Count de Tavannes (Lou-Tellegen); Rosette Burgod (Cleo Ridgely); Prince Dimitri Karitzin (Elliott Dexter); Remy (Thomas Delmar); Mother Burgod (Laura Woods Cushing); Father Burgod (John McKennon).

Louis, Count de Tavannes, and his companion, Dimitri, lead a gay life in Paris. On the return trip of a motor tour, they stop at an inn and discover Rosette, the daughter of the innkeeper, who dances for the guests, not from choice, but necessity. Dimitri suggests they take her to Paris. The patrons of the inn, jealous of the fashionably attired young men and the attention paid them, raise a riot. During the uproar Rosette is taken to the motor and to Paris, where she goes to a hotel with Louis, her favorite of the two young men. During their breakfast the next morning, she learns from Louis' lips that he will not marry her. Remy, the faithful servant of the inn, has sought her out, grasps the situation, strikes Louis in the face and a fight ensues between the two men. Louis is discovered, bleeding and unconscious and taken to the home of a young priest. Through the influence of the good men whom he has thus accidentally met, he enters the priesthood.

Rosette secures a position as dancer in a cafe of the underworld in Paris, patronized by the rough element, and occasionally by the wealthy class in search of excitement. Dimitri is at this cafe, trying to induce Rosette to drink and dance, as Father Louis enters in search of a man whose wife is ill. The recognition is mutual, and none is so surprised as Dimitri. The latter plans an elaborate supper for himself and Rosette, and Louis interrupts them. As Louis uses his good influence for the girl, Dimitri is exerting a conflicting power, and Rosette bids them fight it out, "for God and my soul—or the devil and my body."

With only their hands for weapons, the men go to battle, Louis with a righteous determination to win—and he done. He takes the girl to a convent, where she realizes her great love for Louis and a desire to live a pure life. Father Louis has won the love of the patrons of the cafe, and when the war is on and France calls for her men, he with his followers tries to defend the convent where Sister Rose Marie is. Mortally wounded, Sister Rose Marie falls across the deady body of the man she loves, and they are united in spirit—although their lives have been sacrificed in an attempt to save other souls, endeared to them.

THE PARSON OF PANAMINT (Pallas—Five Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Philip Pharo (Dustin Farnum); "Buckskin Liz" (Winifred Kingston); "Chuckwalla Bill" ("Doc" (Pomeroy) Cannon); "Bud" Deming (Howard Davies); "Chappie" Ellorton (Colin Chase); Absalom Randall (Ogden Crane); Arabella Randall (Jane Keckley); "Crabapple" Thompson (Tom Bates). Directed by William D. Taylor.

Two wayfarers drifting across tho sandy wastes happen upon tho almost obliterated marks of the former mining town of Panamint. Rominiscing, "Chuckwalla Bill" tells the fascinating story of the town that was and of the remarkable life of the Parson of Panamint. A wave of reform has swept over tho lawless town. "Chuckwalla" is elected mayor and announces the town's need of tho signs of respectability—a church, a schoolhouse and a jail.

"Chuckwalla" finds his parson in Frisco in this unusual way. Ono day a panic-stricken workman is pursued by, and is about to he set upon by a mob when "Chuckwalla" sees an act that thrills his blood. As tho terrified runner nears the spot ho is brought down hy a shower of rocks thrown by his pursuers, but before tho pack can reach him a stalwart young six-footer flashes on the sceno and stands at bay over the prostrate form. The ensuing brief but terrific combat was a spectacle "Chuckwalla" never forgot and his charging rescue lands him in the police station with tho young fighter. On learning his comrade is a preacher "Chuckwalla" explodes, "A minister! The hell you are! You don't fight like one. "You're a fightin' bob-cat, young feller!"

Panamint likes its young parson, for, "Somehow he manages to pull all the hurrs offen religion an' makes it as smooth as long sweetnin.'" But the straight-laced ones are scandalized when the parson wipes out "Bud" Deming's saloon-dance hall-gambling joint hy winning the entire establishment at roulette. Then when Deming is stabbed and dies they refuse to let the funeral cortege enter the church, hut "Chuckwalla" clears the way. The parson is dismissed and all summer has tho congregation that needs him in the place of their downfall—Deming's former saloon.

WORLD FILM CORP.

HUSBAND AND WIFE (Aug. 28—Five parts). The cast: Doris Baker (Ethel Clayton); Richard Baker (Holbrook Blinn); Bessie (Madge Evans); Patrick Alliston (Montagu Love); Ralph Knight (Emmett Corrigan); Porter Baker (Dion Titheradge); Mrs. Prescott (Gerda Holmes).

Dick Baker, cashier of the National Bank, is in financial difficulties through his wife's extravagance; becoming desperate, he plays the stock market with "borrowed" securities. Schmidt, a social climber and director of the bank, goes in with Dick on some of his speculations and in return Doris, Dick's wife is expected to receive Mrs. Schmidt. Pat Alliston, a wealthy young man, is in love with Doris, but is playing "on the level." Doris refuses to receive Mrs. Schmidt one afternoon while Alliston is calling. This infuriates her and she confides in her husband, who then refuses to go in on a deal with Dick.

Porter, Dick's younger brother, has learned something of Dick's difficulties, and blames Doris for her extravagance. Doris complains of Porter to Dick and they quarrel. The next day the stock Dick has invested in drops heavily and his margin is wiped out. He cannot cover it and is forced to let it go. Schmidt has become suspicious and sets detectives to watch Dick. That evening Dick learns that Doris is dining with Alliston again and asks her why she doesn't get a divorce and in anger she says, "Very well, I will!"

Doris plans to go to Japan with Mrs. Prescott, a chum, Alliston and their daughter Bessie. She has planned to give Dick the impression that she is eloping with Alliston so that he will get a divorce, but Doris confesses to Mrs. Prescott that if Dick should even hold out his hand to her, she would stay.

Schmidt's suspicion is again aroused, and when Schreiber, the detective, reports that Doris is planning this trip, Schmidt thinks Dick is planning to slip away with them and cautions Schreiber to guard against this. Schmidt has Knight, the bank examiner, go over things and when Dick learns of this and of Doris' intended departure, feeling utterly deserted and alone, he attempts suicide, but is prevented by the unconscious intervention of Bessie.

Alliston calls for Doris and Bessie and they meet Mrs. Prescott at the railroad station. They are followed by the detective's assistant and brought back, be mistaking Alliston for Dick. Doris denounces Dick for having, as she supposes, detectives trail her and Alliston, and when she learns the truth, falls unconscious to the floor. Dick carries her into the drawing room and they are reconciled.

Knight tells Schmidt that his suspicions of the bank's soundness were groundless and the latter leaves crestfallen. Alliston, alone in the hallway with Bessie, realizes his own part in this domestic tragedy. Knight asks him if he will help him to give Dick another chance, and he agrees. Knight writes a check and a note and sends it by Bessie to Dick.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY (Episode No. 1—Two Parts—Aug 21).—The cast: Harold Stanley (Maurice Costello); Florence Montrose (Ethel Grandin); Dr. Burton Montrose (Thomas J. McGrane); Robert Clayton (Eugene Strong); Vanya Tosca (Olga Olonova); Felix Driscoll, the doctor's assistant (Wm. H. Cavanaugh); Layton Parrish, the detective (John Milton); Jim Tanner, the Crimson Stain's henchman (N. J. Thompson); Pierre La Rue, the Crimson Stain (? ? ? ?).

New York is in a panic. Men whose names are household words are being murdered wholesale by an unknown—strangled to death! Robbery is invariably the motive. Dr. Burton Montrose, a scientist, discovers a biological element which he believes will improve the faculties of the human race. Tested on several human subjects, the discovery reacts, making of them murderers. No one knows of the doctor's connection with the murders that are racking society to its very foundation.

The New York Examiner, the biggest newspaper in the city, owned by Jerome Stanley, is relentless in its attacks upon the police for their failure to apprehend the criminals. Jerome Stanley assigns his son, Harold Stanley, to solve the mystery, working upon the only available clue—the ante-mortem statement of one of the victims that the arch-killer has a crimson stain in his eye.

Harold Stanley is in love with Florence Montrose, daughter of Dr. Montrose. Walking one evening with her, he tells her of his assignment to catch the murderers. Suddenly he sees silhouetted on a nearby window three figures, one of whom is murdering one while the third is urging him on to the deed. While Florence runs for a policeman Harold breaks in through the window and in the darkness sees the crimson stain in one of the killer's eyes. The killers attempt to kill Harold, but the police arrive in the nick of time and save him.

That night Stanley and his father and Robert Clayton, a young artist, are guests at dinner at the Montrose home. During the evening Mr. Stanley steps into the library and is strangled to death by the Crimson Stain. Florence discovers the body and sees the Crimson Stain, who makes good his escape upon the approach of Stanley and the artist who answered Florence's screams. Stanley vows to avenge his father's death.

THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY (Episode No. 2—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—Taking charge of his father's newspaper Harold Stanley bends all his efforts towards the capture of the murderers. He advertises far and wide the fact that the murderer's eyes are tinged with red. Fear of Pierre La Rue keeps Florence from telling that she had seen him as he bent over Harold's father. The Crimson Stain sends Vanya Tosca, the woman member of the gang, to make the acquaintance of Robert Clayton, the artist, and friend of Harold Stanley, and through him put Harold out of the way. Vanya meets Clayton. The Crimson Stain gang decide not to use Clayton, but to go to his studio and while Vanya is making love to him Jim Tanner knocks him unconsclous and puts him away behind a couch.

Shortly after, Florence Montrose appears. La Rue tells her he will kill her because she is the only person who has ever seen him outside of his own gang. She screams. Harold Stanley coming up at that moment hears her screams and dashes up the stairs to her rescue. Tanner stops bim and a fight ensues. The janitor goes out to hunt a policeman. Hearing the noise of the fight outside the door, Pierre La Rue, the Crimson Stain, hypnotizes Florence, and carries her out through another door just as Stanley bursts in through the main door, Stanley sees Vanya who tells him it was she who screamed. Stanley is puzzled. La Rue gives Florence to Tanner and tells him to jump in ber automobile and take her to their hangout. A policeman interferes and La Rue kills him.

Looking out of the window, wondering what has become of Florence, Stanley sees Tanner carry her unconscious body to the automobile and drive off. Stanley hurries downstairs to the street and gives cbase in his own machine. Out in the country he catches up with Tanner, who runs away. Harold takes the unconscious Florence to her home and Dr. Montrose weeps at seeing her, and says that only the man who hypnotized her can bring her out of the trance. Then a new element bursts into the moment of tense crisis.

Speer Carbons

Are Not Mere "War Time Carbons"

You are not asked to use them to "make the best" of an unfortunate condition. They are sold on their merits and the results they give cannot be excelled by results achieved with any other carbons made.

Remember! We've been making carbons for electrical purposes for the past twenty-five years. "Projector Carbons" are not an experiment with us.

Try Speer Carbons! They're Guaranteed!

Record Crowds Handled Without A Hitch In These Theaters

Read What The Owner Says

Each of these theaters is equipped with Caille Ticket Office Devices.

Caille Ticket Sellers sell tickets ten times faster than hand methods. They register every ticket sold. Register is under lock and key. Tickets are delivered separately, stacked like a deck of cards. They can't lay across the knives in the chopper.

Caille Ticket Choppers tear the tickets to shreds and can be furnished for hand, foot or electric operation.

San Francisco, Calif.
June 14, 1916.

Mr. G. A. Metcalfe,
117-119 Golden Gate Ave.,
San Francisco, Calif.

My dear Mr. Metcalfe:-

We are so pleased with the four Caille Ticket Selling Machines and the two Caille Change Makers, which you installed in our new Mission Theatre, that we are pleased to order six more ticket selling machines and two change makers for our Fillmore Street houses, the Progress and the New Fillmore Theatres.

The machines at the New Mission handled record crowds without a hitch. Our cashiers are delighted with the ease of manipulation; our patrons are greatly pleased with the efficient manner in which they are handled, avoiding long waits in lines, and we, ourselves, appreciate not only the absolute check that these machines give us upon our employes, but, also, the prestige that has resulted by the installation of the Caille devices.

We shall take extreme pleasure in recommending them to any one interested.

Yours very truly,

Kahn & Greenfield,

Louie R. Greenfield, Gen. Mgr.

To help the exhibitor get good films

H. C. Holah, Chicago's most popular exchange manager, has been engaged by the Chicago Herald to co-operate with manufacturers and exchanges and help the exhibitor get good films. The functions of Mr. Holah's Exhibitors' Aid Department are first and foremost to help the theater man. But his advice and assistance are at the service of all persons and firms which wish aid in distributing good pictures.

In charge of a practical film man who devotes his entire time exclusively to it, the Chicago Herald Motion Picture Department is ready to provide every manner of sales assistance.

Why the Chicago Herald is Supreme in Motion Pictures:

It has the largest daily program directory in the world—336 theaters.

It has published over 400,000 lines of paid advertising to stimulate the interest of its readers in Motion Pictures.

It prints more about Motion Pictures than all other Chicago papers combined.

It has appropriated $27,000 annually for gathering in new "Movie" fans as readers.

It has a remarkable following for its criticisms, due to the unimpeachable integrity of its unbiased and competent daily reviews.

It has the exclusive rights to the articles of Louella O. Parsons, famous, sincere and popular.

It has printed more Motion Picture stories, including serials, than all the other Chicago papers combined.

It has the first and only "Exhibitors' Aid Department" to help the Exhibitor of the Chicago territory to rent good films.

It has 69% of the Chicago Theaters advertising in its columns every day and Sunday.

It has the rest of the Chicago territory Theater Managers reading its Daily Directory to see what is showing and where.

PULSE OF THE EXHIBITORS

GETTING STRONGER FOR MOTIOGRAPH PROJECTORS EVERY DAY

When orders for MOTIOGRAPH Projectors increase steadily for 15 months until there is an increase in orders of over 500% in one year, there must be a reason.

The reason is simple—Everyone knows of MOTIOGRAPH QUALITY and SERVICE, the MOTIOGRAPH does the work and the PRICE is right (Motor-driven Equipment Complete $285).

It is the biggest buy today—The wise exhibitor knows it—He buys MOTIOGRAPHS.

All Eyes on a Line

A NEW CHAIR

That Enables Everybody to See and Be Comfortable

Press Catch

Tilt Forward

Push Back

Can be changed from an adult's chair to a child's chair by pressing the catch and raising as illustrated. Returns to adult's position and locks just as easily.

It provides a child with a seat proportioned to his body, a foot rest the right height and puts the child's eyes on a line with those of adults, enabling him to see without annoyance to others or discomfort to himself. The offers theatre owners something for which there is a real need. Fortunately it is not an extra expense but an added source of profit because it—

"All eyes on a line"
FOCO
Adjustable Chair

Does away with the free kids.

Increases tbe patronage of children; also the adults who come with children.

Attracts patronage of adults who won't now attend because of discomfort of holding cbildren on their laps.

Attracts patronage from theatres not equipped witb Foco chairs.

FOCO Chairs cost new only a few cents more than ordinary chairs. Made in all sizes and finishes, both veneered and upholstered. Old chairs can be converted into Foco Chairs at considerably less than the cost of new chairs.

Write for booklet showing reel of actual chairs in use.

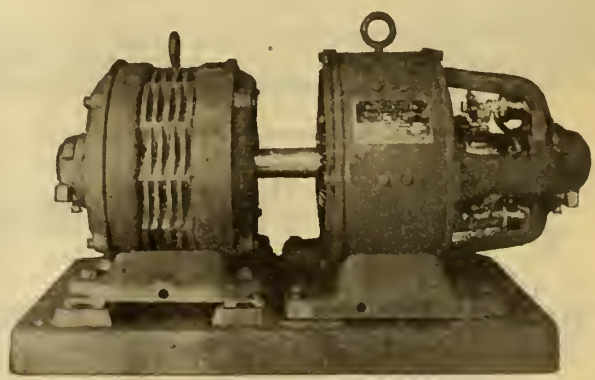
Westinghouse
Motion Picture Equipment



enables you to produce clear, steady pictures, the kind you have always wanted to show, but could not on account of the alternating current service.

It gives constant voltage over a wide range of load which is important for "fading in" as it enables the operator to "warm up" his second arc without affecting the brilliancy of the first.

It can be installed anywhere, as it is compact and takes but little room.

The services of Westinghouse Engineers are available to assist in the solution of your problems.

HERE'S still another side-splitting L-KO Komedy with which Exhibitors can advertise to the very limit. Comedy full of more thrills, hair raising stunts and convulsions than in any L-KO you've seen in a long time.

Book L-KO'S and Play to Capacity on Comedy Nights

L-KO are first choice with thousands of Exhibitors the world over because in L-KO comedies, the people get exactly what they want in this slap stick stuff. With such Stars as—

Billie Ritchie Gertrude Selby Dan Russell

supported by a brilliant cast of L-KO players, this release, "Crooked from the Start" tops anything in the entire comedy field. Bewitching Gertrude Selby is simply irresistible in her motor apparel in this picture.

Get started on a special Comedy night each week. Don't stall, hem, haw or hesitate. The big money on Comedy nights is yours for the asking by simply booking, advertising and exhibiting L-KO's, the world's greatest of all Comedy releases. Write your nearest Universal Exchange.

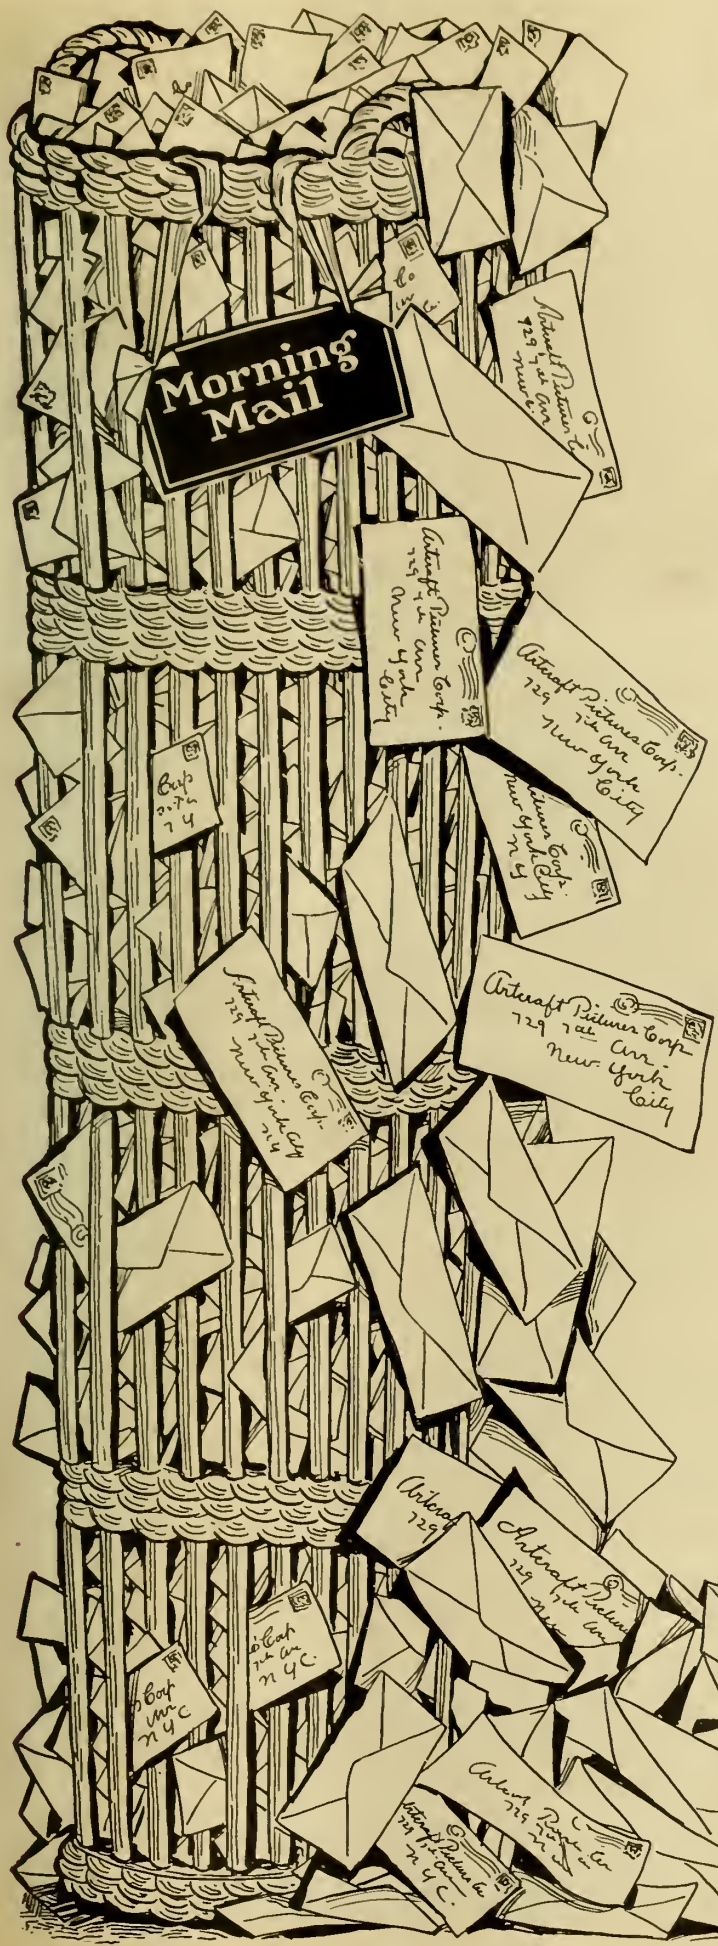
"LIBERTY"



20 Weeks of Profits For You

THIS Telegram received from the Howland Theatre of Pontiac, Michigan, is just a sample of what this remarkable Universal Serial is doing in hundreds of Houses all over the country. "LIBERTY" surpasses in Box Office Attraction—in profits—in prestige—in thrilling interest, action and hugeness, ANY SERIAL of whatever name, from whatever Company and however advertised—in the world.

It is NOT a mystery serial—It is NOT a guessing contest serial—it IS a marvelous portrayal of what is happening along the Mexican border—scenes—situations—action and love interest of compelling power. There's no serial like it—anywhere near like—It tops the serial field fourteen different ways—especially in its power to pack Exhibitors' theatres. Book it now from any one of our 59 Universal Exchanges. Ask for a FREE copy of the wonderful Ad Campaign book that tells you how to get the big money with "LIBERTY."

BLUEBIRD Photoplays are perfect.

That is why they are BLUEBIRDS. A feature must measure up to the BLUEBIRD standard in every detail to be released under the BLUEBIRD name.

By every detail is meant story, cast, direction, sets, production and photography. Not only is this high standard maintained, but before any BLUEBIRD possibility is accepted as a BLUEBIRD, it must be unanimously voted worthy of the BLUEBIRD brand by a jury of fifteen Exhibitors.

Their verdict not only covers the details above mentioned, but assures Exhibitors everywhere that in the opinion of fifteen of the most experienced men in the business, the picture is a box office attraction as well.

Therefore, when you book a BLUEBIRD you guarantee perfect entertainment to your public, and profit and popularity for your house.

Youthful infatuation; a tragedy, the result of sudden, jealous anger; lost identity, followed by remorse and regret; tender, true love—then atonement. These are the human passions and events portrayed in this intensely interesting two-reel "Flying A" photodrama featuring Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh. A powerful attraction, with majestic marine photography.

Directed by Edward Sloman Released Sept. 4

"Matchin' Jim"

A happy-go-lucky cowboy decides every question in his mind by matching coins. He matches a ranchman for a job; matches a girl for a kiss; and then matches her father for her. As "Matchin' Jim," Frank Borzage is ideally cast, and ably supported by Anna Little as the girl, in this delightfully entertaining two-reel "Mustang" comedy-drama.

Directed by Frank Borzage Released Sept. 8

The Boomerang Gold Brick

Orral Humphrey, in the character role of a "rube," gets the goods on a bunco artist, providing a riot of fun in this one-reel "Beauty" comedy.

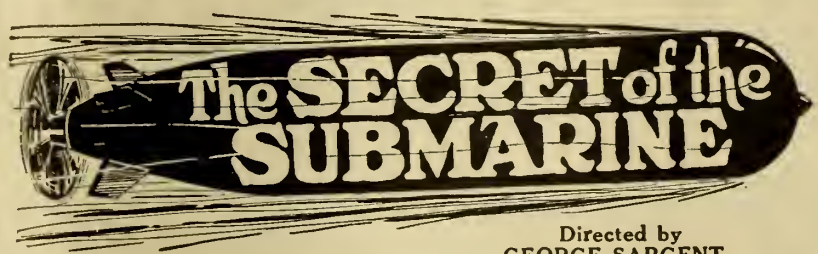
Fast and Furious!



THESE adjectives precisely describe the thrilling action and profit making power of this gripping, patriotic photo novel by E. Alexander Powell.

"The Secret of The Submarine" has won the applause of every audience and made big money for every theatre that has booked it. The story, published in over a thousand prominent newspapers, has been read by millions who are eager to see the photoplay.

Extract From Chapter Two

Death stared them in the face. Through the open hatchway the sea was pouring in a torrent. For those in the submarine the end was but a matter of seconds. Already the water was at their knees. Again Hope attempted to close the hatch cover, but the force of the inrushing water hurled him back. He might as well have tried to cap a geyser. The water was at her waist. The navigating officer, beads of sweat glistening on his forehead, frantically manipulated his horizontal rudders in the hope that the boat would rise. But it did not respond.

Gentlemen: It gives me great pleasure to write a few words in regard to the splendid attendance we are having during the serial picture, "The Secret of the Submarine." Yesterday we were compelled both in the afternoon and evening to stop the sale of tickets, so you can imagine what good results a good picture can bring about.

I am very anxious to know what you have in store for me when this picture is completed.

Thanking you to keep me posted, I am

THE NEW & GREATER VITAGRAPH

ALBERT E. SMITH
PRESIDENT

J. STUART BLACKTON
VICE-PRESIDENT

THE BEGINNING

Vitagraph's expansion into "The New and Greater Vitagraph," with a capital of $25,000,000, is the most important development in the history of motion pictures.

The Greater Vitagraph is the largest motion picture organization in the world. It has the largest capitalization, the most extensive resources, the most far-reaching facilities. It is the giant of the motion picture industry—not only in size and strength, but also in the supreme quality of its pictures.

YESTERDAY

Backed by the genius, courage and far-sightedness of its founders, Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, Vitagraph has been for twenty years the recognized leader in every phase of motion picture production. From the beginning, Vitagraph has been the go-ahead influence, the tireless pace-maker, the dynamic force for better methods and better pictures.

Vitagraph produced the first news reel (showing "Dewey's Return") in 1898; the first animated cartoon ("Funny Faces of All Races") in 1906; the first five-reel feature ("Life of Moses") in 1909.

Vitagraph has invented new methods, processes and devices—it has improved and perfected many others. And always Vitagraph has led in the making of better, bigger, cleaner, more powerful motion pictures.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

Now comes the New and Greater Vitagraph, with unlimited capital at its command, and directed by the master minds of the industry.

For many months Vitagraph has been preparing for this new era in its history. The most talented and popular stars of both stage and screen have been engaged for the Greater Vitagraph pictures. The world's most famous authors have been drawn upon for stories of life and force, and swift, strong action.

Everyone of the Greater Vitagraph's tremendous resources, under the direction of the founders—Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton—have been concentrated on the production of the most wonderful, the greatest pictures ever filmed.

Some examples of the big things being done by the Greater Vitagraph are shown on the following pages. Read them.

THE NEW & GREATER VITAGRAPH

THE ONLY Photoplays That Ever Have Been Made or Ever Will Be Made Featuring

E. H. SOTHERN

Most Powerful and Talented Actor of the Modern Stage

One of "The New and Greater Vitagraph's" first achievements—a big, wonderful achievement—is the perpetuation of E. H. Sothern's marvelous histrionic ability on the film.

Mr. Sothern had announced his retirement from the stage. His great work—his strong, gripping personality—bade fair to become but a memory to the public. J. Stuart Blackton suggested that he appear in motion pictures.

"No," said Mr. Sothern. "I prefer to retire absolutely."

"But," urged Commodore Blackton, "think of what the world lost because the work of the old masters of the drama could not be preserved. What would you not give if you could see John McCullough on the screen today?"

This reference to his old associate caused Mr. Sothern to think again. And as a result he consented to appear in three powerful film-plays under the auspices of the Greater Vitagraph.

These great features will mark the permanent retirement of Mr. Sothern. When they are completed, this genius of dramatic art will not again appear behind the footlights or before the camera.

Strong, vivid and compelling, the E. H. Sothern-Vitagraph pictures form a fitting climax to a strikingly successful dramatic career.

Peggy Hyland, supporting E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel." At the right, E. H. Sothern in "The Chattel," the first Sothern-Vitagraph picture. Released September 25th through V. L. S. E.

THE NEW & GREATER VITAGRAPH

A Striking Example of the Bigger, Better, Super-Features of the Greater Vitagraph--

ANITA STEWART

In the Sensational Realistic Drama
The COMBAT

Produced by the Famous Director
RALPH INCE

This is another Greater Vitagraph achievement which forecasts the bigness, the power, the super-quality of the Greater Vitagraph productions.

No motion picture star in the world today has a stronger hold on the hearts of the public than dainty, winsome Anita Stewart. Her charming personality, combined with her great dramatic talent, has won the love and admiration of millions.

In "The Combat"—the startling, stirring story of the life struggle between two women—Miss Stewart is seen at her delightful best. And the entire dramatic force of both the star and the story has been fully developed under the superb direction of Ralph Ince, famous as the producer of big pictures.

Anita Stewart, Ralph Ince, "The Combat"! A combination of the unusual in acting, direction and story, and typical of the Greater Vitagragh ideals.

Released October 9th through V. L. S. E.

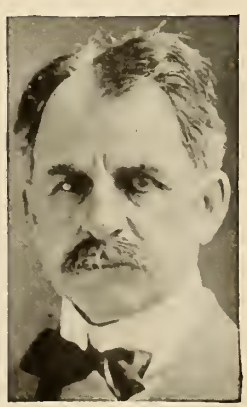
Never before has so remarkable a group of celebrated story-writers been called to the service of motion pictures as now appear on the literary roster of the Greater Vitagraph, the recent addition of O. Henry being the latest achievement.

Their work is the most powerful that can be found in modern literature. And all the Greater Vitagraph pictures are faithful pictorial dramatizations of the stories written by such famous pens.



Star, story, author—each the greatest. That is the big idea which makes the Greater Vitagraph productions overshadow all else in motion pictures.

I CONGRATULATE YOU, MARY!

You're a pretty shrewd as well as pretty little girl.

Nature not only graced you with a lovely countenance, but liberally upholstered your brains as well.

You were quick to read the handwriting on the wall. You saw the end of the old system the moment I introduced a fairer, squarer relationship between star, producer and exhibitor--the only basis for mutual profit and satisfaction.

Your endorsement of my theory is the greatest mark of encouragement I have thus far received.

What stronger evidence could there be that the CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG FILM CORPORATION is organized on the most progressive basis, than your adoption in the MARY PICKFORD FILM CORPORATION of the very idea and ideal that I originated.

You have strengthened my hand and I in turn offer it to you in sincere appreciation.

Will you please express to my friend, Mr. Adolph Zukor, my deep sense of obligation. It is indeed delightful to encounter among one's co-workers a man so broad-guaged, that neither false pride nor short-sightedness can deter him from the adoption of an excellent plan, even though it is conceived by another.

Facts and Comments

READ what an old friend of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD has to say about puffed pictures. "Several days ago at the solicitation of a ——— representative I screened at my theater the picture known as ———. After sitting through five reels of this 'bunk' my opinion, as expressed to the ——— representative, was about as follows: 'The photography in your picture was very good indeed and some of the settings artistic and well carried out as to detail, but the picture would be greatly improved if it were cut from five reels to one billed as a scenic and simply mentioning the fact that ——— posed in many of the scenes. As a picture which was supposed to have a story it is absolutely bad. If ——— has any dramatic ability there is no evidence of same in the picture and her support was so absolutely bad as to make it almost a burlesque.'" We earnestly hope that these lines will meet the eye of nervous press agents and of reviewers to whose minds every film is a masterpiece if it is advertised in the paper they are working for. With this type of intelligence in the exhibiting ranks whom do the puffers imagine they are deceiving?

AMERICA has been the foremost exponent of internationalism in screen productions. Before the outbreak of the great European war the American-made film was in high favor not only in Great Britain, but on the entire European continent. Indeed, in every part of the globe American films were popular and sought after, with one very strange and significant exception: we are speaking of the Latin-American market. Now the strangest part of this situation consists in the fact that a large percentage of American-made film is well suited to Latin America's demands. We have been told so by dozens of South Americans who were on their first visit to the United States. What then we are led to inquire is the cause of the poor representation of the American film in the South American market? It's the old story: Lack of enterprise on the part of the American producer. There are buyers from South America in this city driven here by the force of circumstances. They must have films and Europe cannot supply them any more. We may depend upon it that this opportunity is not given to knock at our doors indefinitely. Some time the war will end and if we allow the European producers to get back into the Latin-American field our chance will be gone—perhaps forever.

CONSIDERING the needs of this great country no loyal citizen thereof will hesitate to contribute his fair share toward the expense of maintaining its honor and prestige before the nations of the world, but in the name of Equality let the burden be fairly apportioned. Congress is now laboring with the question of apportionment, but its deductions have not been equable—the premises are wrong. It has been assumed that the business of exhibiting motion pictures is a highly lucrative calling and a rate of taxation that is all but confiscatory has been assessed. If Congress will not ascertain the facts those facts should be supplied so that our legislators shall not be compelled to rely upon the figments of a press agent's brain. Looks like a case of evil birds coming home to roost.

This spirit of exaggeration is likely to be harmful in more ways than one. Already we know that it is responsible for the flotation of a number of motion picture manufacturing concerns by persons who, reading the wild declarations of the publicity man of fabulous salaries paid to stars and the bountiful receipts from the rental or sale of pictures, have organized million-dollar corporations in the expectation of gathering in some of those phantom fortunes. Usually it has been the gullible public that has been victimized, but not infrequently have men, keen in the manipulation of financial problems in other fields, been mulcted of their hard working dollars, until today a motion picture proposition is about as welcome in New York's financial district as a mad dog.

We commend this whole subject to the consideration of the newly organized A. M. P. A. with the suggestion that the naked truth about the motion picture business—salaries of players, quality of pictures and total booking receipts—is about all that the censors should be expected to pass. Won't you, gentlemen, please do something about this.

Production

By Louis Reeves Harrison

WHERE certain minds are confused in attempting to lay stress on one of three essentials to a unity of motion picture production lies in an inability to grasp its principal object. To speak of production involves either a general or a specific meaning. The general one, so far as motion pictures are concerned, has come to signify the visualization of stories for exhibition on the screen, and the producer is what he is very clearly defined to be, "one who causes any article to have an exchangeable value"—the man who employs his capital and business ability to that end is now and ever has been "the producer."

In a narrower sense, author, director, camera man and others are producers, but they are really but contributors to the composite production. For a man to shout about the importance of production is to proclaim the obvious. If there was no production there would be no product—if there was nothing to produce, there would be no producer. Production has been going on for a great many years, and it has been greatly improved during that time in both artistic and scientific departments, but a lot of it has been very bad, and the fact that production is essential does not imply that the product is good.

The effort of today is to try to make it better and better, in response to a demand that has grown more and more intelligent. Let us consider the noun "production" as referring, as it often does in the English language, to a work of literature or art. A novel is a production, so is a play for stage performance, the products of mental labor, and from these productions most of the screen plays have been adapted. All products in art owe their very existence to creative and constructive genius.

By genius I mean that instinctive mental aptitude which is not dependent upon tuition, native creation and expression of a superior kind, especially in literature, art and science. As genius implies the use of both creative and constructive imagination, these terms are applied, and selective taste might well be added. Genius has found adequate expression in literature and drama many ages before the discovery of the new art of producing moving pictures, and the same avenues are open today. The author who has a great story of human life to tell is not dependent upon moving pictures for a medium.

Old stories have been told over and over again on the screen, and we are now looking for something new, something vital, something vigorous, something to give variety and charm to the exhibitor's program. Producers are advertising for something to produce, stories suitable for visualization, yet there are gentlemen engaged in this business who imagine that to visualize a product of creative genius is of greater importance than the product itself. Those who know better realize that authorship of superior quality counts, that splendid supervision counts, that highly intelligent interpretation counts—why bother about the relative importance of three absolute essentials to success?

The way to improved production lies through no one department, but through all. The new art has developed some splendid interpreters, the best of them receiving great fortunes for their work. The same is true of directors. Two essentials provided for, both of high importance, producers are seeking to develop the third, thus far neglected because old products of literature and drama have furnished most of the stories. The idea is to round out and complete screen production.

It is not of moment whether this or that element of production is supreme, but of whether all the elements are harmoniously good. As a class actors stand highest. Dependent as they are upon the opportunity afforded them, they have responded ably and faithfully to the demands put upon them. There are directors who bring out all there is in a story and add new graces by artistic treatment, and there are more directors who do not, many who fail to grasp and visualize the spirit of a story. As for authors, one examination of the scripts sent in would indicate that there are none whatever.

The weak spot, the one to be remedied, is obvious. Most of the scripts submitted are from amateurs who have but a faint idea of quality and quantity of material required. They may be writers in embryo, but an author in the rudimentary state cannot travel in thoroughbred company, and professional writers, even those capable of producing splendid stories for the screen, have not rightly measured the new art, and they know so little about formulating a scenario that large money is being paid for a mere synopsis in their case.

Capable authorship exists, but there is not enough of it to supply the demand, and there never will be enough capable authors of stories for the screen until they are given the same consideration long extended to them in other arts of expression. Slowly this is coming to be realized. Audiences and exhibitors are clamoring for the best; there is a demand to be met; there is a weakness to be corrected; improvement means that authorship shall be encouraged and fostered until native genius finds free and justly rewarded expression. All comment on the subject should aim to bring author and producer into better relation.

While the work in each department should be exposed to the perfecting processes of criticism, it is hardly wise to belittle any department as a whole, if we aspire to a unity and harmony of production. We know that most of the actors are doing well; we liberally reward them and those directors who have proven their ability; profits permit producers to be liberal with those who interpret and those who supervise interpretation of the story; there is a disposition to be fair to the author, but it is far from being an easy matter to determine in advance whether or not a story written for the screen has high value.

Who shall create the gems which supervising directors hold against the revolving disk of treatment to bring out their light and beauty or forever spoil? How shall we know that the diamond in the rough contains the high value of brilliancy unless men possessing a fine spirit of choice and high principle combined are placed in charge of scenario departments? Creative genius must be given a reason to turn from the novel and the drama to the screen and must have some assurance that fine work is not mutilated in the process of being transferred from scenario to film.

The way to remedy the weak spot in motion picture production is to first definitely locate every contributing cause of that weakness, eliminate the useless and build up what is lacking until a harmony of strength is achieved. If story and treatment are the two limbs on which successful production must stand, why not make one as strong as the other instead of trying to hop along on one or make shift with a wooden leg of adaptation from purely artificial sources? Any man who imagines that an art of expression can succeed with nothing to express has another guess coming to him.

As Philadelphia Looks to a Stranger

World Man Sees Some Fine Theatres, Meets Some Good Fellows and Collides With a Regular Drink

THERE was one bright spot developed in a casual "once-over" given the motion picture situation in Philadelphia last week. Louis Krouse, business representative of Philadelphia Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 307, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., reported he was the only member of his organization not actively engaged in projecting motion pictures. The present summer, Mr. Krouse said, had been for the organized operators of Philadelphia the most prosperous in the history of the union.

In all other quarters, however, there was present the overhanging pall of infantile paralysis, on account of which the theaters had been closed to children. A World man in the course of a few calls around the city had run against the tales of falling off in business at every turn.

We had dropped in on Frank W. Buhler, general manager of the Central Market Street Company, at the fine Victoria. Mr. Buhler took off a couple of hours and showed us around the theater district. In the course of the evening we attached to the party William C. Herchenrider of the Stanley company and also John Clark of the Metro exchange.

The Victoria gives a two-hour show, with four classes of entertainment—scenic or travel, a news reel, a comedy and a drama. Beginning September 1 the house will reduce the weekly changes from three to two. The program includes Metro and Triangle subjects. The prices of admission are 10 and 20 cents, but mostly the latter. The big Kimball organ is operated by a seven and a half horsepower motor. The mechanism of the instrument is contained in two rooms, 26 by 35 feet. A twenty horsepower motor furnishes the power for ventilating, which is of the mushroom category.

At the Ruby theater, a Stanley house, 618 Market street, we met Manager Robert Madder. The Ruby has a Moeller organ. Its 350 chairs have such ample bases that the house easily looks like one of 600 seats. The admission is a straight 10 cents, and the show runs 1 hour and 40 minutes. The program includes subjects from Paramount, Fox, Metro and Triangle.

At the Princess, a 400-seat Central house, Henry B. Walthall was being featured in "The Sting of Victory."

At the Arcadia we looked over a house that occupies the most expensive bit of ground devoted to theaters in the City of Brotherly Love. There are 536 seats. Mr. Buhler illuminated the ventilation plant so that we might see the process of forcing 10,000 feet of air through water every minute, sufficient to renew the air in the whole house in eight minutes. The same apparatus also serves for heating purposes, a thermostat enabling the manager to gauge the temperature at any desired point. Up in the fine projection room we shook hands with Operator Williams. Mr. Williams has unusually comfortable and well equipped quarters. There are three rooms, one devoted to generators, one to projection and the third to wardrobe. Projection is at 48 amperes. The program runs two hours. A Kimball organ provides music. G. A. Donjian is the manager of this well conducted house.

At the Stanley we met William Katz, the manager of a "regular" house. We were just in time to get in on the evening overture by the combined orchestra of twenty-five and the Austin organ. There was well-merited hearty applause at the conclusion. It is easy to see that music is one of the features at the Stanley. Harry W. Mayer, one of Philadelphia's prominent musicians, heads the orchestra. Rollo Maitland and Richard Bach are the organists. Up in the projection room we met Operator Cherry, who has equipped his lamphouses with vent funnels, actuated by two twelve-inch flues on a forty-eight-inch fan on the roof. For the room itself there is a twenty-four-inch intake fan. There is a long throw to the screen, requiring an amperage of 75 to 85. The rest and toilet rooms are ventilated. There is a unique system of indirect lighting for the negotiation of the balcony stairs. Far up above the street Mr. Herchenrider took us out on a fire escape to show us a spectacle of rare beauty. In front of us a couple of blocks—or is it squares?—was the brilliantly illuminated City Hall. Ranging to the right were several of the city's skyscrapers, alternating with buildings of lesser height. The whole was silhouetted against a sky in which the moon was battling to shine through fleecy clouds.

The Regent theater, the first house in this exclusive section of the town, was found to be absolutely bare of furnishings and fittings. The Regent, which was also the first picture theater in the city to install an organ, is being renovated. As a beginning everything was removed. It was intended to spend $15,000 in improvements, but one of the chiefs of the Regent suggested it looked now as if the sum would reach $20,000. He promised a couple of surprises for his patrons when the job was completed.

At the Palace, formerly Lubin's Palace, we looked over another Mastbaum house. Music is provided by a Kimball organ and orchestra. There are nearly one thousand seats. The shows are the same as those at the Stanley. We had the pleasure of meeting up with Operator Fitzgerald.

We also looked over the big executive offices of the Stanley Company and the Stanley Booking Company. It was here Mr. Herchenrider was on his own ground, where he supervises bookings for eighty-five houses in the city and state. Here, too, Stanley Mastbaum sits at his desk and sees pictures thrown through from the back of a ground glass screen. It would be a large establishment in any town.

Out on the street we had a few minutes' talk with Julius Brebain, said to be the veteran operator of Philadelphia.

One of the incidents of the evening—which was warm—was the introduction of the World man to a presbyterian—that's what Buhler called it, and the man in the white coat knew just what the Central's general manager was talking about. Speaking reminiscently and after the lapse of a week it is a memory fragrant of mint—and other ingredients, among which ginger ale somewhat unsuccessfully struggled for predominance. 'Twas all right, and then some.

The following day we called in at a few of the exchanges and supply houses. Of the latter there was Lewis M. Schwab, who said things were particularly bright at the moment, he having just sold two machines to a customer, with two more in immediate prospect for the same buyer.

Mr. Schwab introduced the World man to one of his callers, Nicholas A. Jones of the Savoy theater, Wilmington, Del., remarking that Mr. Jones was the pioneer exhibitor of his town. Mr. Jones says the Savoy has 600 seats. The Wilmington exhibitor told of his difficulties when he opened business eleven years ago, how the police would not let him show pictures because he had no license, at the same time admitting there was no agency with authority to issue one. Finally, after returning money for 153 admissions, he appealed to the police commissioner, and for $5.50 a week was permitted to operate. For his first three years Mr. Jones had no competition. Then other shows opened, and singularly enough business increased in volume.

At the Calehuff Supply Company we met William Wirt, manager of sales, who was busy waiting on customers. Herbert Griffin, representing Nicholas Power, was calling on the trade. We missed Mr. Schwalbe. He was out. G. W. Bradenburgh found time to say howdy. Others we met were M. Lessy, manager of the Philadelphia Film Exchange; G. J. Ames, manager of the General Film Company; Charles Martin, assistant manager of Pathe—Manager Osborne was coversing with New York, and R. Lynch, manager of the Fairmont, which means Bluebird and Red Feather.

G. B.

WILLIAM STEINER AT SARATOGA.

William Steiner, who supervised "The Yellow Menace" serial, is away on an automobile tour and was last heard from at Saratoga. Bill thought it would be a fine vacation to look the "ponies" over and, not being much of a handicapper, he went by the jockey's colors. Every time a cap and jacket showed up that had any "yellow" in it got Bill. Some of them are running yet, but a few got in the money.

Bill still says that he would back a cross-eyed musician with a "yellow" clarinet against a tin Lizzie with a racing engine in it. His success with "The Yellow Menace" has settled the color scheme with him for life. Bill says that when he gets through at Saratoga he may go picking yellow buttercups and daisies.

Would Elevate the Motion Picture

The Photoplay League, to Reach Every Community, Being Formed by Prominent Men and Women

IN PROCESS of formation is the Photoplay League, which is designed to unite patrons of the photoplay in an organized effort to create a demand for wholesome, attractive and instructive plays, and the encouragement of the higher forms of motion picture art. The promoters of the new association have been working quietly, with the aim of getting the association in running order before making any public announcement. The temporary offices are in the Ritz Carlton Hotel, although E. F. Allyn, the secretary, stated this week that in a few weeks permanent offices would be taken at a Fifth avenue address.

The advisory committee contains many names of national prominence. Among these are Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Adolph Lewisohn, E. H. Sothern, Julia Marlowe, Mrs. Chas. H. Whitman, wife of the Governor of New York; Hamilton Holt, E. H. Blashfield, John D. Crimmins, Frederick C. Howe, former head of the National Board of Censorship; Lillian D. Wald, Charles Dana Gibson, Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Mrs. Simeon Ford, Frederick A. Stokes, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Mrs. James Speyer, Norman Hapgood, Waldo G. Morse and Cornelius Vanderbilt. Isaac N. Seligman is the honorary treasurer.

The membership is divided into three classes. The subscription for general members is $1 annually. Sustaining members contribute $5 annually, and patrons are those subscribing $50 and over, who will receive members' tickets to an equivalent amount, in this way widening the influence of the league.

In the circulars being distributed by the league it is set forth that every one is talking of the need for cleaner, better pictures, but it is pointed out that it is no use in talking about it unless the best subjects are supported in every town. The claim is made that the best pictures, as a rule, do not pay. It is pointed out the most effective way to change this condition is to form a large body of public opinion in support of the best.

Local activity, it is suggested, can have merely a local effect, and therefore it is announced a league will be formed in every community. The association is a volutary, self-supporting one, and each month under the supervision of the advisory committee a selection of pictures will be made from the current releases which will be given the seal and commendation of the league. The local leagues will be notified accordingly.

"The association will be something on the line of the Drama League," said Mr. Allyn to a reporter for the Moving Picture World. "Of course, in our case, we will have the advantage of getting the pictures we want if we obtain sufficient membership. The advisory committee realizes there is no use in talking about these things unless there is substantial support given. We must show the exhibitor he is going to make money if he co-operates with us. Naturally the exhibitor will say his patrons support the subjects he is showing and if we want anything else shown we must convince him we will support them. We have received practically unanimous commendation of our plans from influential men and women all over the country.

"It has been suggested that an exhibitor make one night a week league night. It may well be one of those evenings when business is quieter—that will suit us. As for the manufacturers, we have received strong support from them, and we do not think it will be difficult to show them that the league will command the confidence of the best in the land.

"The new movement aims at nothing in the way of criticism; it does not in any way conflict with the boards of censorships—but we hope it will make local censorship unnecessary. If the league has weight we expect it will have that effect. In Chicago a committee is now being formed among a number of leading citizens, and if their efforts work out as we expect them to it may make censorship unnecessary there.

"There is no use grumbling about the kind of pictures being shown unless you support what is good."

One of the plans of the promoters is the holding of an annual convention of the members of the league for the discussion of matters of general interest relating to the motion picture in all parts of the country.

The Photoplay League, it is stated, has no connection with any producing or exhibiting organization. It is designed to "represent the interests of the audience, to create an enlightened opinion, and to express the ideals of the great army of patrons of the silent drama."

Kalem Gets George Larkin

KALEM COMPANY announced last week the signing of a long term contract with George Larkin, well known as a screen leading man and as a dare-devil. Larkin is to be featured in a new series of subjects concerning which complete announcement will be made within the next week.

An all star cast is being quietly recruited to appear in the new Kalem productions, while negotiations are under way with a prominent author to supply the original stories for the screen productions. Last week Larkin was busily engaged in putting the finishing touches to a multiple reel feature in which he will be starred. He starts for the Kalem Jacksonville studio this week.

George Larkin.

George Larkin has been popular as a leading man for well over six years and in addition he has gained a well-earned reputation as a dare-devil as the hero of a thousand screen hair-breadth escapes. Before his entry into motion pictures Larkin was a favorite in vaudeville and stock and on the Broadway stage in support of prominent stars.

In his youthful days Larkin was for some time a circus acrobat, before more ambitious leanings led him to the footlights. He was not long in pictures before he found that the athletic training of the sawdust arena served him in good stead in the strenuous screen game. His willingness to take chances in producing screen thrills soon gained him the name of Dare Devil Larkin. After three years with eastern companies, Larkin went west in 1913 when Louis Joseph Vance wrote the "Trey-o'-Hearts" around his daring, supplying him with a vehicle that called for one audacious feat after another until he had gained the undisputed place as the screen's most daring actor.

Among Larkin's daring exploits which screen followers will remember may be mentioned his seventy-five foot dive from the mast of a vessel in San Diego harbor, a thrilling scene staged atop the iron work on the thirteenth story of a San Francisco skyscraper in course of erection, his thirty-foot fall over the edge of a cliff, and numerous spectacular fire scenes which found him performing all sorts of courageous exploits. In 1913 Larkin was given considerable notice following his rescue of Ruth Roland from drowning at Santa Monica.

PATHE CLUB TO HAVE ANOTHER OUTING.

The Pathe Club will soon have another outing. September 9 has been selected as the date and club members and their friends will go by auto to Coney Island, where the afternoon will be spent in various amusements. Dinner and dancing have been arranged for at the Brighton Beach Casino.

This will be the third affair of the kind which the Pathe Club has had since J. A. Berst was elected president, and others are contemplated before the end of the year.

Vitagraph Sues Ford For $1,000,000

Producing Concern Alleges Manufacturer's Strictures Against "Battle Cry of Peace" Have Damaged It Materially

THE Vitagraph Company of America, through J. Stuart Blackton, vice-president, has brought suit in the Supreme Court of New York against Henry Ford, asking judgment in the sum of $1,000,000. The complaint is dated June 26, and alleges that on or about May 5, 1916, Mr. Ford caused to be published in not less than 250 newspapers published in the United States an article entitled "Humanity and Sanity," in which the Detroit manufacturer charged in substance that the general agitation then prevailing in the country for preparedness and defense of this country against foreign invasion was due to the efforts of munitions manufacturers to promote their selfish interests and that "The Battle Cry of Peace," a film manufactured and produced by the plaintiffs at great expense, was inspired by Hudson Maxim, "a manufacturer of munitions of war, in the interest of munitions manufacturers for the personal and selfish gain and interest of said Maxim and others interested with him in the manufacture and sale of munitions."

Among the items complained of in the Ford article are such sentences as:

"Have you seen that awful moving picture, 'The Battle Cry of Peace'?

"Did you shake with fear and tremble for your country's safety?

"Did you know that others were shaking at the same time, but with laughter at your fear, and with joy over the fat contracts your fear might bring them?

"On the screen you were told that the play was founded on the story of Hudson Maxim, 'Defenseless America.' You saw Mr .Maxim in the picture. He was holding something aloft. It was an instrument of warfare.

"Now, Mr. Maxim was merely advertising his wares and playing on your fears to make a market for his goods.

"Mr. Maxim has something to sell—war munitions."

At another point in the article occurred the sentences: "The book was a fine advance notice. The picture was a fine follow-up."

The complaint further sets forth that "the charge made in said article by the defendant was made and intended to convey to the public the impression that the said moving picture 'The Battle Cry of Peace' was produced by this plaintiff at the instance of and in the interest of the said Hudson Maxim or in the interest of manufacturers of steel, powder, arms, ordnance and munitions of war and for the purpose of furthering the personal and selfish interests of said manufacturers; and that the charge made in said articles was meant to and tended to convey the impression to the public that the plaintiff was willfully, wickedly and maliciously attempting to inspire in the public mind the belief that this country stood in great danger in the event of invasion" and that "this plaintiff did this from ignoble, dishonest, dishonorable and treasonable motives."

The complaint declares the Vitagraph company produced "The Battle Cry of Peace" not only for commercial purposes and to furnish the public with a clean and interesting film drama, but for the purpose of furthering a national propaganda to enlighten the public upon the condition of the country as it was then known and for the purpose of communicating a great and important message to the American people; that the publication of the articles has to a great extent injured the reputation and business of the Vitagraph company; that it has been and still is obliged to spend large amounts of money in publishing denials of said accusations in order to restore its reputation; and that as the result of the publication by the defendant the receipts and gains from "The Battle Cry of Peace" have materially decreased.

In commenting on the suit Mr. Blackton said:

"Mr. Ford has a right to his own opinions. If he thinks the great industry he has built up and the millions he has made should be left unprotected for a lot of barbarians to come and acquire almost without a struggle, he is welcome to such opinions. He may even spend time and money in spreading his propaganda, but he has no right to attack others who differ with his views.

"I wrote and produced 'The Battle Cry of Peace' to further the interests of practical preparedness, to arouse in the hearts of American citizens the sense of their strict accountability to their government, and through the tremendously powerful medium of the motion picture to counterbalance the pernicious influence of the apostles of 'peace at any price.'

"The accusation that munition interests are responsible for the picture is absolutely without foundation. In the latter part of April, 1915, Hudson Maxim sent me a copy of his book 'Defenseless America.' It contained many valuable and remarkable statistics about the deplorable condition of this country's defenses and I realized that a motion picture illustrating the facts set forth in the book would reach millions of people in a short period of time.

"Mr. Maxim was paid a stated sum for the use of the material in his book and around these facts I wrote the drama of 'The Battle Cry of Peace.' That was the only connection Mr. Maxim had with the affair. This was in April, 1915, and the Maxim Munition Company, of which I had never heard until Mr. Ford's advertisements appeared, was not in existence until about December, 1915.

"Mr. Ford's printed statement that munition manufacturers were back of the picture prejudiced many people against 'The Battle Cry of Peace' and damaged the business of theaters in many cities."

Although the complaint is dated June 26, the papers were not served until recently, on the occasion of a visit to New York by Mr. Ford. The automobile manufacturer has applied to the New York courts for an order to remove the case to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. As a reason for the change Mr. Ford sets forth that he is a resident of Michigan. The order for the transfer was entered August 31.

"Big Bill" and "The Yellow Menace"

"THE Yellow Menace," a serial in sixteen episodes, was produced by the Serial Film Company, and stands as an achievement, credit for which should be largely given to one man—William Steiner—known in the film business as "Big Bill," under whose personal supervision the picture was made. When the picture was completed Mr. Steiner and the Serial Film Company negotiated with the Unity Sales Corporation for its distribution. A. J. Cobe, vice president and general manager of that company, was quick to see the overwhelming power of this picture, and concluded negotiations whereby his company became the distributor.

William Steiner.

The author of the scenario is Aubrey M. Kennedy, who directed the making of the picture under Mr. Steiner's direct supervision.

Many of the scenes were laid in and around Jacksonville, Fla., and the Atlantic Coast of that section, but most of the scenes were laid in various sections of New York City and the attractive residential parts of Long Island.

The newspaper version of the story was written by Louis Tracy, the distinguished English novelist and author of many popular works of fiction. The story has been syndicated and contracts made for its publication in a large number of the most prominent newspapers throughout the country.

Mr. Steiner, Mr. Cobe and other officials of the producing and distributing companies connected with "The Yellow Menace," feel that they have outdone themselves in providing exchanges and exhibitors with a great serial, entirely ready for release on schedule time, Labor Day.

Richardson Tours the Maritime Provinces

Samples Several Varieties of Roads and Strikes a "Dry Hotel"—Meets up with All Styles of Projection

COMING back from Chandler to Campbellton we had eighteen miles of almost straight up and down in the way of hills, with rocks of all kinds and descriptions, ranging in size from a pebble to half a good sized hill, with ruts, and real cute mud holes two to six inches deep, just to keep up the excitement. We negotiated this all right, but fifty miles from Campbellton, a new Firestone non-skid rear shoe, which had only run four hundred miles, literally went all to pieces, and we had to hoist Nancy Hanks, No. 3, the Go-devil, into the "baggage coach ahead," and patronize a perfectly respectable, but very punk railway (chimen de fer is the French for railway) coach from there to Campbellton. At Campbellton there was one poor lonesome motorcycle, owned by an extractor of teeth. This gentleman was the proud possessor of an extra shoe, a very poor one, which he had used considerable, but by paying him a good deal more than a first class new shoe would cost in the Good Old U. S. A., I secured possession, which was fortunate, since, failing, we would have been compelled to order one from Quebec, or maybe from Toronto, and pile up hotel bills and temper while we waited. At Campbellton I was too busy to visit the moving picture show—if there was one. It was when we left Campbellton that our real trials, troubles, tribulations and grief commenced. Such roads! Oy, oy, oy! And the further we went the worse it got. The second day out my daughter remarked: "Huh! When I am not going up in the air I am coming down!" The aforesaid words being punctured with grunts as she hit the saddle. The distance from Campbellton to St. John is three hundred miles, fully one-half of which was simply awful, and the rest none too good. It was an alternation of sand, sometimes eight inches deep, hills, rocks, ruts and mudholes. Poor old Nancy Hanks, the Go-devil, probably would have bit us had she teeth. As it was she dumped us off in the sand several times. But we made it and what's more we averaged more than one hundred miles per day. The first night stop was at Chatham. I registered at the hotel and asked the rate, to which the clerk replied $2.50 with bath, $2 without. "Very well," said I, "give us one room with bath and one without," to which the prompt reply came: "We have no rooms with bath, Mister." When we got done laughing at this the boy piloted us to our rooms, deposited the baggage and said: "If you want anything, mister, there's the telephone behind the door. You can't use it though, its busted."

We visited the moving picture show across the street from the hotel, and we found, on the second floor, a very neat little auditorium. Unfortunately I lost my notes containing the name of the owner and operator, but the picture was, everything considered, very good indeed. It lacked a border of black, but I was told the size of the picture had just been reduced and the black border would be added at once.

At Moncton, N. B., population about 15,000, there are two moving picture shows and the Grand Opera House, which latter fills in with pictures between road shows. We visited the Grand Opera House and the Empress, both owned by the Eastern Amusement Company, and managed by Messrs. Torrie and Winter, affable gentlemen whom it was both a pleasure and privilege to meet. These houses are commodious and very prettily decorated inside. Operator H. Boemer was putting on an excellent picture at the Empress, using A. C. He had one Simplex taking current through a compensarc, and a Power's Six fed by a Hallberg economizer, which was the same equipment as used at the Grand Opera House, but A. W. Ferguson, operator at the Grand, had a considerably better illuminated screen. Not only was the light at the Grand opera more brilliant but also its tone was purer. The third Moncton house I did not visit as one hundred miles of terrible road had almost completely tired me out.

St. John and Digby.

From Moncton the road was an alternation of sand, bumps, rock and good road, with several miles of bumps as a sort of expiring gasp from New Brunswick roads as we entered St. John, arriving in that Northland city Thursday evening, August 10, at 4 P. M., though I don't remember what kind of time it was. I had almost worn the setter of my watch out. In Gaspe they use Atlantic time plus twenty minutes, which is one hour and twenty minutes ahead of New York time. At Campbellton I subtracted the twenty minutes, but at St. John it was Atlantic time, plus "daylight time," which made it two hours ahead of New York time. Across the Bay of Fundy you drop the "daylight time" end of it and—oh, piffle, what's the use anyhow?

Excursion Party of St. John Exhibitors, Operators and Guests, Mr. Richardson and Daughter Nellie in Center.

Arrangements had been made to entertain the editor Saturday and Sunday, so we sailed on the Steamer Empress for Digby, Nova Scotia, Land of Evangeline, where the editor's wife was born and where we had been instructed to make certain visits, on pain of losing our happy home. At Digby Jas. F. Cripps owns and manages the "Lyric," a neat little theater which collects from its patrons a fifteen cent toll, and gives value received therefor. Brother Cripps has had something of an uphill fight, Digby's population only totalling 1,200, but he has made it pay.

Saturday morning saw us on board the Empress again, bound for St. John. On the boat we found Brother Cripps, or he found us. Also we found on board St. John bound, intent upon attending our lecture, J. M. Franklin, manager Strand theater, Halifax, N. S., M. Herschorn, manager Imperial theater, Halifax, N. S., both of whom immediately fell in love with my daughter—married men, too—scandalous! Several other Halifax men took the rail route. At the wharf we were met by A. J. Mason, operator, and W. H. Golding, manager, Imperial theater, and W. C. Smith, manager Empress theater, West St. John. We were automobubbled out to the beautiful home of Friend Smith where we enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. Smith and his charming wife during our stay in the city.

The boat was late and we had only time to examine the plant at the Imperial, presided over by Brother A. J. Mason, a gentleman of brains and real ability. The Imperial is St. John's largest theater, and it is a strictly up-to-date one, devoted to the silent drama, but having a stage of ample proportions to accommodate the most elaborate road show. In the basement is a plant of which Operator Mason is justly proud. It consists of a 2,500 volt induction motor pulling a D. C. generator of ample capacity to supply all current needed in the theater. This plant has already been described in the department in considerable detail. The operating room is 8 x 16 feet, with a 7-foot ceiling, but as in all Keith houses I have visited, it is away up at the back of a high gallery, which makes for heavy and unavoidable distortion. The inside of the operating room is black, the observation ports of ample width, and there is a vent flue with a 20-inch exhaust fan. Two Simplex projectors are used, and the rheostats are covered by a ventilated iron hood with the vent pipe leading to the open air, so that all heat generated by the resistance is carried away. There is a Kleigh spotlight in the room, a metal rack for supplies, a metal film storage tank, and an excellent opera glass for focusing. The screen is Gold Fibre, the picture 18 feet wide, and the distance of projection 138 feet. The Imperial projection is excellent.

At 11 P. M. the operators and managers of St. John and their invited friends foregathered in the Imperial theater where the editor was welcomed by Chairman A. J. Mason in well chosen words. Dr. Bridges, Superintendent of Schools, and Chairman of the New Brunswick Board of Censors, spoke briefly on the impossibility of pleasing every one; A. E. McGinley, a member of the New Brunswick Board of Censors, spoke on similar lines and brought forth prolonged laughter at his witty sallies; Mr. McGinley was followed by A. A. Wall, who, all by his lonesome, constitutes the Nova Scotia "Board" of Censors. Walter H. Golding, manager Imperial theater, and member of the local reception committee, followed in a brief general address of welcome.

The editor felt really embarrassed at the many kind things said by the various speakers and Chairman Mason concerning himself and his work, and when this was followed by three cheers and a tiger as he arose to speak he very nearly committed the cardinal sin of the stage by "forgetting his lines." It must certainly be said that the exhibitors and operators of the maritime provinces do not lack in either appreciation or enthusiasm.

At the end of the lecture a unanimous rising vote of thanks was extended, and while the audience stood some one started the song "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," and it was sung with a will.

All this is not set forth to toot our own horn, but to show the genuine feeling of friendship, which seemed to be unanimous. The gathering was the first the managers and operators of this territory have had and it was the sentiment that the opportunity presented for organization be taken advantage of, which was later done by perfecting temporary organization, with W. H. Golding of New Brunswick and J. Franklin of Nova Scotia as temporary chairman. It was decided to meet in convention in Halifax September 16. Committees were appointed to take care of the affair and it is hoped that a successful organization will result.

Next day, Sunday, the committee arranged an excursion up the St. John River thirty miles, a sea-going tug being chartered for this purpose. It was a thoroughly jolly party and the affair, aided and abetted by an ideal day, was one great big success. The St. John is a marvel of scenic beauty. I doubt if any river in the world can surpass it.

In conclusion, I voice for the guests and visitors three whooping big cheers for those princes of entertainers, St. John, N. B., exhibitors, operators, and exchange men. May they live long and prosper.

Oh, yes, by the way, we had with us a lady operator in the person of Mrs. A. J. Mason, reg'ler crank twister, though retired on a pension, which consists of her husband's salary. Instead of projecting pictures she now projects ideas into the brains of the young Masons.

The Halifax men insisted that we visit their city, but time and sandy roads both compelled a firm no. Maybe some time in the future. We at least hope so.

From St. John we went back across the Bay of Fundy to Digby, motored down through Nova Scotia to Yarmouth, took steamer to Boston, distance 240 miles, and "beat it" back to Little Old New York, where we were glad indeed to dismount and enter our own wigwam, on West 9th street, Brooklyn, once more. It was a wonderful trip, but a very strenuous one.

Thanhouser Child Actress

ETHELMARY OAKLAND, the seven-year-old little picture actress who for the past two years has been featured in a number of Thanhouser films, having just recently completed an important part in "The Shine Girl," which will be released through Pathe August 27, has now started five weeks rehearsing for "The World and the Woman," in which picture she will play the daughter of Jeanne Engles.

Ethelmary Oakland.

Ethelmary, in her short but meteoric career, has been the victim of seventeen different accidents on the screen, hence her title of "Thanhouser's little dare devil." In "The Only Way" she was a lost child who met with every variety of mishap conceivable by the fertile brain of the scenario writer; in "The Shine Girl" she falls off a high cliff into the ocean below and is just sinking for the third time when Gladys Hulette has an opportunity to come to the rescue; and now in "The World and the Woman" this fearless youngster must slip from the banisters down a whole flight of stairs, supposedly seriously injuring her spine so that Jeanne Engles may bring her back to health by the "faith cure," but Ethelmary has as many lives as the traditional cat that looked at the king. Even before she went into the movies this remarkable child actress played the lead in "The Littlest Rebel" on the legitimate stage where she appeared with Frank Wilcox and Minnie Gombel, who recently became the bride of Harry Rumsey.

Kane Goes to Coast for Artcraft

President Greene Announces Twenty-five Exchanges Will Be Opened by New Concern.

ARTHUR S. KANE, one of the best known film men in the United States, left New York City on August 25 for the Pacific Coast. Mr. Kane will be the Western representative of Artcraft Pictures Corporation, the new concern which will produce and distribute the pictures featuring Mary Pickford. Mr. Kane will open offices in Denver, Seattle and San Francisco. It is said he has closed his New York office in the Candler Building.

Al Lichtman, general manager of Artcraft, in Detroit on Wednesday, August 23, said that a local exchange would be opened immediately. He announced the appointment of Frank Rutledge as manager for Detroit. Mr. Rutledge has been for some time with George Kleine, handling "Gloria's Romance" in Michigan. He is seeking temporary quarters, as ultimately he will be located in the Madison Theater Building, in course of erection at Broadway and Grand Circus Park. In this connection it is also reported, although unofficially, that the new Pickford features will play two weeks each at the New Madison, which will open around Thanksgiving Day.

The announcement that Mary Pickford had organized her own company for the production of motion picture plays, has brought in a single week to the office of Artcraft, at 729 Seventh avenue, a deluge of applications for bookings. Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, and his associates, are slowly emerging from the chaos of the original deluge. So rapidly is the organization being completed that they now emphasize this point.

Every exhibitor in the United States may show in his theater the Mary Pickford productions. Miss Pickford has said that she wants no bar erected against the exhibitor who is ambitious to improve the quality of his entertainment and clientele.

"We are carrying out her wishes to the letter," Mr. Greene says. "It is to correct any misconception that there exists a favored class to whom Miss Pickford's pictures will be distributed that Artcraft emphasizes the statement that the field is open. Soon twenty-five branch managers will be combing their territory. All applications received at the main offices will be turned over to them in order of receipt, and the man who has never shown a Pickford picture in his theater has just as much chance to have territorial protection as his previously more fortunate competitor."

Close observers of the development of the film industry express the opinion that no announcement of recent years has created such a response of approval as Mary Pickford's determination to go it alone, unhampered by restrictions of policy other than those traditions which she shall hereafter lay down as the result of her own artistic experience and achievement.

Eventually applications will all be referred to the various branch managers, who are being recruited from the best known and most skillful film men in the sections which they will handle. In the light of his successful experience in the distribution of features Mr. Greene is confident the system of putting Mary Pickford's pictures before the public will be the most comprehensive ever devised and the most satisfactory to producers, distributors, exhibitors and theatergoers.

"In a short time the Mary Pickford Film Corporation will announce the character of the picture the star and her company are now working on," Mr. Greene says in conclusion. "I may not reveal the details now, but I can say this first production will set the highest standard for notable direction and acting of distinction. It will be a genuine masterwork, presenting Miss Pickford in a characterization that will increase the affection of her immense following."

THE FIFTY-SIXTH STREET "BAR."

Here is one of the cleverest summer ideas for a motion picture theater that has come to our attention. Joseph McCready and Mr. Yonker of the Fifty-sixth Street theater, Philadelphia, made up their minds that they would give their patrons a treat during the hot months, a treat that has eventually turned into a great advertising idea for the theater—a "bar." At least that is what Mr. McCready calls it, although it is in reality a bower in the rear of the promenade; a bower made of lattice covered with flowers. In this bower is a "barmaid" who serves grape lemonade to the patrons without any cost. From the very first night it has made a big hit, and all the people in that neighborhood are talking about it. We believe this is a new idea for motion picture theaters.

Thanhouser Features for September

Two Subjects with Forence La Badie in Leading Parts Will Be Released.

BECAUSE of the great demand for plays in which Florence La Badie is starred, Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has decided to release two Florence La Badie features through the Pathe exchanges in September.

"The Fugitive," starring Miss La Badie, was the first Thanhouser-Pathe feature, and such a phenomenal success was it that exhibitors have sent letters pouring into the Thanhouser and Pathe offices, begging for more Florence La Badie plays.

To attempt to satisfy the demand, Mr. Thanhouser has decided to release on September 10 Miss La Badie in "The Fear of Poverty," a five-reel drama, written by Agnes C. Johnston and directed by Frederic Sullivan.

"Saint, Devil and Woman," featuring Miss La Badie, a play by Philip Lonergan and directed by Mr. Sullivan, is to be released on September 24.

In "The Fear of Poverty" Miss La Badie is supported by Robert Vaughn, George Marlo, Edwin Stanley and Ethyle Cooke. Miss La Badie plays two parts, a mother and her daughter, and a great deal of double exposure work was necessary in order to perfect the play.

It is a story of a girl who is reared in poverty, who marries for love, but who finally acquires riches. She protects her daughter from the sorrows that she herself suffered. The daughter is reared in luxury and marries a man she does not love, hoping thereby to find the happiness she believes comes through wealth and social position. A novel twist in the tale, a thrilling denouement teaches mother and daughter that only through unselfish love comes true happiness.

Miss La Badie is supported in "Saint, Devil and Woman" by Wayne Arey, Hector Dion and Ethyle Cooke. Philip Lonergan has written a different sort of a play—a story of a girl of two natures controlled at different times by two men, one a good influence, the other an evil influence.

"Saint, Devil and Woman" is crowded with suspense and truly big scenes. A sensational battle between railroad strikers and strike breakers is one of the features. Miss La Badie gives a splendid portrayal of the two-sided woman, showing deep appreciation of the psychological details. Before she played the part she spent several days in the New York Public Library reading authoritative works upon the phenomena of dual personalities.

THEW JOINS FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY.

Harvey F. Thew, well-known New York newspaper man and more recently a photodramatic critic of reputation, has signed a contract with the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company to devote himself exclusively in the future to the preparation and adaptation of material for the screen. In addition to adapting stories by famous novelists and dramatists, Mr. Thew will also do considerable original work for both Famous Players and Lasky studios.

Mr. Thew started newspaper work in Chicago and came to New York in 1905. Prior to an association of eight years on the reportorial and editorial staff of the New York Herald he was connected with the New York World, New York Commercial and New York American.

With the New York Herald he made a specialty of navy reporting and made three cruises with the Atlantic Battleship Fleet. In 1911 and again in 1912 he went to Cuba as Herald correspondent to report political uprisings and did special work for the paper in Malta, Italy, France and Gibraltar.

Mr. Thew has made three adaptations for the Famous Players-Lasky studios beginning with "The Big Sister," with Mae Murray, "The Years of the Locust" with Fannie Ward, and "The Kiss," with Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot.

LEAH BAIRD GOES TO UNIVERSAL CITY.

Leah Baird again has joined the Universal Company. She left New York on Tuesday, August 22, for the Pacific Coast studios of the company. Once before Miss Baird was a member of the Universal's Imp Company, as one of which she went to England and France a few years ago. She was a leading player in "Ivanhoe" and "Absinthe," produced on the other side, playing opposite King Baggot in those productions. She left Imp to return to the Vitagraph, where she remained a year.

Mutual Executive Offices Move to Chicago

Big Distributing Organization Expects, in New Home, to be in Closer Touch with Managers—Strong Connection Maintained in New York

THE Mutual Film Corporation closed its chief executive offices in New York on Wednesday, Augut 30, and removed to Chicago, where on Monday, September 4, business was opened as if nothing had happened to interrupt the smooth course of its career. The transfer was effected by express, special baggage cars having been employed, so that but forty-eight hours were required to complete the shift. The records and paraphernalia were quickly placed in offices in the Consumers' Building otherwise all ready to step into.

General Manager James C. Graham, speaking for President John R. Freuler, said to a World man plans had been so laid that the company would in no way be out of touch with the trade in New York. There would be just as much "commuting" between Chicago and New York as heretofore. He said the move had been taken as a result of much deliberation. While in a measure the shifting of the general offices was an experiment, in so far as there was no precedent for it, it was believed from the exchange viewpoint it would be beneficial. It is only a day's run from Chicago to New York or Boston, anyway, and special representatives would be traveling back and forth. The officials of the Mutual will be in closer touch with its managers.

"If the Mutual were more particularly identified with the production side it might be different," said Mr. Graham. "Then, of course, we would have to be in close touch with this market all the time. But we are distributors, and it is from this angle we are viewing the coming change. There may be difficulties arise, but we anticipate nothing that cannot be surmounted. We will be able to give the western half of our business more attention—to meet our men more frequently.

"On the other hand, we will retain a certain representation here. Hopp Hadley, who has the direct placing of much of the publicity matter—posters, photographs, etc—will remain here because the firms with which he has dealings are mostly here. So, too, not only can he keep in touch with things, but he will be able to get quick action for any matters which Terry Ramsaye, our publicity manager, wants put over. The legal department, too, will be represented here."

Terry Ramsaye, who has been with the Mutual since the election of Mr. Freuler to the presidency over fourteen months ago, said he did not know whether he was glad or otherwise to leave New York. While Mr. Ramsaye is a native of Boston he has lived in Chicago more years than he has in New York, and this in spite of the fact that this is his third attempt to be a New Yorker. In response to a question Mr. Ramsaye said there were nearly 1,100 employees of the Mutual in the home office and the sixty-eight branches.

A map of the United States hanging on the wall of Mr. Ramsaye's office was significant in a way of the film center of the country. While the pins placed in the different cities merely indicated the nature of the publicity sent to those points, they also were symptomatic of the bulk of film distribution. According to these the northern two-thirds of the eastern half of the country contained the majority of picture theater patrons. Mr. Ramsave remarked incidentally that much film went out of New Orleans that came back to the Mutual through its New York office. These subjects were those that went to the United States Navy. Another point of shipment was Boston, and these came back through New Orleans.

Speaking about films for the government service Mr. Ramsaye said every fall 150 reels were sent from Portland and Seattle to Alaska for the use of soldiers during the winter. For the theaters several hundred reels were sent in in the autumn and were distributed by dog team. On Mr. Ramsaye's desk lay an interesting letter, just received from the Mutual's El Paso office. It told how a dozen reels had been shipped to General Pershing's forces at Colonia Dublan and said others were to be sent to another point "somewhere in Mexico." Along with the first shipment went two generators. The soldiers were to produce their own "juice."

When Mr. Ramsaye was asked if the removal to Chicago meant the institution of any changes in the general policy of the Mutual he said it did not. The company would continue along the lines recently laid down of featuring stars—of selling to exhibitors the work of popular players rather than of exploiting brands. This action was taken in the belief that patrons of the photoplay go to the theaters chiefly to see the actors and actresses they admire.

High Prices for Good Men

Pathe Engages All-Star Team to Look After New England Territory—Harry C. Drum Pacific Coast Representative.

IN LINE with his conviction that a strong sales organization will assure the success and growth of a company modeled after the plans of Pathe, President J. A. Berst is allowing C. R. Seelye a free rein in securing the most experienced salesmen in the country. Working on the theory that no price is too much to pay for the right return, and that if a man cannot demand a high figure he is not worth bothering with, the aggressive sales manager is mustering all-star teams for every territory.

The most important development of the past week in connection with the circulation of pictures was the engagement of E. J. Farrell to take charge of Pathe's Boston office, which automatically places him in control of the rich New England section. As manager of the General Film in Boston for a number of years past, Mr. Farrell has earned a reputation second to none and his friends number practically all film men of standing in the neighborhood. It is said that a weighty factor in inducing Mr. Farrell to accept the Pathe office in preference to a similar postion for another large organization was the high caliber of the men engaged to support him.

The present line-up for New England, as given to a representative of the Moving Picture World by Mr. Seelye, is without any weak points, judging from the past performances of the men concerned, A. J. Smith, Jr., formerly assistant manager of the New York exchange, is in charge of the Western Massachusetts territory. H. I. Goodman, who for two years has been building up a big business in Connecticut and Rhode Island, will handle those two states, also Eastern Massachusetts in conjunction with J. J. Donnelly. A. Bevan, formery General Film manager at Albany, will be located in Bangor, Me.; while in the Boston office, associated with Mr. Farrell, will be F. J. Cavenaugh, assistant manager; R. C. Kinney, a young Harvard man, who for two years has shown himself to be an excellent salesman, and F. A. Grady, who resigned as manager of the World Boston office, to become manager of Pathe's serial department.

Two other important deals just closed bring H. E. Lotz and Harry C. Drum into the Pathe organization. Mr. Lotz will be remembered, first as one of the foremost exhibitors in Western Canada; next as a special representative for Mutual; then as George Kleine's personal representative. It has not yet been decided what place he will fill with Pathe. Mr. Drum has been a prominent figure in the picture field for a number of years. Prior to the recent reorganization he was assistant general manager of World Film. He has been engaged by Mr. Berst as Pacific Coast representative.

As announced in earlier issues, the exchanges in Chicago, Minneapolis, Cleveland and Indianapolis have been reorganized with a view to getting higher efficiency than has ever been attained in the past. With the betterment of the system of distribution, Pathe is gradually increasing its output and is considering adding to the already impressive list of companies whose product it releases. In April the weekly output was seven and one-half reels a week, whereas by the first of September it will be fifteen reels.

COURT DENIES INJUNCTION TO BRENON.

Justice Mullan, in the New York Supreme Court, has denied the application of Herbert Brenon for a temporary injunction against William Fox restraining him from exhibiting "A Daughter of the Gods," the Kellermann subject, without giving Mr. Brenon credit for the authorship and direction. The judge based his decision on the fact that the engagement of producer by manufacturer was oral and pointed out that the condition of the calendar is such that a speedy trial and determination of the points at issue may be obtained.

Mr. Brenon declares he will spare no money to carry the case to its conclusion. The suit probably will come to trial in about six weeks.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

KANSAS EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

Plans Laid to Fight the Censorship Law—Application for Membership in National League Made.

THE Amusement Association of Kansas was determined to make the Topeka event a demonstration to the state of Kansas of the public favor of Topeka, at least, for pictures; and they succeeded. They put four of the livest wires in the business on the job, publicity men, as follows: George Bowles, Universal; J. L. Scott, V-L-S-E, and secretary of the association; Howard E. Jameyson, Pathe, and L. D. Balsly, Paramount. These fellows "worked their heads off," planning stunts, writing publicity matter and working up enthusiasm. Bowles and Scott spent much time in Topeka in conference with local exhibitors, and Jameyson kept things stirred up, presiding also at the "gate" during the ball. Balsly helped materially both at Kansas City and Topeka, though he was unable to put as much time on it as the others. Lew Nathanson was "first aide" among the Topeka exhibitors, and J. C. Cooper also was a valuable assistant.

The Topeka event was a joint session of the Amusement Association of Kansas and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas, called to plan the fight on the censorship law. All the meetings were held in Representative Hall, in the State House. The first was a general session, Tuesday morning, August 22, when F. J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, Pa., national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, roused the exhibitors with a stirring speech on their opportunity and their duty to the industry and themselves. Tuesday afternoon there was an open session, presided over by Chris E. Glamann, of Wellington, president of the league. E. R. Pearson, chairman of the executive committee of the Amusement Association, was later given the chair and appointed committees for that section.

Wednesday morning the league held an executive session, at which the plans were laid for fighting the law. Mr. Glamann presided, E. W. Green, of Herrington, being secretary. Following another talk by Mr. Herrington, the league voted to send $35 with an application for membership in the National League. The plan for the campaign is given elsewhere. At 1:30 the parade was held from the headquarters at the Hotel Throop to the Orpheum theater, where prizes were given the contestants. A brass band led the parade.

An open session of both organizations was held later in Representative Hall. Mayor House, of Topeka, welcomed the exhibitors, sarcastically condemning the censorship law as futile to change human nature or to have any possible effect on the morals or customs of the people. He said that the law was never intended for anything but a revenue-producing measure; that it never was and never could be an agency for the uplifting of the moving picture business.

J. T. Botkin, Secretary of State, a member of the Appeal Board, declared that he didn't know anything about pictures, and that he saw them only because the state law made him. He suggested that the organizations present ought to be able to do a lot towards improving the character of pictures, though he added that it should work with the Censorship Board, disagreements being sent up to the Appeal Board.

Labor Commissioner McBride answered criticisms of exhibitors in the previous sessions as to inspections for fire hazards—such inspections coming in his department under an agreement with the fire marshal—by saying that they were only doing their duty under the law, and inviting, in a cordial tone, the exhibitors to co-operate in changing any parts of the law they believed defective.

The league held another session Thursday morning, to complete the plans for the campaign. In the afternoon the Amusement Association of Kansas met to adopt resolutions. The subject of Sunday opening in Kansas was taken up, the association deciding to assist in behalf of Sunday opening in such towns where the people wanted seven-day picture shows, even to the extent of securing a change in the state law if necessary, but indicating clearly that under present conditions this was a local and not a state-wide matter.

Mr. Herrington explained the purposes of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, he being a member of the board of directors; indicating that Kansas probably would be given a fund to spend in the fight on the censorship law.

A surprise at the meeting was the presence of Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, president of the Kansas Women's Christian Temperance Union, perhaps the most powerful women's organization in the state. Mrs. Mitchner said that she came of her own volition, wishing really to find out whether there was some substitute for state censorship. She said the moving picture industry was too great and too useful to the people, was too important as an educational influence, for anybody to take a hostile attitude towards it. Her earnest desire, she said, was to find a means of working with the moving picture men to improve the character of pictures; she declared that once in a while was there a vicious picture, but that as far as she could see there was no way to cause the elimination of the bad, promptly, without state censorship, much as she wished to discover some other method.

"The industry has been imposed on in Kansas," she said. "They have charged you too much money for the censorship, and I would be glad to see the fees reduced."

E. R. Pearson hastened to assure Mrs. Mitchner that the moving picture men were going after no half-measures; that they were seeking the entire elimination of state censorship, and would not be satisfied with a mere reduction in the fees charged. Mr. Herrington also answered Mrs. Mitchner, pointing out the futility of state or local censorship, and the logical reference of picture character to the people themselves.

Miss Lizzie Wooster, unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination against W. D. Ross, the present superintendent of public instruction and, as such, head of the censorship board, was present but did not speak. The Rev. Festus Foster, the censor around whom most of the controversies have raged, and Mrs. Foster, were also present, but silent, though they were invited to speak.

Resolutions Adopted.

Resolved, That we thank the following speakers: Mayor House of Topeka, Kansas, Secretary of State, Botkin; F. J. Herrington, National Organizer, M. P. E.; Commissioner of Labor, McBride; Dick Travers, Essanay, and Gene Cauntier.

Resolved, That this Convention assembled, especially thank Mayor House for his open and frank expression against censorship in its entirety.

Resolved, also; That we thank F. J. Herrington and the National M. P. E. L., for his visit and inestimable help at this convention.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that we are entirely and unalterably opposed to every form of legalized censorship of moving pictures, either at the hands of State or Federal officials as unAmerican and an infringement of the rights of free speech and free press vested in the American people since 1776.

To that end we condemn the censor law of Kansas as vicious, confiscatory, the latter in that it costs less than one-fourth of the present fees exacted at this time, and that the members of he A. A. of K. stand pledged as a body and as individuals for a repeal of that law, to which end we pledge the use of our screens to further the political aspirations of those nominees and candidates for State and Federal offices whose study of the question and whose Americanism pledges their conscience and judgment in their official actions in favor of the repeal of the present Kansas censorship law at the next term of the Legislature.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that since there are seemingly many towns whose people desire open moving picture theaters on Sunday in such cities and towns, we are glad indeed to comply with the wishes of the majority, and believe this is a question of local issue, and should not be interfered with by State laws.

The Plan of Action.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Kansas is going about the business of securing the repeal of the censorship law in a practical way. The first step is to find out the attitude towards the censorship and the law, of the candidates for the Senate and the House. Every exhibitor in the state will be expected to get the candidates of his district on record, but the league isn't depending on a general instruction to this effect. Specific exhibitors in each district are being assigned to candidates and to legislators, and they will have to report to the secretary at specified times. The canvass will be handled systematically, so that the exhibitors will know before election which candidates should be supported. And they will support these. After election the canvass will be taken again.

Then the people will be called upon for their help. The patrons will be asked to use their influence with the legislators to secure their support for a repeal measure. The exhibitors will go about this cannily, using only local influences, securing the help of the best people, who will have the most effect on the legislators. The officers of the league and others will present the facts and the arguments to these legislators. And petitions will be distributed among patrons for signature as an additional incentive.

The next meeting of the league would ordinarily be held in October; it has been postponed until January, and will probably be held in Hutchinson or Topeka just before the legislature convenes. Then the final plans for the campaign against the law will be made.

The campaign is in the hands of Chris E. Clamann, of Wellington, president of the league, a man whose standing and wide acquaintance make him a valuable factor. He was formerly vice-president for Kansas of the national league. E. W. Green, of Herrington, is secretary of the league and has been made also state organizer.

The league will work in close co-operation with the Amusement Association of Kansas in the anti-censorship campaign. Several conferences over plans were held by officials of the two in Topeka. At the proper time the A. A. K. will prepare the slides and publicity matter for the exhibitors, and will assist in the fight in numerous ways.

The promise of moving picture stars for the people to see and dance with was the best "card" of the press agents, and undoubtedly got out the big crowds. Richard C. Travers, of Essanay, who always is a great help on such occasions, and Miss Marie Davis, Vitagraph, came down from Chicago. Gene Gauntier is a Kansas City girl, very popular, and she was there. Leota Lorraine and Katherine Bush, Universal, fortunately were able to stop at Kansas City on their way to the coast. And Cleveland Hilson, managing director of the Pageant Film Corporation, brought their star, Miss Ethel Quinn, a Kansas girl, formerly of Neodesha. Mr. Travers and Miss Gauntier led the grand march at the ball. Mr. Travers made a talk at the ball also, and Miss Davis and Miss Bush executed a dance. Every appearance of the actors was greeted with cheers, and the grand march was a succession of cheers as they made their way around the floor.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITORS WAKE UP.

Big Meeting Held at Parkway Building, at Which Seventy Theaters Are Represented.

AFTER remaining in a state of dormancy for many months, members of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Philadelphia have decided to adopt some concentrated method of procedure and at a meeting held in the Parkway Building, Friday, August 25, several matters of the utmost importance to the moving picture industry in this vicinity were thoroughly discussed and a movement set on foot whereby in the future all matters pertaining to the interests of the members be definitely enacted upon and thus the most beneficial results obtained.

When the session was called to order it was discovered that close on to seventy theaters were represented, this being the strongest turnout ever recorded in the history of the League, and giving an added incentive to future endeavors. After disposing of several routine matters, the two questions of the day were immediately taken up, they being those of charging a general admission price and what to do in the present situation created by the ban placed upon children under sixteen years of age due to the present epidemic of infantile paralysis. When it was discovered that official word has been given out that the public schools were not to be opened on the customary date, the exhibitors decided that they were not being imposed upon and that the matter was really one of a very serious nature and that they should take no action along that line, but await results. When the question of a general price of admission was brought up for discussion there arose quite a controversy. Some exhibitors entertained one opinion and others another. However, after viewing the situation from every possible angle, it was decided that a standard price of ten cents should be adopted and every exhibitor present went on record as being in favor of that method of procedure and vowed to maintain such a standard at his theater.

Other matters of great importance transacted during the meeting included the election of officers, the following gentlemen being elected to serve during the ensuing year: President, Morris L. Spiers; first vice president, John O'Donnell; second vice president, Albert Fisher; secretary, Charles Goodwin, and treasurer, H. Green. It was decided to hold another meeting at the same place on Friday, September 1.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF PHILADELPHIA.

At an enthusiastic meeting held in the Parkway Building last Thursday, August 17th, a band of earnest men met to formulate plans for organizing a Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to alleviate the conditions that are throttling the picture theater industry.

The motion picture exhibitor of to-day is waging a losing battle against a host of enemies worse than any business ever before has had to contend with. An unjust censorship, a discriminating quarantine, the low price of admission, the increased cost of films; these and many other conditions are sapping the very life blood from the theater business. These are conditions we must already contend with, but is that the end of the persecution of our business? We don't know. What is to prevent all those people, official and otherwise, who are trying to regulate our business for us—the business in which we have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested—what is to prevent them from further imposing unjust restrictions upon our theaters, the necessity for which exists only in the minds of the "regulators?" Individual protests are futile. Only in concerted action may a remedy be found.

What are you doing to help? We are fighting with our backs to the wall. Not for our individual interests but for the good of the industry. Are you going to join us? Are you going to help us place YOUR business on a profitable basis—a basis of continued prosperity, not one of periods. Or are you going to scoff and sneer because of a previous failure of an exhibitors' league? We don't care if yours is a "Stanley theater" or a small "300 seater." Our fight is a common one.

CINCINNATI CAMPAIGN PROGRESSING.

The campaign inaugurated by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce on behalf of better pictures, with Federal supervision of all releases as the corner-stone of the movement, is in full swing, as the letters now being received from all over the country indicate. One of the most interesting was that which has been received from William A. Brady, president of the World Film Corporation, and the recently-elected head of the Motion Picture Men's Protective Association. Mr. Brady stated definitely that he favors anything designed to better conditions in the moving-picture industry, while Adolph Zukor, the Famous Players magnate, expressed himself as favoring the Hughes-Smith bill, which is the measure backed by the Cincinnati League. When sentiment has been thoroughly sounded out on the subject, a definite move can be formulated.

STUDIO EXTRAS WOULD ORGANIZE.

Hugh Frayne, New York representative of the American Federation of Labor, has been appealed to to organize the men and women known as "extras" at the studios in and around New York City. Louis Stern, who has been working upon the formation of a union, is quoted as saying that the "extra" business, good at one time, is now "shot to pieces." His alleged statement that agents get from the studios for the services of extras sums of $10 a day and of this turn over to the individuals but $1.50, will interest the trade.

The proposed scale will include these provisions: Appearance in dress suit, $5 a day; for doing "bumps," $7.50; in civilian garb, $3.50; in mobs up to fifteen, $5; from fifteen to fifty, $4; from fifty to a hundred, $3, over that number, $2.50; in summer apparel, $5; tramps or gangsters up to fifty, $3, over that number, $2. Every studio is expected to feed its extras when working.

The price demanded for night work is $3.50, the hours to be from 6.30 to 2 A. M. Daylight hours are to be from 8.30 to 5.30. For overtime double pay is asked.

HURST WITH WORLD FILM.

Following nine years of service with Pathe, where for the greater part of the time he was chief auditor, Wilbur F. Hurst has become connected with the World Film organization, as assistant to the auditor. Mr. Hurst is an expert accountant, who through long experience has become thoroughly familiar with the complex financial details on the producing as well as the distributing ends of large motion picture organizations.

Vitagraph Stages Great Battle

Regulars and National Guardsmen are Used in Four-Day Engagement on Staten Island.

WAR as it is being carried on today in Europe was reproduced with startling vividness when the Vitagraph Company staged its military scenes for "The Battle Cry of War" on the North shore of Staten Island on August 18, 19, 20 and 21. The island rocked under the roar of great guns and the sky was ablaze at night with illuminating bombs. Thousands of people turned out to see the spectacle. They beheld trench mortars hurling their explosives into the opposing burrows a few yards away. They gaped at troops, sheltered by curtain fire, hacking their way through barbed wire entanglements to rush the snug, sandbagged trench forts. They marveled at huge howitzers and 42-centimeter cannon and "Black Berthas" in life-size hideousness. They shuddered and retreated in a panic at the gas attacks with their sinister, saffron clouds stealing before the breeze upon the doomed defenders of otherwise impregnable positions. They had a thrill that Broadway so far has missed.

Most of the story part of "The Battle Cry of War" had been filmed at tne studio and at city locations. Plans that long had been maturing brought the work up to the battle scenes. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, who personally produces this big picture, had the co-operation of the 13th Coast Defense Command, N. G. N. Y., and a company of "regulars" from the United States Army. The 550 men of this command went actually into camp near Grasmere, Staten Island, and lived there for two weeks under strict camp conditions. The ordinary mild aspect of the rolling terrain was suddenly changed with pick and spade until it was seamed like the wrinkled face of Mars with trenches and bomb shelters. The trenches were dug, under the direction of Lieut H. W. Bergman. Then commanding positions and ambushes alike were shockingly altered with the long blue-black muzzles of heavy guns towering over them like monuments of destruction. Queer engines, formerly known in this country by hearsay only, lurked in the trenches. Pipe coils and gas masks and steel headgear and hand grenades and parachutes were behind the lines. Observation balloons, aeroplanes and armored cars were close at hand. All these things had been assembled for the big scenes.

Besides the militiamen, who had a battery of 3-inch guns, there were soldiers from Fort Wadsworth and a force of 500 extras in the greater scenes. A daily "gallery" of 3,000 to 5,000 people on hilltops watched the manoeuvers which, extensive as they were, consisted mostly of desperately close fighting. Cheer after cheer rent the smoke and gas burdened atmosphere at victories won.

The biggest day was Saturday, August 19, when the turn of the tide of battle was staged. Besides Commodore Blackton, who directed all the action as a whole, assisted by A Scene in the Trenches.

Director Wm. P. S. Earle, certain details were looked after by others, among them being A. Victor Smith and J. Stuart Blackton, Jr. Chief of the onlookers was Colonel Sydney Grant of the command, who observed the proceedings from the headquarters stand. The soldiery was handled by Captains Johnston, Comstock, Cunningham, Clifford and Meeks, and Lieutenants Austin, Edwards, Patterson, Saunders, Ross, Smith, Alman and Clark. New York fire marshals were on hand in an official capacity. The extremely delicate explosion work was handled by Herman Rottger of Vitagraph, assisted by Dick Peterman, Tommy Fisher, Charles Gardner and Ivor F. Lynn. The Vitagraph players participating in the battle scenes as principals were: Harry Morey, Joseph Kilgour, James Morrison and Walter McGrail.

"Civilization" to State Right Buyers

Ince's Big Spectacle to Be Offered to Exhibitors.—Read and Lorrimore in Charge.

"CIVILIZATION," Thos. H. Ince's million dollar spectacle, which is still running at the Criterion Theater, New York, and filling some of the biggest theaters throughout the country, is now offered to state right buyers. True, certain territorial rights have already been disposed of to zealous buyers who made life miserable for Mr. Ince until he consented to give them a chance to share in the profits to be expected from his great screen success. But they were accidents more than anything else, because it was Mr. Ince's original plan to retain the whole proposition for himself and his associates and thus take the gross profits for the benefit of a few chosen friends.

However, a cold analysis of facts, coupled with pressure brought to bear by enthusiastic buyers, materially altered the initial plans. It was found that many prints would be necessary to accommodate the demand and that an organization would have to be formed to manage it. Then, too, it was pointed out that Mr. Ince's best interest could be guarded by allowing individuals to continue to dominate their own territories rather than for him to enter into direct competition with them where it was not necessary.

At the Thomas H. Ince New York offices in the Times building applications for territory and booking receive prompt attention by J. Parker Read and Alec Lorrimore, who are on the job. To quote a very apt and fitting statement of Mr. Read: "'Civilization' is not simply an investment; it is a gilt-edge security. It is as good as U. S. bonds." To which a well-known Wall Street banker sagaciously adds: "It is the safest proposition ever offered in the motion picture business."

OUR CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. HOMMEL.

The Moving Picture World acknowledges the receipt of a slice of cake from Ludwig Hommel, the supply man of Pittsburgh. It was a reminder of the party Mr. Hommel gave to his friends in celebration of his tenth business birthday. The World takes pleasure in adding its congratulations to the thousands it is sure Mr. Hommel received on the occasion. Also it extends its best wishes for a successful second decade.

Weiss Makes Thousand-Mile Auto Tour.

HARRY WEISS, general manager of the Central Film Corporation, recently made a business trip which extended through the states of Indiana and Kentucky. He informs me that the New Circle theater at Indianapolis, located on the Monument Circle, will be one of the most beautiful houses in the state of Indiana. It will seat over 2,000 people, and an orchestra of thirty-five pieces will furnish interpretative music for the pictures. The house will be opened within the next thirty days. Louisville, Ky., Lafayette and Terra Haute, Ind., were also included in the tour. In all the towns visited Mr. Weiss found a depressed condition of business owing to the heat and local conditions; but expresses the opinion that the outlook after Labor Day looks bright. Judging from the crops and the general condition of the country, he believes Indiana and Kentucky will have one of the best fall and winter seasons they have yet seen in the moving picture business. Mr. Weiss signed up first-run contracts with Bartons & Olson, Indianapolis, and with the Broadway Amusement Co., which owns the Alamo theater, in Louisville, both for one week showings. Four-day showings were signed by the Variety theater, Terre Haute, and the Luna theater, Lafayette. All these theaters look forward to a big fall business. Mr. Weiss' salesforce now includes Phil Dunas, formerly with the Chicago office of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.; Ed. Mordue, recently with the World Film Corporation's Chicago office, and Jack Schwartz and Sidney Goldman, formerly connected with the Central Film Co. Mr. Weiss made his trip of 1,100 miles in his new automobile without mishap.

The Mutual Exchange offices of Chicago have moved from their quarters in the Mallers Building, and at 117 North Dearborn street, to the entire eighteenth floor of the Consumers Building, located at South State and Quincy streets. The office is under the direct supervision of B. N. Judell, who is the western representative of Mutual. The home office of the Mutual Film Corporation will also be housed in the Consumers Building after September 1.

A moral campaign against moving picture and burlesque theaters is now under way in Milwaukee. It is conducted by the Milwaukee County Federation of Catholic Societies. This campaign is the first action resulting from Archbishop Messmer's pastoral letter, which was read in the Catholic churches of the city, Sunday, August 13. It is part of the national movement by Catholic societies to obtain morally clean public amusements.

David Wark Griffith arrived in Chicago Thursday morning, August 24, from Los Angeles, and left on the Twentieth Century the same day for New York City. His great new feature "Intolerance" will be given its initial showing in New York City, September 5, and it has been hinted that the Chicago run will open some time in October at the Colonial theater, where "The Birth of a Nation" made its great run after it was crowded out of the Illinois theater by another booking.

Samuel Katz, of the Amalgamated Theater Corporation, and Barney and A. J. Balaban, of the General Feature Film Co., both of this city, have made arrangements for the building of a first class modern moving picture theater, at 3527-41 West Twelfth street. The theater will be included in a business block which will cost $275,000, including the site. The theater, it is said, will seat 2,800 people, and will be the largest in the city outside of the Loop district.

Miss Mary Pickford recently received a letter from a Canadian soldier, from the trenches in Belgium through the Chicago News.

"It might interest you to know that we have the 'movies' going on right behind the firing line, but so far have not had any films with you," says the correspondent.

"Must close now, as I have to go on sentry duty. Now be sure and drop us a line and I will send you a shell-nose cap and a German gas helmet, and anything in the line of souvenirs you want," the letter concludes.

The correspondent gave his address when writing the letter as "In a dugout, Rat alley, Somewhere in Belgium," and signed it "Calamity Scan (73841), 28th Battalion Scouts, 2d C. E. F."

It is needless to state that Miss Pickford, with her customary courtesy, sent a personal reply to the writer.

Miss Mary Charleson also plays a strong part.

A number of scenes in this production will be filmed in the wall-in, private garden of the Santa Barbara Mission. This garden, it is said, was never before used by a moving picture company. Women are not permitted within it, the sole exception to this ruling being made for Mrs. William McKinley, who visited the garden once.

It was with great regret that William N. Selig received the news of the passing of Sam Dade Drane, who died of pneumonia at the German Hospital, New York City, on August 15. Drane played the character role of Abraham Lincoln in "The Crisis," soon to be released. He is said to have presented the most life-like characterization of Lincoln ever seen on the screen. "His characterization of Lincoln is wonderful," says Mr. Selig. "Many historical characters are burlesqued rather than convincingly portrayed. This cannot be said of Drane's work. Not one of the Lincoln characteristics is lost and the likeness is perfect. The portrayal is so unusual that close-ups of Abraham Lincoln are used. It is, indeed, to be regretted that Drane will never see the completed production of 'The Crisis' in which he figured so largely and so excellently. His conception of Abraham Lincoln may never be surpassed and will probably stand alone as the greatest Lincoln of the screen."

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, was seen recently regarding the many rumors that have been circulated concerning future plans of the Selig Company. Mr. Selig stated that no attention whatsoever should be paid to the rumors and conjectures so frequently circulated in connection with the film industry. He also stated that any important information regarding any contemplated action of the Selig Company will be given out authoritatively when the occasion requires it, and that credence should not be given visionary stories sent out to daily newspapers by some enterprising space writer in New York City.

I have just had a letter from Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, from Split Rock camp in the Adirondacks, with some interesting news concerning her work in the writing of feature photoplays. Miss Heikes Justice announces that she had just completed ten feature photoplays before proceeding to her present quarters for a summer rest. Among these is "Youth's Endearing Charm," which was written around Mary Miles Minter, who is now starring under the banner of the American Film Co., Inc., with headquarters at Santa Barbara.

This photoplay, she states, was not adapted from any of her fiction stories, but was written specially to fit the personality and the dramatic possibilities of Miss Minter after she had met and learned to know her and her charming personality.

The following letter, bearing date of July 10, quite characteristic of charming little Mary, has been forwarded me by Miss Justice:

My dearest, sweetest Miss Justice:

Can you possibly forgive me—me, most miserable non-writer—for not answering you at once.

But surely you will understand when I tell you we have worked day and night on the perfectly angelic "Youth's Endearing Charm."

'Tis the pitifulest, goodest, darlingest cherub of a story I have ever known.

We received photograph of your absolutely beautiful self and apple trees today. It shall be hung in a frame of gold—as becomes the sender. Please, I do most positively implore thee, write me another "Youth's Endearing Charm" on the style of "Peg o' Me Heart." I never had such dear things to do in my life. Look funny (oh, my!) in pig-tails! Am sure it will go fine.

Ten thousand blessings on my own Miss Justice's brains. Most sincerely, etc.

Miss Heikes Justice states in her letter that "The End of the Trail" (Fox), a feature in which William Farnum takes the leading role, and which was released August 26, was written by her. She is also under contract with the Vitagraph Company for several features, of which they now have three on hand.

Our Censorship Liberal, Declares Dane

European Variety Far More Stringent, Says Benjamin Christie, Producer and Player.

THAT American censorship is liberal compared to that exercised in Europe is the opinion of Benjamin Christie, the noted Danish actor and producer, whose most recent picture, produced for the Dansk Biograf Company of Copenhagen, of which he is general manager, is soon to be shown at a private exhibition in a Broadway theater. In this picture, entitled "Blind Justice," Mr. Christie enacts the star part, wrote the scenario, and did the directing.

Since arriving in this country Mr. Christie, who is familiar, from personal observation, with every phase of the industry in Europe, has devoted his time to studying American methods of production. He has made it a rule to see at least five features a day and has reached the interesting conclusion that American manufacturers are allowed far more latitude by the censors than is the case in Europe.

"In Germany the censorship is so strict that not even a decollete gown or a night robe is allowed to be shown on the screen. As for a scene depicting an artist's model, such as I have frequently seen upon the American screen, such a thing would not for a moment be allowed. Russia is entirely different, however. There the demand is for the most radical pictures possible. They don't want happy endings. Like Russian literature, the picture plays that please Russians are gloomy tragedies. They like blood and plenty of it, with poison, knives and other highly spiced ingredients thrown in.

"France is not quite so strict as Germany; but even there as in England the censorship bonds are drawn far tighter than in America. A curious feature of picture shows in Germany is the fact that an actor from one of the minor theaters is engaged by the better class of picture houses to supplement the sub-titles of a feature by long explanatory recitations, which some times string out the length of a picture for a whole evening.

"Business in European pictures has not slackened since the war. In fact in France and Germany it is better than ever in those theaters which I visited. In Russia, however, all the studios are closed and there is no picture-making being done. This is partly due to the war and partly to the fact that the more prominent Russian actresses refuse to work in the studio except from three to four o'clock in the afternoon. Our hours in Denmark are from nine in the morning till three in the afternoon. I understand that over here you are much more strenuous."

New Company for Jacksonville

Prominent Residents of Florida City Organize Southeastern Film Corporation With Capital of $300,000.

THE Southeastern Film Corporation has been incorporated in Jacksonville, Fla., under the laws of Florida, with a capital stock of $300,000. It numbers among its officers and directors prominent business men of Florida and also well known motion picture men. The Southeastern will be affiliated with the Garrick Studios Company, of which Richard Garrick, formerly supervising director of Gaumont productions, is the president. The purpose of the organization is to produce and release pictures and conduct a string of motion picture theaters in Alabama, Georgia and Florida.

Numbered among the directors are J. E. T. Bowden, mayor of Jacksonville; Forrest Lake, president of the Seminole County Bank; W. S. Hilands, president of the Florida Soft Phosphate and Lime Company, of New York; J. R. Collins, treasurer of the Florida Abstract and Title Insurance Company; John T. Alsop, Jr., president of the Jacksonville City Council; W. R. Carter, editor of the Florida Metropolis; W. L. Whitehead, owner of a string of theaters, and Judge H. B. Phillips, county judge of Duval County.

The Garrick Studios Company will operate a studio capable of taking care of twelve companies at the same time, and every facility available will be secured for the use of those using the plant. On account of Jacksonvile being only twenty-seven hours from New York it is believed a number of companies now sent to the West Coast annually will be sent South, which will result in a great saving in time and money to the producers. Mr. Garrick has already received communications from a number of the larger producers in New York and Chicago, advising him that they will take advantage of this opportunity to secure the use of a studio without having to undergo the great expense of building. The managers of the Vim, Kalem, Gaumont, Thanhouser, Eagle, Palm and United States studios in Jacksonville are stated to have commented favorably upon the movement.

CARL LAEMMLE ARRIVES AT THE COAST.

President of Universal Pleased With Many Improvements at Big Picture Plant—Entertains Candidate Hughes at Universal City.

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Co., arrived at Los Angeles, Thursday, August 17. The head of the big motion picture concern had not seen his plant since last December and was greatly pleased at the new stages and the other improvements that have been made during the past seven months under the direction of H. O. Davis, vice-president and general manager.

Mr. Davis, who has been spending the past month in New York, upon important business of the Pacific Coast studios of the company, returned to Universal City with President Laemmle and held a levee with the directors to the thirty-eight companies now operating there.

On Saturday morning we motored out to Universal City and had the pleasure of a little chat with Mr. Laemmle. We found him on one of the big stages, surrounded by directors, players and publicity men.

Carl Laemmle Welcoming Justice Hughes.

The little big chief greeted us with a sunny smile: "Yes, I am back again. I like it out here and think I will take a vacation for a month or so. Some place we have now. Isn't it? Universal City has grown so much since I was out here last time in December that I can hardly recognize it. Just think of it, thirty-eight companies now working here and all these big new stages. It will take me all of a month to inspect the plant and get acquainted with all the new people."

Later in the day we had lunch at the Universal restaurant. The food there tasted mighty good to a tired and hungry "World" representative. When we were fed and rested we said Mr. Laemmle goodbye and with a load of friends from the big "U" plant, we returned to the city.

On Sunday afternoon Charles E. Hughes, Republican candidate for President of the United States, paid a visit to Universal City. Judge Hughes was accompanied by Mrs. Hughes, Francis V. Keesling, chairman of the state Republican Central Committee; William C. Crocker, Republican national committee man; John M. Mitchell, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; Chief of Police Snively and a large party of newspapermen. The party had spent the morning in Pasadena and motored from there to Universal City. It was a flying trip, led by Chief of Police Snively, who set the pace of a speed of forty miles an hour.

The party was greeted at the entrance of Universal City by the "Liberty" company, fifty members, all mounted on horseback. This imposing cavalade conveyed the distinguished visitors to the administration building, where they were welcomed by Mr. Laemmle and General Manager H. O. Davis. A short sight-seeing trip was made through the plant and Judge Hughes seemed to be much impressed by the magnitude of the film city. He commented upon the wonderful progress of the industry in the last few years, and complimented Mr. Laemmle on having such a magnificent plant. After a few hundred feet had been "shot' for the Animated Weekly, the party continued their journey to Long Beach, where Mr. Hughes was scheduled to speak in the evening.

PLAN TO UNIONIZE STUDIO LABOR.

Labor Agitators Try to Tie Up Motion Picture Industry of Los Angeles.

According to the Los Angeles "Times," efforts are being made by union labor agitators to unionize the film industry in Los Angeles. The union organizers have planned to make their work so far-reaching that no supplies would be handled at the studios that had been secured through open shop concerns. Jim Gray, a union labor agitator, at the last meeting of the Central Council of Labor, made the announcement that the time was ripe for a new move for motion picture industry. He declared unionites have been making a general canvass of all the film concerns, have ascertained just what wages are paid to the workers in the various departments, the number of men and women employed, and how many union people there are in this number, who can act as a leaven to help carry out the proposed plans of the union.

He stated Samuel Gompers has also pledged his personal work in the East to bring such pressure as is possible to bear upon the eastern capital used in the work here to force its holders to ask that unions be recognized in the Los Angeles picture-making industry. It was stated the threat of boycott by 2,000,000 people, including union men and women of the United States, and those persons directly dependent upon them, will be used to try to enforce the union demands.

The present movement of the union labor agitators is to organize only the artisans. The "Times" says there are only ninety-three union men and women in the regular staffs of the various companies. Workmen in the studios are employed on their merit only, and members of the Film Producers Association have emphatically affirmed their intention of continuing to operate open shop plants.

WORLD MAN RETURNS FROM SANTA BARBARA.

News of American Studio—Exhibitors Report Business Good —Sequel to "Diamond from Sky" to Be Started.

WHILE in the Flying "A" City I managed to meet every exhibitor, and up there they are doing nicely with various programs and open bookings. The largest organization is the Portola Theater Company, which operates the Mission and Portola houses. A. D. Williams is manager of the former house, which is located at 618 State street. It seats 1,200 persons and is a modern theater running the Triangle program. Mr. Williams has been here for the past two years. He uses three Power 6-A machines and likes them. Music is by an orchestra. Across the street and up toward the business district is the Portola, at 723 State street, with W. K. Merrill as the manager, who has been there nearly three years. Here two Edison machines are used. They play a regular vaudevile circuit and the open market for films. Business is fair, but is on the upward trend. Music is by an orchestra. E. Stevens is the president of the company and J. Trussell is the secretary. In each theater I was pleased, but not surprised, to find a file of the World. They said they could hardly do business without the paper.

On this main street is the Argus theater, which has a seating capacity of 494, and is run by H. K. Marble, who has been in charge for the past three years. He now runs Paramount, which he swears by, and says business is improving with this bill. For music he has a small orchestra.

The largest house in Santa Barbara is the old legitimate one, the Potter, which runs film plays during the summer and road shows in winter. We met H. Callis, the manager, who is now in his sixth year as head of the theater. This house has 1,200 seats. It is equipped by Powers, and uses a big orchestra for music. The prices vary to suit the attraction, for pictures from ten cents up. At the time of my visit Mr. Callis was lining them up with V-L-S-E's "God's Country." In October this house will return to the legitimate. In its first year it played only pictures, then changed over, and since has been playing alternately pictures and road shows.

This finished my nightly visits to the theaters of Santa Barbara. Back "on the lot" Bill Russell was trying to do some big scenes for his feature picture, so I drifted across the big new stage and met Edwin D. McKiernan, who is the official host at the studio. He very kindly took me about the place. Onc of the good departments here is the art reproduction room, where A. W. MacRae holds forth with his brush and pallette. Paintings of every description are here reproduced for the screen, and the artist is one who has had experience, having at one time taught in the Art Institute of Chicago and other private schools. He is a member of the Royal Water Color Society of Edinburgh, Scotland. He has been operating this department for the present year.

We visited the comedy factory where Al Santell locks himself in his office and pummels a typing machine for hours at a time. But Al opened the door on my visiting day and welcomed The World. He even opened up a keg of stogies and we all listened to stories of the studio. We snapped the editor of the comedy department here as he was finishing up a feature comedy for Kolb and Dill to put on.

Al. Santell.

Santell has for some time been head of the comedy department, having come here from the Keystone. He did all the Beauty comedies before the American stopped producing one and two-reelers.

While we were there Anthony W. Coldeway, one of the scripters, experienced the recurrence of a birthday, something chronic, it was explained, so he was feted at Bill Parker's home.

Another night Eugenie Forde gave a weinie bake down on the moonkist beach for a large number of her friends from within and without the studio. If you ever come west be sure to try a weinie bake some time. It's great!

On Saturday evening the Owls' Club, which is composed mostly of studio Bohemians, motored and entrained to, for, and from Los Angeles and Santa Barbara for the week-end and all had a great time. To show the studio spirit that prevails, here Manager P. G. Lynch donated one of the large company automobiles for use of the players in going down to the city.

Before leaving the hospitality of the Santa Barbarans, Tom Chatterton, who so cleverly played the lead in "The Secret of the Submarine," forced us to come over to his house and remain until Monday, when we intended to come home on Friday. We went and it certainly was worth while. Tom is a regular entertainer and the time he showed us was indeed appreciated. He drove out to the ranch of a friend of his named Bill Main, way out in the mountains, where we ate lima beans and big hunks of fresh bread, right at the table with the hardy ranch hands. We even got to pick some eggs from off the hay in the barn, and incidentally got a flea on the ankle which still reminds of the trip. Tom staged a big barbecue, cooked eats out in the open in a back yard, with plenty of enchilades, and eatables, and so on. Anyway Tom entertained right. When he drove our baggage and us down to the train it was sadly that we took leave of the city where Flying "A" holds forth. Till we meet again Bill Russell, Tom Chatterton and all you real Americans.

BRUNO LESSING GOES EAST.

Writer Spends Summer on Coast. Sees Some Funny Things in Studios.

Rudolph Block, editor of the comic supplement of the Hearst newspapers, but better known as Bruno Lessing, the author, has left for New York, after a long stay on the coast.

Mr. Block wrote some humorous scenarios for the Vitagraph Co. last year, but, being dissatisfied, like most writers, with the way his scenarios were produced, undertook to master the art of producing for himself so as to find out where the trouble lay. He says he has found that his experience as a writer of fiction is not of much help in scenario writing. In fact, he thinks, it often retards because of the waste of time and effort in attempting to introduce literary style, which is the natural instinct of a writer. But Mr. Block's work as the creator and director of the many comic series that he has been identified with for twenty years, is so analagous to moving picture work that he intends to take up the production of humorous scenarios as a regular part of his work.

Bruno Lessing.

In discussing his experiences among the Los Angeles studios, Mr. Block said:

"The general complaint seems to be that the level of production is not rising, that the same things are being done over and over again and that the supply of material adapted to moving pictures is getting lower and lower. In the East I had heard this from intelligent producers, but in California, where, probably owing to its being the center of the producing industry, the people are more in touch with its activities, the same complaint is heard from the public and the proprietors of theaters. Inasmuch as the whole business of producing has, thus far, been in the hands of directors it seems to me that if you are going to remedy this defect you will have to look elsewhere than to directors for the means.

"Thus far, I am afraid, the scenario writer has been subordinated in this game, yet, unless the future improvement of moving picture production comes from him I do not see where else it will come from. I have visited a great many studios and have worked in some. I have followed the script of a scenario to its completion. In every case the finished picture was the work of the director; in every case was he compelled to depart from the written scenario and inject into it his mechanics, his humor and his tragedy. If it is successful he deserves the credit and not the author. But you can readily see that he cannot rise above his own level and if, today, there is complaint that the output is not improving, he cannot improve it.

"The remedy, I am sure, will lie in developing scenario writers who can really write, not a sketch or a synopsis, or that mechanical rigmarole which they call a "continuity," but a pantomimic play which is so obviously and completely adapted to the screen that it acts itself. If the scenes have to be numbered and catalogued—an office boy can attend to it. To produce this result two things are required. First, the writer must acquire all the knowledge of technique, of the camera—its limitations and its tricks—of effective grouping and coloring and of the possibilities and limitations of his cast, which the director is supposed to possess and which can only be obtained from actual work in a studio. Second, he must be able to think and create, not in words, but in pictures. If I ever produce pictures myself, I shall surely train every writer in whose ability I have confidence in practical studio work and let him produce his own scenarios. He will make mistakes and profit by them and the economy of efficiency that will result will compensate for the expense of his blunders. I know a case where a moving picture organization trained a salesman and a cameraman how to direct a scenario. They wasted several thousand feet of film but they gained experience. Now they are clamoring for scenarios to produce. Wouldn't it have been more intelligent to train two writers of scenarios themselves?

"I am interested in comedies more than anything else. The whole object of my work out here has been to learn how to produce a scenario for myself. The Keystone, Lasky, Fox, Universal and other studios have been wonderfully kind in granting me every facility. I think the trouble with the production of comedies lies more in a dearth of proper material than it does in a lack of actors. It is true that there is but one Chaplin, but I wonder how many people have noticed the steady improvement in the story and plot and construction of his comedies which were unquestionably necessary to keep him in vogue.

Most of the efforts in comedy production seem to be directed to copying the mannerisms and acrobatics of Chaplin or the slap-stick and swift action of the Keystone comedies, without the faintest attempt to create a playlet that would be humorous in its plot and its situations.

"The Bruno Lessing comedies? Well, they're going to wait a while. If they are not good they're not going to be produced. There's no hurry about production; the time spent in learning and gathering experience is not wasted. Art is long and time isn't quite as fleeting as it's cracked up to be. At some time or other and somehow or other and sooner or later, I'm going to try the experiment of producing moving picture comedies something after the fashion of the old English dramatic comedies, such as "She Stoops to Conquer," "The Rivals," etc., in which an interesting plot, clean-cut comedy and good photography will play a more important part than the prestige of a star, the reputation of the author or the cost of production."

PATHE LEHRMAN TO OPEN STUDIO.

Henry (Pathe) Lehrman has returned from New York, where he has been for the past several weeks, making arrangements, it is said, for the formation of a new comedy company, with himself at the head. He already has three or four well-known comedians under contract, and he will shortly build a studio of his own and commence the production of his distinctive style of comedies.

Mr, Lehrman has a contract with the L-Ko Company to make a five-reel feature comedy, which will probably take about three or four weeks to finish. When that picture is completed he will move to his own studio, which he expects to have in readiness by that time, and commence making feature pictures exclusively.

Mr. Lehrman has for a long time wanted to produce only feature comedies that would be out of the ordinary. He now has a release and is otherwise well equipped to go ahead with his ideas.

So far he has not announced the location of his new comedy factory.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

E. J. Chatkin, vice-president of Levy, Chatkin & Feldstein, with offices at 17 North Wabash avenue, Chicago, paid a visit this week to the Los Angeles office of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Chatkin, who by the way is an old friend of ours from the early days in Chicago, is staying in our city for a week, accompanied by M. A. Levy, president of the firm, to open a branch office, which will be located at 223 Marsh-Strong building.

Levy, Chatkin & Feldstein buy feature films on the open market and distribute them through their own film exchanges, United Film Service, with branch offices in St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Portland.

On Saturday of this week Messrs. Chatkin and Levy held a private exhibition at the offices of J. Slipper, 728 Olive street. One hundred and nine, fifty-word night letters had been sent exhibitors in Los Angeles and vicinity, inviting them to see "The Yellow Menace," the new sixteen episode serial produced by the Serial Film Company, Inc. This feature is controlled by Levy, Chatkin & Feldstein, in the states of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Nevada, California, Oregon and Washington. More than fifty Los Angeles exhibitors attended the exhibition, which Mr. Chatkin stated was very successful.

Messrs. Levy and Chatkin expect to go from here to Seattle and Portland for a brief visit, then return to Chicago.

Irving M. Lesser, formerly manager of a San Francisco office of the All Star feature distributors and a brother of Sol Lesser, has been placed in charge of their Los Angeles office at 514 West 8th street.

We are informed that the Nevada Film Company are going to make a trip to Central and South America to take scenes for a coming feature film production. Several prominent photoplayers, we are informed, have recently signed up with the Nevada Film Company, including Tyrone Power, Juanita Hansen, Hal Cooley and Marie McKeen, who recently was starred by the Monrovia Feature Film Company in "The Daughter of the Don." The company expects to leave in the first part of September.

Negotiations are under way, we are informed, by local representatives of the Emerald Film Company of Chicago, for the leasing of the Pacific Laboratories' studios on Santa Monica Boulevard. Fred J. Ireland is the manager. The Emerald Company was recently formed in Chicago for the purpose of producing feature dramas and two reel comedies. It is announced by Mr. Ireland that he has signed Dolores Cassinelli, formerly leading woman for Francis X. Bushman, and later with J. Warren Kerrigan, to play vampire roles.

If the Emerald Company is successful in securing a studio, the companies will be sent to Los Angeles at once, it is stated. The Pacific Laboratories' studio is being vacated by the Rolin Comedy Company, which is removing to the company's new location on the hill at Court street.

Under the direction of William C. Dowlan, Richard Bennett and players started on what will probably prove the most stupendous and spectacular production ever undertaken by the American. The story was written by Anthony Coldewey and will be issued as "The Lawmaker." While the theme will be modern in every respect, the idea will be to show phases of legal punishment from barbaric to present day. This will, however, be touched upon in a most delicate way and there is to be nothing objectionable. It will not be less than seven reels. Mr. Dowlan's work as director here has been a bit varied, but he has already demonstrated his ability to undertake big things. He first directed Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm," and then Franklin Ritchie and Helene Rosson in "The Light," just completed.

At the same time comes a number of changes among directors. Edward Sloman goes to the William Russell Company and his first work there will be on the sequel to "The Diamond from the Sky," the working script for which is being prepared by C. B. (Pop) Hoadley.

Rhea Berger, who has been directing Kolb and Dill, goes to the Winifred Greenwood Company, and it is understood that a new director will arrive this week to work with Kolb and Dill on their next comedy, "Peck of Pickes."

James Kirkwood is directing Mary Miles Minter in a new and elaborate picture.

Harry L. Naco, former manager of the Arizona theater, has left that house and will go over to the Lamara, taking half interest in that theater. Manager Barncord, of the Lamara, will leave for Flagstaff, where he will open a new theater. Captain Piermont Minor, owner of the Arizona, will become its manager.

Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., this week visited the Keystone-Sennett Studios.

Mrs. Vanderbilt and her friends are passing the season at Del Monte. It is a notable fact that she is quite a film fan, and is a frequenter of the motion picture theaters showing screen comedies.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's friends, knowing that it was her hope to some day see a real comedy thrill made, took the matter up with Mack Sennett, director-general of the Keystone, and the visit was arranged. Mrs. Vanderbilt and her party came down from Del Monte especially for the purpose of going through the home of the famous comedies.

On the visit to the studio she became greatly interested in the taking of a picture in which Fred Mace and Harry Gribbon are being featured. One of the scenes shows a thrilling fire which invades the interior of a house. So that the party could witness the action of the picture from a "close-up" position, chairs were arranged for them near the camera.

Through error an over-charge of powder was touched off, creating a fire that momentarily threatened the entire studio, and Mrs. Vanderbilt and her friends were thoroughly drenched before they could get out of the way.

The Los Angeles Press Club is planning its annual barbecue and the secretary, H. J. Wambold, says to many photoplay stars and exhibitors who are members:

The barbecue feature will be double-barreled. A Beefsteak Banquet will be served at noon; a Spanish Feast in the evening. Some of the leading California orators in public life—such men as Willis Booth and Tom Woolwine and a half-dozen others—will address you. There will be music, games, special events of startling originality. It will be a big, merry stag—not souse—party, one which will leave a pleasant memory for another year.

Mrs. J. Sahr, of 1544 Seventh street, Santa Monica, who drives a team of dogs in motion pictures, had her left leg broken late yesterday afternoon when the team of canines ran away as she was driving at Eighth street and Pennsylvania avenue.

She was driven to St. Catherine's Hospital and treated by Dr. J. P. Nuttall. Mrs. Sahr is a familiar figure on the street here with her unique little wagon and dog team.

She appeared in "God's Country" by Vitagraph.

Brady Hurt in Motor Accident

President of the World Film Corporation Recovers from Bruises in Jersey Hospital.

WILLIAM A. BRADY, president of the World Film Corporation and theatrical producer, was bruised, but not seriously injured in an automobile accident that occurred on the night of August 26 at the beginning of a trip from Plainfield, N. J. to Wilmington, Del., after a trial performance of a new play by Jules Eckert Goodman. Mr. Goodman, author of the play and John Turk, Mr. Brady's business manager, were the other members of the party. They were hurled from the car with Mr. Brady when the rear axle broke and the wheel came off. At the Muhlenberg Hospital, Plainfield, where the three men were taken, it was stated that all would recover from bruises in a few days. It is expected that Mr. Brady will remain quietly at his home for a short time after his removal from Plainfield, and that he will be back at his desk in the World Film office in about a week.

Comedies for Paramount

Klassic Pictures, Inc., and United States Motion Picture Corporation Will Make Them.

CONTRACTS were signed last Friday by Paramount with two comedy producing companies for single reel comedies to be released weekly by the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The producing companies are the Klassic Pictures, Inc., producing the Klassic Komedies and the United States Motion Picture Corporation, producing the Black Diamond Comedies. The first release will be issued September 25.

The addition of comedies to the single reel releases of Paramount Pictures Corporation rounds out their service in a most excellent manner, as they are already releasing in connection with their four, five and six reel features, produced by the Famous Players Film Company, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, and Pallas Pictures, three single reel features each week, the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures and the Paramount Bray cartoons.

Al. Christie an Independent Producer

Long Time Comedy Producer Will Release One Single a Week and Two Doubles a Month.

AL E. CHRISTIE announces the organization of the Christie Film Company and the particulars of the first three productions of the new company. Mr. Christie, who for some time past has been in New York City, returned to Los Angeles on Saturday, August 26. His company will be represented here by F. J. Hawkins, with offices in the Longacre Building, 42d street and Broadway.

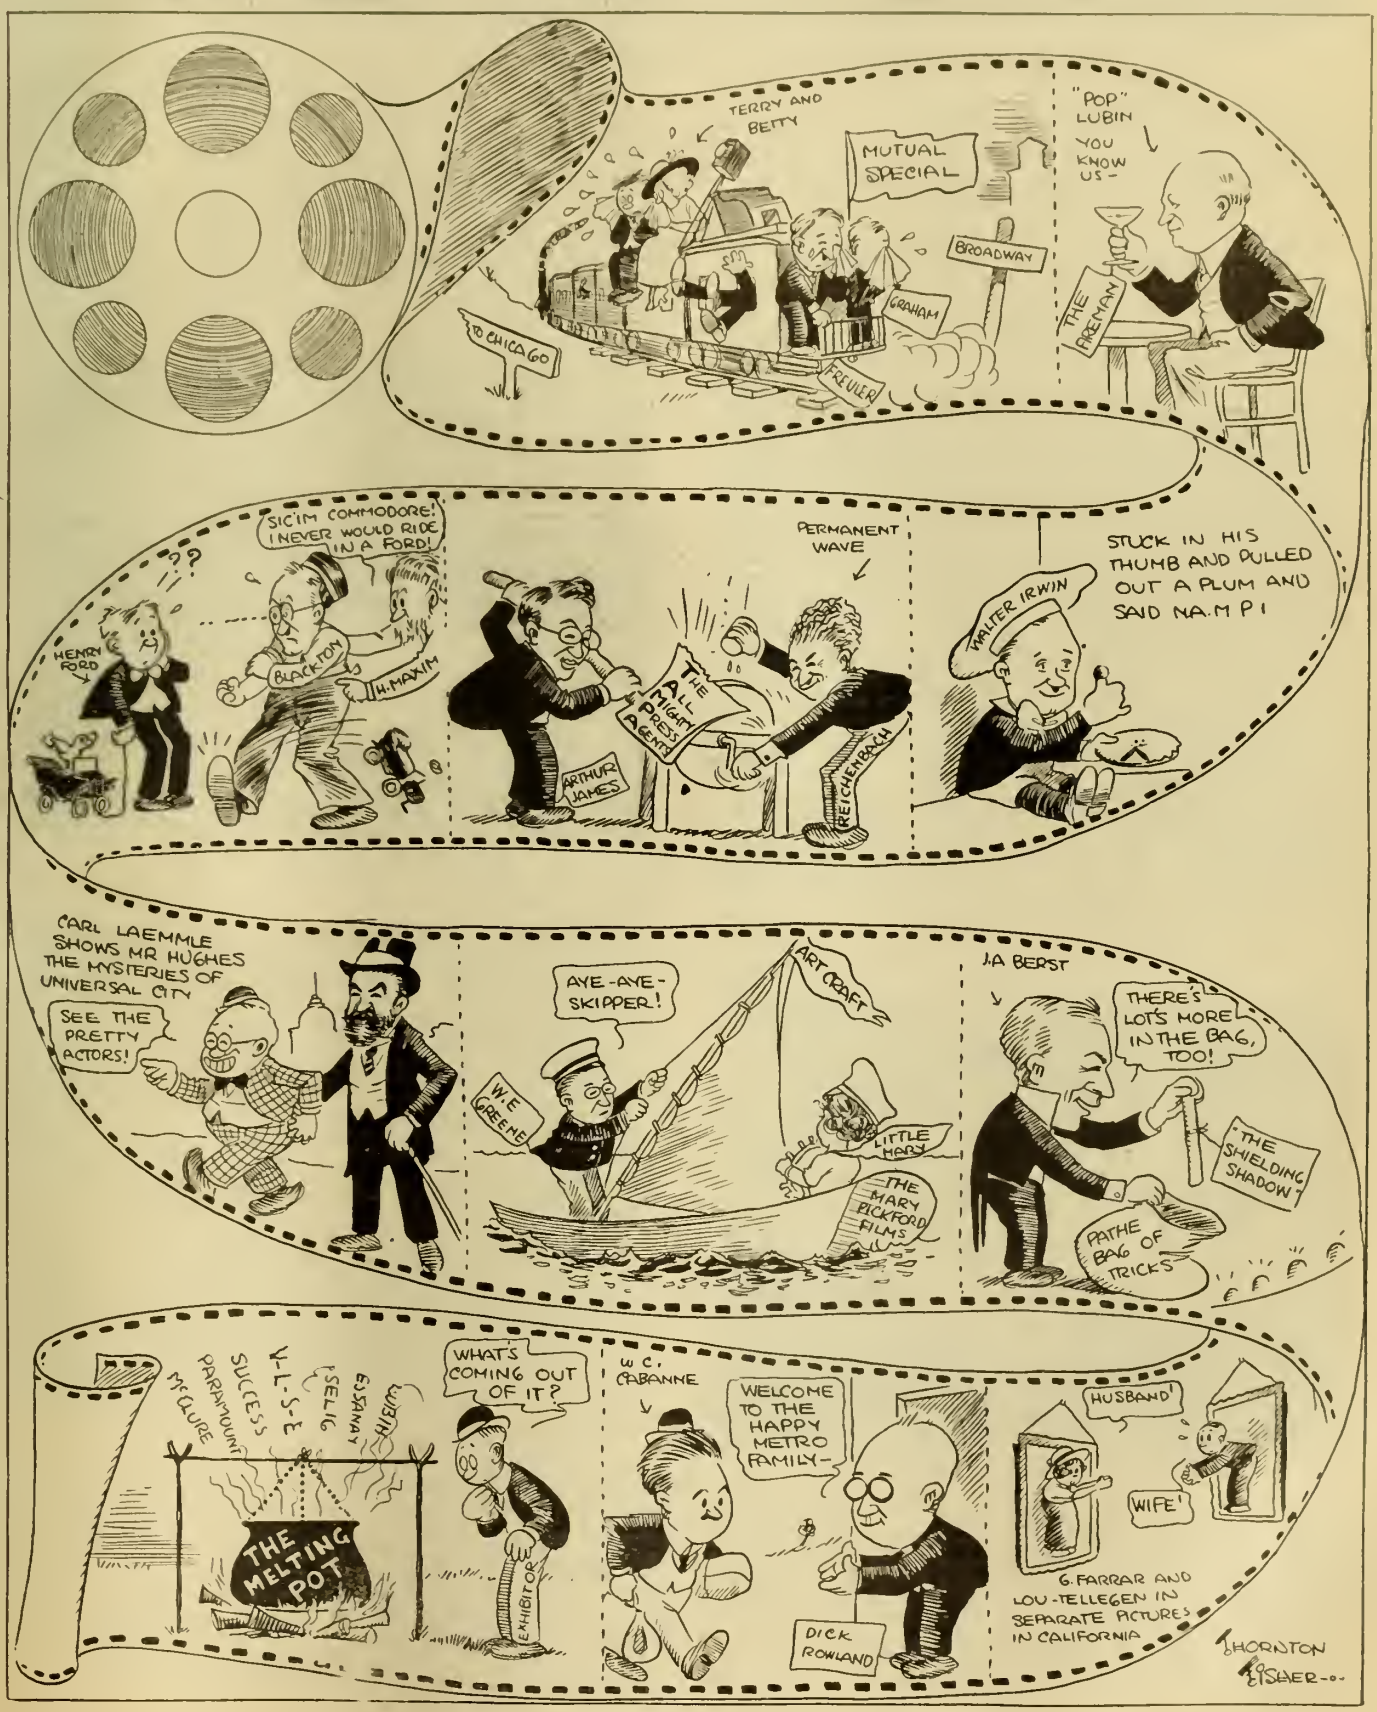
Al. E. Christie.

The chief office and studio is situated at Sunset Boulevard and Gower street, Hollywood, Los Angeles.

Mr. Christie says he is going to produce clean, bright comedies right up to his old standard—and that is one well known to exhibitors. Mr. Christie has been making Nestors for five years; in fact, for continuous production of one brand he comes pretty close to holding a record. It is probable that he does. He will make one one-reel subject each week. The release of these in the open market through independent exchanges will begin September 18. About November 1 Mr. Christie will inaugurate two-part specials, of which two each month will be issued. He says he is going to give his personal supervision to all the work in his studio.

The first three subjects of the Christie company are "A Seminary Scandal," "His Baby," and "By the Sad Sea Waves." The first and the third feature Billie Rhodes, Stella Adams, Eddie Barry and Harry Ham. In "His Baby" will be seen Betty Compson, Neal Burns, Ethel Lynne and Harry Rathenberry. Others in the company, and all of whom have before played under Mr. Christie's direction, are Gus Alexander, Nolan Leary and Dave Morris.

Mr. Christie has produced upward of 400 comedies in the five years he was associated with the Nestor brand. He began work in the Nestor company before its amalgamation with the Universal, when it was owned by David Horsley. Mr. Christie, for Mr. Horsley, opened the first motion picture studio in Hollywood. His first picture-making work was with the Nestor, and he began at the bottom—in the stage department. His experience has been most complete, but he had not long been a member of the company before he was directing. That was in the days of primitive comedy, but he has kept pace with the demands of the public and the exhibitors. Mr. Christie's thousands of friends in the trade will wish him success as an independent producer; and it is safe to say they will feel sure he will attain it.



PARAMOUNT PROGRAM.

SOMETHING new, something more attractive and something more interesting is being added week after week upon the Paramount Program. For the week of September 11 the two chief features on the program will be the Famous Players production, "The Reward of Patience," in which Louise Huff will be starred, and the Morosco production, "The House of Lies," in which Edna Goodrich is featured.

Surrounding the big features are Paramount single reel features, the 31st edition of the Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen; Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, "Glimpses of English Town and Country," and the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon. "Col. Heeza Liar's Bachelor Quarters."

The Paramount Pictographs have a variety of interesting subjects in their 31st edition, in which they show how "Better Pigs" are raised; how to "Keep Well Babies Well;" how 1,200 boys have been gathered together to be taught by military standards, self control, obedience, self reliance and other necessary qualities, and also the microscopic "wonder picture" showing the horrible microbes that are contained in the water people drink.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL FOR AUGUST

"The Usurer's Due"

Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay Which Glorifies the Sentimental Crook. Written by Kenyon T. Nolan and Directed by Paul Powell.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Sentimental Crook is having his innings these days, and is rapidly crowding the Virtuous Hero from his once proud and impregnable position in the center of the stage. The novel, the footlights, and the screen are all exploiting him. Vaudeville had him as a recruit a season or so back, placed there by Edward Clark and Junie McCree; George M. Cohan attempted to achieve his most ambitious bit of playwriting in his dramatization of Frank L. Packard's novel, "The Miracle Man," which overflowed with sanctimoniously sentimental thieves; the recently produced "Turn to the Right," of Winchell Smith and Jack Hazzard, has a pair of these engaging rascals, and now comes Kenyon T. Nolan, and throws upon the screen a gang leader who befriends beauty in distress, saves her from being driven from her home by a loan shark, and is rewarded with the hand of the lady in the last reel.

The vaudeville sketch, "Turn to the Right," and "The Usurer's Due," have another bond in common; the big moment of all three plots is where the now virtuous crook turns his professional skill to good account by relieving the villain of his ill-gotten gain and bestowing it upon the persecuted heroine. The element of poetic justice in such a piece of sleight-of-hand loses none of its force through the brand of humor injected into the situation. A little humor is a pleasant thing, and a satisfied chuckle becomes the irresistible accompaniment of the spectator's hearty applause when he beholds such a scene. Let us have the reformed gangster of mimic life, but thrice hearty his welcome if his return to rectitude be the signal for moral reflection—mixed with innocent mirth!

The author of "The Usurer's Due" has selected his material with a keen eye to winning sympathy for his hero-criminal. When his heroine, a young widow, cannot pay a loan shark a judgment of $125, the leader of a bad gang, who has taken refuge in her house, solves the difficulty for her by borrowing the money from a friend, paying the judgment, securing the note, stealing the money back from the loan shark, and returning it to the friend. There can be no reasonable objection to chasing the devil around a stump, when the devil happens to be a loan shark. Sentimental Crooks who perform such feats, will never lack for approbation.

It only remains to add that director Powell has discharged his duties with credit, and that the same may be written of L. C. Shumway, Velma Whitman, George Routh, Melvin Mayo, and Robert Gray, members of the cast.

Harry Beaumont in "His Little Wife."

Harry Beaumont's next appearance on the screen will be in "His Little Wife," three-act Essanay drama.

"The Test"

Absorbing Five-Part Drama on Pathe Gold Rooster Program Features Jane Gray.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE pleasant personality of Jane Gray will be remembered well from other screen appearances, such as "Let Katy Do It." In "The Test" she portrays those same motherly instincts for the motherless children of her employer that she portrayed for the numerous children of her dead sister in the above-named screen production. George Fitzmaurice, who directed "The Test," has lost no opportunity in making the most of the telling situations found in the original scenario from which the picture was made.

In the story of the young woman whose husband was taken from her to serve a term in prison there will be found a large human appeal, inasmuch as that her path lay across those of others more fortunate, but still alone. There is a warmth in the story that is pleasing; the characterization affords of the interpolation of interesting types, and the complications of the plot are consistently interwoven. A pretty touch of romance is entertained in that portion of the story covering the period of the young woman's sojourn in the home of the widower, who, ignorant of her past, falls in love with the woman who cares for his children. There is presented also an interesting bit of psychology while the woman struggles to overcome her affection for the man because of the ever present skeleton in the closet of her memory.

This production will find favor with intelligent audiences, and in fact with any audience. Its release date will be early in September.

"The Kid"

Five-Part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Presents Story of Considerable Power with Lillian Walker in the Feminine Lead.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AS a young woman of seventeen filled with ambition to become a newspaper reporter, Lillian Walker gives an attractive impersonation. She clothes the character of the girl with the warmth and impulsiveness of youth, and the undimmed hope and expectancy that belong to a child nurtured in an environment of inspiration.

Playing opposite her is Robert Gaillard, a strong and splendid character, as the star reporter of a New York daily, and foster father of the nameless child whose mother he had rescued from suicide, promising at the almost simultaneous birth of the child and death of the mother that he would care for it as though he were its father.

Ned Finley plays the role of Dunster, a wolf of society, and father of the child, who afterward turns up in Mexico under the assumed name of Robinson, and is later discovered in New York as one of the backers of the beef trust.

The big situation of the play occurs when the "Kid" uncovers the murderer of Mrs. Robinson, whose interests are with the anti-trust faction, and is at the same time instrumental in revealing the double part played by her own father in the question of the meat market. The revelation made to her by her foster father causes her to appeal to the authorities that his disgrace be not made public. A pathetic situation arises near the close of the picture when the girl clings to her foster father, refusing to pay the homage that the relationship calls for to the father whom she has known, but a few brief hours.

Scene from "The Kid" (Vitagraph).

The story of the production was written and produced by Wilfrid North. The only point at which the construction might be attacked is where in the first reel of the picture much film is utilized in presenting of points of interest about New York City, such as the Woolworth building, scenes on Riverside Drive, and in Central Park, and also Fifth avenue. While this is all of interest especially to the outsider, the fact remains that in a picture of this class it strongly resembles padding.

The production is a good one and will be enjoyed by all classes.

"The Almighty Dollar"

Interesting Drama Produced by Paragon for World Film—Frances Nelson and E. K. Lincoln Featured.

THAT it is unwise for a husband to attend to business so conscientiously that he neglects his wife, is once more set forth in this Paragon-World Film picture, made by Robert Thornby from a story by E. M. Ingleton. It is a safe theme on which to base a photoplay—as a number of authors have found in the past—and there is enough originality in the development of the details of the production in question to prevent its being regarded as a mere repetition of an oft-told tale. The picture is interesting in subject matter and smoothly presented.

with Frances Nelson as the somewhat foolish little wife, June Elvidge as her more sensible sister, E. K. Lincoln as the money-making husband and George Anderson as the dangerously deceptive young doctor.

Then quite apart from the plot and the acting, Director Thornby's production makes one strong bid for attention. An accident in the New York subway is shown as—to the best of our belief—it has never before been pictured on the screen. The scenes are not studio imitations; but actual photographs of the underground railroad when something goes wrong with the third rail; the lights in the car disappear and the panic-stricken passengers fight their way through the smoke and flames to the nearest station. This part of the picture is a remarkable accomplishment, intensely thrilling and serviceable in advancing the plot to the point where Masie, the heroine of the story, meets the man she is destined to marry. He carries her from the burning car, thereby gaining her acquaintance in a truly romantic fashion.

Before all this happens, Masie and her sister, fresh from a convent and living alone, after the death of their mother, have encouraged the attentions of a young physician whose purposes are sinister. The inexperienced girl is in a fair way to be trapped when Harwood comes to her rescue, morally as well as physically. But after their marriage, Masie grows restless because her husband is always at the office earning money. This gives the scheming doctor another opportunity, but he is thwarted by the clear-headed, self-sacrificing sister and the man she is about to wed. The last reel rises to a strong dramatic climax, well handled by the four players already mentioned. In the opening reel there is one startling fall certain to thrill an audience. Save for static in some scenes that could not easily be retaken, there is no fault to be found with the photography.

Two "Fairfax" Episodes Shown

Chapters Three and Four of International Serial Contain Exciting Incidents and Sustain Interest.

THE International Film Service last week showed Episodes 3 and 4 of the "Beatrice Fairfax" newspaper serial. The former is entitled "Billie's Romance" and the latter is "The Stone God." The subjects contain interest in good measure, especially in "Billie's Romance." The serial is the product of the Wharton studio.

"Billie's Romance," which was released August 21, is written around a messenger boy who admires the still younger daughter of a judge. Billie figures not in a large way, the chief roles going to Harry Fox and Grace Darling. The former has the part of a reporter, the latter that of Beatrice Fairfax, the woman who gives "advice to the lovelorn." The story deals with the escape from prison of a man who has a good-sized grudge against the judge who sentenced him and of his attempts to gratify his revenge by kidnapping and drowning the daughter of the judge. The reporter is on the hunt for the convict who has escaped. By a clever dovetailing of incidents Billie is right on the rescue job when his presence is most needed and the reporter is there, too, when Billie is captured by the kidnappers.

"The Stone God," released August 28, shows how Jimmy Barton, the reporter, tries to make good on an assignment to interview a supposed Indian prince and gets mixed up in a feud dating from the time the "prince," really a former army officer, forcibly added a Hindu god to his collection. James Gordon gives a fine interpretation of the role of the accumulator of other's property. The "prince" meets his death at the hand of one of the avengers, who a moment later is struck down by a bullet fired from a pistol automatically discharged upon the opening of the door to the closet containing the relic. Beatrice Fairfax is drawn into the action through the letter she receives from the love-crossed daughter of the army officer. It is the fiance of this daughter who is for a few moments accused of the murder of the officer, but Jimmy and Beatrice, through their work in an exciting and dangerous atmosphere, are able to straighten out the police and set everybody aright.

These two episodes are in fact independent in themselves. The idea of the serial is novel; if the successors of the two under discussion match with them, the group should be successful. The field is of the widest and practically unlimited.

"The Way of Patience"

The Story of a Rustic Quaker Maiden in Three Reels, by Essanay, with Nell Craig and Ernest Maupain in the Leading Roles—Written by Chas. J. McGuirk.

"THE Way of Patience" takes us from the busy city to the simple life in a country home, where a motherless girl budding into young womanhood tires of the strict rule of her stern Quaker father and of humdrum life on the farm. The limit of endurance is reached when she is called before the Elders of the Church and condemned for worldliness because she has bought and worn a cheap little bead necklace which pleased her eye and added to her youthful charms. Patience is her name, and when the austere elders and the decorous sisters of the flock censured her on the error of her ways she burst forth with the defense, "If it be wrong to wear bright things, why doth God clothe the fields with flowers and the birds with plumage?" Then she walked out of the church with head held high, and the same night leaves the stern old father and her home and seeks refuge in the big city.

There she fares better than most girls of her strong type of character usually do, under such circumstances; for she wins a worthy man for her husband, and then flees from him back home because she feared that she was too wild for him.

Under the direction of L. C. Windom this wholesome, quaint story is pleasingly told in pictures. Life on the farm and in the city are shown in strong contrast, and one cannot forbear a smile on a comparison of Patience as maid-of-all-work at home and Patience as a model in an artist's studio in the city.

Miss Nell Craig's Patience promises to please all who view this photoplay. The impersonation shows nice discerning art all through. We smile as we watch Patience hesitate to intrust her traveling bag to the maid in the office of the hotel of the Young Women's Christian Association, and still more broadly as we see her make a curtsey to that young woman after she has taken the bag to her bedroom.

David Worth, father of Patience, is finely drawn by Ernest Maupain. The sternness and the piety of the man are strongly brought out, but these are not permitted to destroy the paternal love. As we watch the lonely old man reading his Bible at night before retiring and thinking about and praying for his absent daughter, we know that his love is just as sterling as his faith.

Hugh Thompson, Darwin Karr and Peggy Sweeney appear in the parts of Amos Thayer, an artist; Emerson Leonard, a novelist (who becomes the husband of Patience), and Dolly Mason, an artist's model, and all are to be commended.

The release will be made September 23, through the General Film Company.

"Daredevil Kate"

Fox Melodrama Around New Munition Plant—Has Wooley Western Flavor, But Is Not Highly Emotional.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ANY melodrama, with Virginia Pearson, will probably have some few good moments. The recent Fox picture, "Daredevil Kate," with that charming player in the lead, has one or two good things, but astonishingly few for a Fox picture. It was made from Bartholamae's story presumably of the same name and has a decided dash of the old time wild west in its plot and characters, but especially the latter. Miss Pearson herself does not make a wholly convincing "Kate," saloon keeper, and tough character, with a clean record so far and a tender heart, especially for kids. But the decided weakness of the picture is its attempt to ring on the sentimental and the pathetic—except in a small group of scenes acted by clever children, its sentiment comes too thin to move the spectator much and there's many a scene in it that is a bit tiresome. There is more than one poorly acted incident in it, too, and the leading lady is only less often unconvincing than her support.

The plot turns on the old split ring incident. Two sisters each have a half of their dead mother's wedding ring. One (played by Mary Martin) was adopted by a rich woman and when the picture opens, is the happy mother of three children and has a loving husband (played by Kenneth Hunter), one of the leading employes of the boom-town munitions plant. The other sister is "Kate" owner of the big saloon of the new town. The gang around Kate's is in the employ of the foreign government and plan to blow up the munitions as soon as they are ready for shipment. The villain is played by Leighton Stark. The explosion is the first melodramatic stunt—it is "thrilling" and comes in the first act. The final melodramatic interest comes from the contact of these two women who, at first, do not know that they are related. Kate falls in love with Mary's brother by adoption. The villain slanders her to Mary, who goes to Kate's and calls her "everybody's woman" before brother. Kate shows both of them the door. Villain gets Kate to try revenge. She gets Mary's husband drunk and sends him home silly. Mary asks Kate to call. Children, when Kate is waiting downstairs, upset box and discover Mary's half of ring. Kate is impressed, but Mary enters and berates her and Kate leaves wounded and indignant. Husband goes to Kate's. Mary and her brother follow and overhear conversation. At the close Kate's half of the ring is discovered to Mary.

THE sub-title of the fourth episode is "The Plot of a Demon," and in this Hong Kong Harry, carried away by dope and passion, attempts to overcome the beautiful Princess Najla, left in his keeping by the "highest one." She dashes into a room and locks the door. Before he can break it down with an axe she has time to telephone to Manning and Capt. Kemp, who hurry with a squad of policemen to her rescue. But before they can get Hong Kong Harry handcuffed, he dives through the hangings of the wall. Now he is here and now he is gone. A policeman follows in the same way and goes head first into the river, only to find Harry sailing away in a fast motorboat. Bronson, following Singe in an auto, is craftily precipitated auto and all into a ravine by a trap bridge. Manning and the captain come up, and later there is a group of lively fighting scenes at the house boat on the Sound which is destroyed; but Ali Singe escapes.

The next episode, called "The Haunted House," keeps up the same kind of action without a sign of falling down. Most spectators will "eat it up." Ali Singe, by a ruse, gets the three girls, May, Margaret and Najla, shut up in an old house—it looks as though no one could possibly live there; but there's a secret passage to splendidly furnished rooms. Bronson and the captain look the dilapidated part of it over and are fooled. Najla is in great danger. Her uncle promises her that she will die by torture. Word comes from England that Bronson's father has been killed by an unknown assassin.

The sixth episode, "The Torture Chamber," is even more sensational and striking than either of the preceding ones. Poor Najla is placed upon the double-scissors rack that will tear her arms and limbs out of joint. These scenes will certainly affect the spectators, but they appeal to a morbid sense. The rack is not permitted to open very far and, saving the sensibilities of some at the showing of the thing in itself, there is no indecent exposure. Hong Kong Harry saves Najla by cutting the electric power and is put upon the rack himself as punishment. May escapes, and Bronson, Manning and the captain impress a company of soldiers and attack the haunted house. There's a stiff fight in which many of the "Yellow Menace's" followers are shot into goodness. Singe, Hong Kong Harry and the slave girl, the beautiful odalisque, escape with Najla and Margaret in a fast motorboat.

"The Honorable Friend"

Sessue Hayakawa and Tsuri Aoki Head Cast in Lasky Photoplay of Unusual Quality.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA and his very pretty little wife, Tsuri Aoki, make an unusual and decidedly attractive combination in a romance such as Elizabeth McGaffey wrote under the title of "The Honorable Friend," for the Lasky Company. Pictures such as this, acted in the principal roles by Japanese players, are welcome because of their novelty, and the more so when the story stands up well on its own account. These five reels are certain to increase the favor with which the actors from the Orient have been regarded since their appearance in "The Cheat," and "Alien Souls."

The production is strong in characterization and suggestive details, rather than in stirring drama. For the most part the appeal is to an interest in youthful romance endangered by a crafty schemer determined to separate two lovers, that he may have the young bride for himself. Everything is in his favor. Makino is without money or influence, and his wife is held prisoner in the house of Kayosho. Naturally, he resorts to a personal method of retaliation. With murder in his heart he seeks an entrance to his enemy's home, and that very night Kayosho is strangled, the inference being that the young Japanese has accomplished his purpose.

Scenes in this part of the story are so arranged that there is suspense, and the possibility of surprise when it is found that the murderer was not Makino, but Goto, the servant of the dead man, whose deed is accounted for by the predicament of his daughter, whom Kayosho had disgraced and jilted after a promise of marriage. From a dramatic standpoint this concluding reel is easily the most effective in the picture, but that does not mean a lack of attractive qualities in foregoing parts.

There is delicacy and charm in the playing of the scenes between Makino and Toki-Ye, the bride brought from Japan to San Francisco with the $600 supplied by Makino's employer. They are married according to American laws, and there is no hint of trouble until the time comes for the Japanese ceremony, and Kayosho claims the girl for himself. In passages of marked appeal, both Hayakawa and Tsuri Aoki convey sincere emotional feeling, whereas Raymon Hatton gives a consistent character sketch as the sinister curio dealer.

"The Victory of Conscience"

Lou-Tellegen and Cleo Ridgley are Featured in a Lasky Production of Marked Power.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

POWERFUL and compelling is "The Victory of Conscience," written by Margaret Turnbull from stories by Alexandro De Janelli, and released by the Lasky Company on August 31. Frank Reichert has directed this tale of modern France, with Wilfred Buckland as art director. It is a satisfying production in all departments.

Lou-Tellegen has the role of Louis, Count de Tavannes, a sinner who turns saint. It is a part that splendidly fits the player—the young spender who turns priest after betraying a simple-hearted dancer. Dramatic quality there is in the picture in abundance, the struggle to attain the right in spite of temptation and of ridicule, the effort to bring back to the straight path the young woman the priest had been the instrument of undoing. It is an interpretation marked by feeling, by intelligent and reverential treatment.

Miss Ridgley is Rosette, the dancer kidnapped and carried to the city by De Tavannes. Rosette runs away from the count the morning after her arrival; but her childlike faith in God as a power to protect her from harm has been broken. She succeeds as a dancer; she rises in affluence as her fame spreads. She laughs at the attempts of the priest to bring her back to the position in which he found her. There is tragedy in the ending—where the priest discovers he has won the girl for himself but not for religion; and how finally he induces her to enter the cloister. The death of the two on the field of battle—he as a soldier, she as a nurse—makes an ending that is logical and gets away from the irritating, unnatural denouement—that is, to all except the strictest religionists—of loving, living and going their separate ways.

"The Victory of Conscience" is a picture of which we should hear much. Censors to the contrary, it is a wholesome story for men and women. It holds and it moves—and as to the latter there is no stronger moment in the play than that when the Mary Magdalen comes to the side of the priest as under great stress he preaches to the outcasts of the Cafe of the Little Toads.

It is a picture not to miss.

"Youth's Endearing Charm"

Five-Reel American, Featuring Beautiful Young Mary Miles Minter.

"YOUTH'S Endearing Charm" is very largely that of the really beautiful young girl who plays the leading role. The story, one of the familiar Cinderella kind, has all the marks of a vehicle for Miss Minter, but it might have been raised above that class by a higher regard for the intelligence of modern audiences, for it is replete with theatrical artificiality and inconsistency. Plausibility is wholly disregarded at times, where more pains and careful supervision would have easily remedied the defects. The story is that of an ill-treated orphan who is driven by brutality of some inhuman creatures of the old school to beggary, where Prince Charming comes along in the guise of a gilded youth gloriously drunk.

In capable hands there is enough comedy material supplied to bring about some amusing results, but attention has been concentrated on giving the Cinderella a chance to change her rags for the becoming raiment of good society and to save the father of Prince Charming of alcoholic tendency from ruin. Mary Miles Minter responds to all that is required of her, easily carrying the play on her young shoulders. She is so sweet to the eye that there is compensating pleasure in watching her perform. Very young, she is girlishly mature in figure, graceful and highly intelligent. She is almost without dramatic opportunity, her role that of looking pretty, but she manages to hold attention throughout by intense personality. In good hands, with bigger opportunity, the charming young actress is headed straight for signal success.

"The Ore Plunderers."

THE fifth episode of the Robert Welles Ritchie serial calls for a fine display of strenuousness on the part of Miss Marin Sais. The lady is equal to the demand. When Barbara Brent finds out that a number of the miners are stealing high-grade ore from one of her father's mines she undertakes to trap them herself. With the aid of a car boy named Andy, Barbara disguises herself as a miner, enters the mine and finds out the plan by which the robbery is carried on. Miller, the leader of the thieves, penetrates her disguise and persuades his companions to secure Barbara and Andy in an abandoned pit, where the slowly rising water will bring them a horrible death. This scene is staged in a very realistic manner, the acting of Miss Sais being the principal factor in creating the illusion of a highly dramatic situation. The incidents leading up to the rescue of Barbara and Andy and the capture of the thieves, after they have almost succeeded in hanging John Wallace, are full of vigor, and this installment of the serial provides two reels of entertaining melodrama. True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, Jack Hutchinson, Ronald Bradbury and Hart Hoxie are valuable members of the cast.

"Ablaze on the Rails."

A railroad station safe is plundered by a trio of crooks, but one of the thieves turns informer and attempts to help a company detective recover the money. They are overpowered by the two robbers, bound securely in a freight car and the car set on fire. As it rushes down grade past the station at Lone Point, Helen sees it and starts in pursuit on her motorcycle. The runaway is overtaken and brought to a stop at the risk of the lady operator's neck. The stunt Miss Gibson performs is not new, but the thrill is all there, and the suspense throughout the reel is kept at fever heat. Jack Messick, Gladys Blue, P. S. Pembroke, George Routh and G. A. Williams are in the supporting company.

"Ham, the Fortune Teller."

The nature of this Ham and Bud slapstick comedy is sufficiently revealed by the title. Action of the most strenuous sort it possesses in abundance, and there is enough plot to account for the antics of Kalem's favorite comedians. Events so shape themselves that Ham finds it convenient to impersonate a Gypsy fortune teller, a task in which he is assisted by the ever useful Bud. A good comedy number, clean and amusing without being vulgar.

"Saving the Family Name"

Mary MacLaren and Phillips Smalley Featured in Bluebird Production of Considerable Originality of Treatment.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

FROM a story by Evelyn Heath, the talented author-director Lois Weber has produced an exceptionally attractive five-part production. The story has afforded an abundance of types that are interesting, and situations that are tense, with a contrast of masculine character that is frequently seen without being noted particularly. The picture is in a sense a satire on family pride of name, and reveals in startling fashion the possible havoc wrought by carrying this sort of thing too far.

Mary MacLaren in the role of a young actress whose sudden rise to fame is caused through notoriety brought about by the death of a young aristocrat who stabbed himself because of his love for the girl, and furthermore to keep faith with his hypocritical relatives in "saving the family name," does effective work. In the emotional scenes following the suicide of her lover she is especially to be commended.

An interesting view of the question is brought about by the second instance of trying to "save the family name" when a young man born of an old Southern family falls in love with her, causing his relatives the same amount of paltry worry as in the first instance. This specimen of the masculine gender, however, has considerable more backbone than the former, and persists in marrying the girl he loves in spite of all the protests of proud mother and friends.

At the last turn of the lane the girl is kidnapped and taken to a lonely island by the uncle of the young man, a role played effectively by Phillips Smalley, who, after various encounters with the stubborn nature of his victim, decides that the best thing to do is to send for his nephew and square things. The spectator has a surprise in store when it is revealed that the girl has fallen in love with the uncle.

The production is well made and clean. The opening scenes have a slight drag that finds compensation in the interesting action in the latter part of the picture.

"Chushingura"

A Japanese Photodrama in Seven Reels, Acted by Native Artists—Brought to This Country by Jose Linde.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"CHUSHINGURA," the first Japanese photoplay made by natives of the Flowery Kingdom, to be exhibited in the United States, is a seven-reel tragedy founded upon a standard Japanese drama, the period of which is the fifteenth century. The picture moves with the deliberate action of the accepted Japanese dramatic method, much of the time being consumed by the bowing and scraping of the characters whenever they meet. There is no love motive in the play, but, as Cassius once remarked upon a celebrated occasion, "Honor is the subject of my story." Politics, also, creeps into the plot. Lord Asano is appointed by the Shogun as chairman of the Reception Committee to receive the gentleman's envoys. Asano tries to decline the appointment on the ground that he is ignorant of court customs, but is forced to serve. Lord Date, who is appointed his assistant, bribes a certain old ward boss named Lord Kira and obtains the correct information. Asano neglects this little matter, makes a mess of the affair, is taunted by Kira, stabs the gentleman and is sentenced by the Shogun to commit harakiri. Asano calmly carries out the edict, after requesting that the dagger with which he intends to commit the "happy dispatch" be sent to Oishi, his chief retainer. The rest of the story shows how Oishi avenges his master and, with the help of forty-seven other of Asano's retainers, kills Kira and places his head on the tomb of his master. The forty-seven then commit harakiri, by order of the government.

Such a story can have but little appeal to Americans. The merit of the picture, to foreign eyes, is the educational value of its correct reproduction of the people and customs of a past age in a land that holds so much of the strange, the alluring and the picturesque. The production has been made on an extensive scale, and both the exteriors and the interiors show many interesting views of life in Japan. The lighting of the scenes is not always well done, but the groupings are handled with skill. The individual efforts of the actors are, no doubt, after the best traditions of the Japanese stage, but to a foreigner, they are generally more amusing than impressive.

"The Wolf Woman"

Five-Reel Triangle-Ince, by Gardner Sullivan, with Louise Glaum a Veritable Star.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE Wolf Woman" rises above a vehicle in the capable hands of Gardner Sullivan, and it rises above repetition through high artistry of treatment, but the opportunity it affords Louise Glaum brings her to the front, a star of the first magnitude in these days of mere stellar reflections from stage careers. Not to depreciate in the least the fine training an actor may receive on the stage, there are notable cases of stage stars making but a sorry performance in screen presentation, while a very large number of our best performers in this new art have grown with it in the difficult art of intellectual and emotional revelation without utterance. Louise Glaum has found her way through some trying preliminaries to a front rank by intelligent and persistent application of her native ability, good taste and intelligence.

The story is that of a Circe, here described as a spider who catches poor unsuspecting men in her net and destroys them. What a sorry concession to Puritanism is that old story. Because a woman is full-blooded, beautiful and a master of illusion, she is perpetually held up as a horrible example by false assumption of piety, a seductive thing to be avoided, no matter how much she is secretly admired, and finally driven to a bitter end through a conventional yielding to affectation of virtue. Of keener sensibilities than those of man, an impressionist by nature, woman is either moral or unmoral at the outset, and we must credit the mother sex with native morality higher than our own, or she is moral or immoral as man's strength or his weakness makes her.

A writer of Gardner Sullivan's ability to transform could easily divert the career of a modern Circe from the time-honored one born in the imagination of disappointed man when rejected of woman, divert it into one of a thousand different courses than the one prescribed by tradition, but he follows the beaten track in this case and does it gracefully. Artistry of background, of sub-title, of scientific work, of performance—what more could be desired in the matter of treatment and interpretation? The playwright is indeed fortunate in his medium. Most fortunate is he in having a great personal note, like that injected by Miss Glaum, a marvel of sensuous charm, into the general harmony of production.

The Little Liar

Five-Reel Fine-Arts by Anita Loos, Featuring Mae Marsh.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"THE Little Liar" is a genius in embryo, a poor young girl of active imagination, whose dreams are formulated by native constructive talent. She relates stories to wondering children of her supposed experiences, tells them that she is not of humble origin, and feeds her childish vanity in secret by wandering away from her sordid surroundings into enchanted worlds of her own creating. Such children are usually regarded as "queer," especially by parents of low intelligence, so "Maggie," impersonated by Mae Marsh, is distrusted by her ignorant parents and called by the neighbors "The Little Liar."

The Little Liar's propensity sends her drifting on a series of adventures which begin with service in a boarding house and lead through the people she meets there to employment in a department store as cash girl. The store is being systematically robbed by a floor walker, a man Maggie has idealized as "The Duke" because of his impressive appearance and conduct, and a professional shoplifter. These two frame it up on simple and sweet Maggie when they are on the edge of being caught with the goods. She is arrested.

All this might easily be made commonplace in treatment, but the dominant idea, that of contrasting the meanness of what might be called "mere existence," survival by hook or crook, with that reaching out of the soul for what is ideal and beautiful, becomes very effective through highly intelligent and artistic treatment. Maggie's imagination becomes a source of haunting fear through a hardened old inmate of her detention cell who gives the young girl poison to take in case of conviction. Fired by her exciting experiences, Maggie obtains paper and pencil and writes her own little story, taking the poison as she concludes. Then, after death, as is often the case, her genius meets with appreciation. The conclusion is consistent and effective, but disappointing from a story point of view.

"Black Friday"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Tells Interesting Story Dating Back to Administration of U. S. Grant.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel number, adapted to the screen by E. M. Ingleton from a story by Frederick S. Isham, goes back to the financial panic in Wall Street in 1869, when Ulysses S. Grant was President of this country. The closing scenes are enacted in Paris during the riots which followed its siege.

While not at all times adequately handled, in the matter of clear and consistent direction, the production maintains a strong interest and has much about it to commend. From the very first scenes, when the characters are introduced at a church wedding, one can feel the beginnings of a story of consequence and this feeling grows as the action continues.

Scene from "Black Friday" (Universal).

The leading character is Richard Strong, a railroad president, known as "Honesty." He weds a girl named Elinor Rossitor, a creature of visions and dreams. From the first there is misunderstanding and coldness between them. His rugged, austere nature repels her warm and romantic one. Strong's secretary proves traitorous, selling out to his financial enemies and endeavoring to ensnare the wife's affections.

Strong's ideal of manhood is President Grant and the story is made more interesting by a representation of Grant on the screen in one or two scenes. Later, in the days of the Paris Commune, the night pictures of rioting are well handled and produced with considerable detail. In the end Strong's secretary confesses, clearing the wife's name, and bringing reconciliation and true happiness.

The story as a whole has not a great deal of dramatic strength, but gets away from the beaten path and has the advantage of a pleasing historical background.

Three Biograph Single Reels

"For the Son of the House," "The Unveiling" and "The Sunbeam" on List of Reissues.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PROBABLY few present day patrons of motion pictures will recall these single reels, first issued a number of years ago; but they will remember many of the players who at that time were just winning wide popularity. In the leading roles we see such familiar figures as Mae Marsh, Bobby Harron, Mabel Normand, Del Henderson and others whose names are known wherever photoplays are displayed. Since the days of Griffith's regime at Biograph these actors have appeared in longer and more elaborate productions; but they have not contributed to many better short subjects than these three.

In the first of the trio, Miss Marsh naturally takes the lead as a poor girl, who in a moment of need is befriended by a wealthy woman. As a maid in the home of her benefactor she is more than ready to show her gratitude, even to the extent of sacrificing her own reputation by taking the responsibility for a theft committed by the son of the house. This picture is finely constructed to bring out the dramatic possibilities of the story and is thoroughly convincing as acted by Miss Marsh, Kate Bruce and others.

Miss Normand, Mr. Harron and Miss McDowell are the principal players in "The Unveiling," a quite ingenious sketch, showing how a youth who falls in love with a mercenary showgirl is disillusionized. When the family despair of bringing the boy to his senses they arrange a scheme by which the girl, thinking that the fortune has been lost, appears in her true colors. Altogether a very adroitly arranged story and sufficiently true to human nature.

"The Sunbeam" is a pleasant little heart interest tale concerning a bachelor, a spinster and a child, all living on different floors in the same building. The child, whose mother dies, is the means of bringing the lonely man and woman together. Miss McDowell and Mr. Henderson play the leads.

S. Government officials setting out new buoys, San Francisco; President Wilson and railroad representatives; railroad employees at White House; women rookies at National Service Camp, Lake Geneva, Wis.

DID HE OR DID HE NOT? (Vitagraph), Aug. 21.—The plot of this one-reel farce, written by Charles Israel, shows the extent to which some chaps will go to secure a vacation. The situations are amusing in a comic supplement way, and William Lytell, Jr., George O'Donnell, Shirley Yore, Dorothy Long, Florence Natol and Ralph Whiting work faithfully with their respective roles. Frank Currier directed the picture.

STAR BOARDERS (Kalem), Aug. 22.—The ingratitude shown by Ham and Bud in this one-reel farce is amazing. They obtain lodgings with a kind-hearted landlady and when she asks for payment they decamp, after stripping the house of its furnishings. The comic complications are laughable, and Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan make the most of them. Ethel Teare, A. Edmonson and Myrta Sterling take a hand in the proceedings.

THE FABLE OF "HOW WISENSTEIN DID NOT LOSE OUT TO BUTTINSKY" (Essanay), Aug. 23.—The Sage of Indiana is not a marrying man himself, but he understands women. The present fable is filled with wisdom that many a young chap should ponder well. It shows how not to lose out when one's best friend attempts to walk off with one's best girl. The action and inserts are equally divided between wit and humor. The picture is neatly played by Ulrich Haupt, Alice McChesney, Harry B. Watson and Royal Douglas.

THE LEMON IN THEIR GARDEN OF LOVE (Vim), Aug. 23.—Another of the Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby one-reel feature comedies, this photoplay turns on the love of a young wife for her poodle. She carries it to such an extreme that her husband becomes jealous and secretly rejoices when the dog dies. But his joy is short-lived. His wife has her pet cremated and the ashes of the dear departed become as great a nuisance as was the dog himself. The reel is greatly enhanced in value by the skillful acting of Mr. Meyers and Miss Theby.

THEIR HONEYMOON (Vim), Aug. 24.—Plump becomes a bridegroom in this one-reel farce and makes the mistake of turning over the money for the bridal tour to his wife. The fate of the money, which is stolen, furnishes the fun of the reel. The acting of Babe Hardy, Billy Ruge, Frank Hanson, Ray Godfrey and Edna Reynolds brings out the good points of the picture.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 68 (Selig), Aug. 24.—President and Mrs. Wilson meet the Democratic Campaign Committee at the White House; railroad employees at the White House; National Farming Demonstration at Cedar Rapids, Iowa; German trenches on the River Somme, France; captured German cannon and shells; the captured German mine layer UC5 at London; review of First Illinois troops, Brownsville; newspaper correspondents and their wives at the review; civilian volunteer cruise starts from Brooklyn Navy Yard.

THE STOLEN JAIL (Kalem), Aug. 25.—A novel one-reel comedy, featuring Ivy Close, this picture is immense. It is filled with food for laughter. A review of it was printed in the issue of Aug. 26, page 1392.

THE TRY-OUT (Vim), Aug. 25.—The scene of the try-out is a moving picture studio. Pokes gets a job as an actor, and the dream he has the night before he goes to work, becomes the plot of the comedy. The reel is an amusing burlesque on the making of a moving picture, the slap-dash acting of Robert Burns and Walter Stull being right in line with the scenario. Ethel Burton, Robin Williamson and Harry Naughton complete the cast.

THE YELLOW GIRL (Vitagraph), Aug. 25.—Edgar Keller, the author and producer of this one-reel comedy, has introduced a pleasing novelty. The costumes and settings are the unusual features of the picture. They are inspired by the futuristic school of art and are faithful copies of the odd figures and scenes that are produced by the followers of this method. The story is suited to the work of the scene painter, and the acting of the cast is along the same lines. Carmen Phillips has the title role, and Webster Campbell, Corinne Griffith and Florence Vidor are the other principals.

ROPING A SWEETHEART (Selig), Aug. 26.—Tom is still trying to win Vickey, and makes an attempt in this one-reeler to accomplish it in a roping contest. The situations leading up to the contest are amusing. Tom loses out as usual. Tom Mix and Victoria Forde have the principal parts.

AT DANGER'S CALL (No. 94 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), Aug. 26.—Helen and her trusty motorcycle are on the job during the action of this one-reel drama and save the son of Superindentent Burkett from being blown to pieces in the wreck of a dynamite car. Frank Howard Clark is the author of the scenario, and G. A. Williams, P. S. Pembroke, Billy Boy and George Routh are members of Helen Gibson's acting crew.

General Film Company Specials

THE WANDERING HORDE (Vitagraph), Aug. 19.—James Oliver Curwood is responsible for the scenario of this three-reel photoplay. It tells of how a wealthy young author who is writing a book about tramps, takes to the road himself in search of atmosphere. He is successful in his quest and also meets "the one woman." The drama is light in texture but moves at good speed and the subject matter is of interest. It is given a satisfactory performance by a cast in which Evert Overton is the central figure. Denton Vale, Adele Kelly and Edward Elkas are prominently cast. Director, Eugene Mullin.

THE FAR COUNTRY (Selig), Aug. 21.—Lovers of unadulterated romance will enjoy this two-reel photoplay, written by William E. Wing. The hero is an idealist whose sensitive nature is poorly equipped to battle with life. He sacrifices himself in order to give every advantage to his ward, whom he loves. The story has nothing in common with the realistic school of fiction, but will please the admirers of that other romantic young gentleman—St. Elmo. The accident to the acrobats is not very impressive. Harry Mestayer is equal to every requirement as the hero. William Sheerer, Lillian Wade and Marion Warner are members of the cast, which was directed by Frank Beal.

THE USURER'S DUE (Lubin), Aug. 22.—A review of this three-reel photoplay is printed on another page of the present issue.

A MAN FOR A' THAT (Essanay), Aug. 22.—Francis X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, Ruth Stonehouse and Irene Warfield have the leading parts in this two-reel reissue. The hero, a wealthy man, tires of society, leaves his fiancee and goes to live with a little newsboy. The boy's sister falls in love with him and when the man discovers that the girl to whom he was engaged has eloped with a French count, he marries the newsboy's sister. The regulation "happy ending" romance, the picture is given the benefit of an excellent cast.

THE OIL FIELD PLOT (No. 3 of "The Girl from 'Frisco"—Kalem), Aug. 23.—The settings of this episode of the new Kalem serial are realistic and the story is filled with action. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of Aug. 19, page 1237.

SEVEN DAYS (Biograph), Aug. 23.—The screen version of the stage play made by Avery Hopwood from Mary Roberts Rinehart's clever novel should prove a welcome reissue. The comedy is a merry one and the three-reel screenplay made by the Biograph retains much of the original fun. The cast includes Dave Morris, Charles H. Mailes, Louise Orth, Florence Lee, Jack Pickford, Walter Miller and Jack Dillon.

THE FACE IN THE MIRROR (Essanay), Aug. 26.—A man who has been unjustly convicted of a crime is the hero of this three-reel photoplay. The story holds from start to finish and the climax is handled with skill. Edmund F. Cobb heads the cast and gives his customary effective portrayal. Patrick Calhoun, John Thorn and Josephine Sylvester are also excellent in their several roles.

International Film Service, Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 67, 1916, Aug. 22.—Initial horse race at Geneva, Switzerland; Ambassador to Turkey sails from Hoboken with his family; classic dancers give exhibition, New York; railroad employees visit White House; President Wilson meets former Progressive Party leaders; Brooklyn baseball club; firing great guns at Fort Warren, Mass.; footlights and fashions; ceremonies at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York; British seaplane lowered from battleship, Salonika harbor; flying over Salonika.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 69, 1916, Aug. 25.—Dario Resta wins auto race at Chicago; on the Austro-Italian front; on the Austro-Russian Frontier; motorcycle and aeroplane race; fashions and footlights; Candidate Hughes at Tacoma, Wash.; firing mortars at Fort Totten, New York; military high mass at San Diego, Cal.; South Boston children enjoy five-cent meals; Mrs. Waldo Pierce pilots her aeroplane, Mineola, L. I.; using massage for infantile paralysis, New York; near Salonika, Greece; British force crossing mountainous country; Serbian artillery moving into action.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (International—Episodes 3 and 4), Aug. 21 and 28—These chapters, entitled respectively "Billie's Romance" and "The Stone God," were produced at the Wharton studio. They are filled with melodramatic incident, most of it fast and interesting. The episodes are referred to at greater length in another column.

Fox Film Corporation

DAREDEVIL KATE (Fox), Aug. 21.—A melodrama with Virginia Pearson in the leading role. It is not up to the usual standard of interest maintained by the Fox Players; but has one or two good incidents. A longer review will be found elsewhere in this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 86, Aug. 23.—Interesting items of this number are a luncheon given by President Wilson to prominent members of the Democratic party; Miss Ida Ellonsky swimming for two miles carrying her 270-pound brother on her back; a baby auto race at San Francisco; the sumer horse show at Pabst farm, Oconomowoc, Wis., and scenes from the European battle front.

REEL LIFE, NO. 17 (Gaumont), Aug. 27.—The opening number of this issue of the magazine in film is "The Oath of a Boy Scout," in which we learn some of the fine precepts which the boy scout tries to live up to. "Odd Animals of the Border" is also interesting, including the badger, civet cat, ant bear, armadillo, iguana, coyote, opossum and gila moster. The sketch from life which closes the number portrays an amusing situation in which a newly-married couple quarrel over the fact that the expected dinner guests fail to appear. It is later discovered that the invitations have not been mailed.

TWO OF A KIND (Beauty), Aug. 30.—This number concerns a mix-up of babies. The subject is an old one, but is made amusing in this instance by the preliminary action of the picture which introduces a henpecked husband and father who also has a weakness for poker, and his wife who is a bridge-whist fiend. Orral Humphrey is the featured member of the cast.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

THE SPITE HUSBAND (Centaur), Aug. 26.—This two-reel offering is quite original in plot and tells a well-rounded story of a somewhat bizarre, but entertaining, sort. A society girl, jilted unexpectedly by her lover, who marries another, decides to wed the first man she meets. This proves to be an artist. She promises him money and fame if he marries her. He consents and the loveless marriage follows. They learn to care for each other after a number of events have occurred. Crane Wilbur and Mae Gaston play the leads. The offering holds the interest well.

THE KEY (American), Aug. 28.—This two-part melodrama will be found interesting. It has been staged with a competent cast, including Lizette Thorne, Geo. Field, Edward Coxen and other American players. The story treats of the success of a young detective in trailing a gang of counterfeiters. An interesting point about the story is that his entrance to their quarters is effected through their feminine associate whom the detective rescues from the life of crime she has been living and makes her his wife. Not unlike other stories that have been filmd many times, but staged in an interesting manner.

THE MAN WHO WOULD NOT DIE (Mutual Star Production), Aug. 31.—A five-part production based on a story by Mabel Condon. The story is a good one, such as would be expected from the clever pen of Miss Condon, but has unfortunately not been put in the best of picture shape. It takes the form of a thrilling melodrama and features William Russell in a double role. The subject which has originality, treats of the effort of a young speudthrift to obtain insurance money by having his twin brother, who is about to die, pose as him while he hides himself. The brother regains his health in the west, and the villain and his accomplice both meet foul deaths. Careful construction and swifter action would have made this picture much more acceptable as a five-reel offering.

YOUTH'S ENDEARING CHARM (American—Mutual Star Production), Sept. 4.—A six-part drama featuring Mary Miles Minter. Miss Minter, beautiful and charming in manner, does much toward the general success of the production. The construction of the story might be improved considerably. The cast on the whole is a competent one, and the picture will be much enjoyed. A full review of the production appears elsewhere.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE PRETENDERS (Rolfe), Aug. 21.—An interesting picture, directed by George Baker and featuring Emmy Wehlen and Paul Gordon. The subject, which is in five parts, was reviewed at length in the issue of Sept. 2, page 1532.

HIS RIVAL (Metro), Aug. 21.—An amusing Drew "parlor comedy." It was reviewed on page 1532 in the issue of last week.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

SOME FOREIGN BIRDS (Pathe), Aug. 28.—This number will be found both instructive and entertaining, and presents close-up studies of the finch, the ringed African sparrow, the Java sparrow, and the white sparrow.

HISTORIC ST. AUGUSTINE (Pathe), Aug. 28.—On the same reel with the above scenes of this old Florida city are intensely interesting, bringing before the eye with explanatory sub-titles many of the scenes of other days.

Pathe Exchange Inc. Specials

CAUGHT IN THE JAM (Rolin), Aug. 28.—In this number Heinie and Louie separate on the question of a young woman and an automobile. Heinie helps the young woman out of an awkward predicament, and is showered with honors. At a reception given for Heinie, when a bottle of grandmother's jam made twenty years ago is to be opened in honor of the occasion, it is discovered that Louise has made away with it Considerable fun is extracted from the jam episode.

PICTURESQUE HAVANA (Pathe) Sept. 4.—Presenting scenes of beauty and interest in and about Havana. Public buildings, parks and monuments are among the points of interest shown.

GOOD PALS (Pathe), Sept. 4.—A moderately entertaining drama, in which the father of a young girl who has inspired jealousy in a certain female relative, goes on a journey and is attacked by bears. Previous to his being rescued by Indians important papers concerning the payment of money for a certain property are taken from him by a man who leaves him for dead, and are sent to the jealous relative. Later the father returns to find his daughter consigned to the garret. A clever dog does much to help the interest of the story.

LUKE JOINS THE NAVY (Rolin), Sept. 4.—An amusing number in which the majority of the scenes take place on board a battleship. Luke, with his pal, endeavors to fall in line with the general routine, a fact that affords some amusing situations and funny business. This number will be enjoyed by the average audience.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 9 (Balboa), Sept. 11.—An interesting number in which John Burton befriends the son of an unscrupulous factory owner, and is caught in a trap in which his mills are closed by the trust through the manipulations of the man whose son he has befriended. This is an interesting number of the serial and will be enjoyed by the majority of audiences.

Paramount Pictures Corp.

ROLLING STONES (Famous Players), Aug. 21.—There are many comedy touches in this subject featuring Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot, directed by Del Henderson, his first production with the Famous Players. There is an excellent cast, too, employed in the making of this interesting photoplay. The subject was reviewed in these columns in the issue of September 2, on page 1531.

THE HONORABLE FRIEND (Lasky), Aug. 24.—Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese player, who scored so emphatically in previous Lasky productions, is starred in this entertaining romance. He is ably assisted by Tsuri Aoki and others. For a review see another page of this issue.

COLONEL HEEZA LIAR PLAYS HAMLET (Bray), Aug. 24.—If the Bray studios were in the habit of turning out feature releases, this drawing, made by J. R. Bray himself, would certainly win the distinction. Without a doubt it is one of the very best comedy cartoons ever made by the distinguished artist. Heeza Liar dreams that he goes to a studio where he doubles the famous Charlie Chaplin salary. In drawing Chaplin, who plays the grave digger to Heeza Liar's Hamlet, Mr. Bray missed few of the comedian's familiar mannerisms. The reel concludes with "The Long and the Short," a Ditmars animal study.

FARMER ALFALFA'S REVENGE (Bray), Aug. 31.—Paul Terry is responsible for this comedy cartoon from the Bray studios. The idea is good and it has been cleverly carried out. "Nature's Tent Builders" is the Ditmars subject concluding the reel. It is a quite exhaustive study of caterpillars, cocoons and moths.

PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount).—Expert divers, both men and women, illustrate difficult dives for the leading subject in this issue of Paramount's screen magazine. The pictures of pottery in the making are out of the ordinary and instructive. For the Better Babies section there are scenes of New York's diet kitchens where the poor children of the slums are supplied with healthful food. Then there is another article under the title of "Better Pigs."

THE SUNNY SOUTH OF ENGLAND (Burton Holmes).—Starting off with really fine views of a high sea dashing against a rocky shore, this travel number continues with a varied succession of picturesque scenes, including town, country roads and thickly peopled pleasure resorts. Altogether this issue is well up to the standard of Burton Holmes' series.

Triangle Film Corporation.

THE LITTLE LIAR (Triangle Fine Arts), Sept. 10.—The story of an imaginative little girl whose dreams lead her through varied adventures to a thoroughly consistent end, Mae Marsh in the title role.

THE THOROUGHBRED (Triangle-Ince), Sept. 10.—A story of the race track, with Frank Keenan in the role of a fine old Southern gentleman of sporting proclivities.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

LITTLE BROWNIE'S BRAVERY (Powers), Sept. 1.—This has a slight plot, but is very pleasing from the fact that it features a number of California's wonderful diving children. These little equatic wonders dive for coins and are perfectly at home in the water. Elizabeth Janes does clever work in the leading part.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL JUSTICE (Laemmle), Sept. 6.—A drama in one reel, by E. M. Ingleton, featuring T. D. Crittenden, Jessie Arnold and Irene Hunt. This shows how the wife of a district attorney brings her husband around to a more tolerant view of the man he is prosecuting. The story works out an interesting idea and is well handled.

THE LAUGH OF SCORN (Rex), Sept. 9.—Ben Wilson, Joseph Gerard and Edna Hunter are featured in this story of a young man who teaches school in a mountain district. He falls in love with the mountaineer's daughter and wins her after a battle with her lover. Not very new in plot, but pleasingly presented and attractively pictured.

NOBODY GUILTY (Nestor), Sept. 11.—Valuable jewels mysteriously disappear and the owner of the store takes the manager to task. A detective is placed on the case and presently the daughter of the proprietor is disclosed as a kleptomaniac. In true farcical fashion, a necklace is passed from one to another of the characters while the ludicrous detective attempts to locate the thief. Lee Moran, as the detective, is responsible for many of the laughs in this very creditable number, and he is ably supported by Eddie Lyons, Fred Gamble and Priscilla Dean.

THE PRICE OF VICTORY (Laemmle), Sept. 13.—Strongly opposed to war, the hero of this dramatic sketch is misunderstood by his sweetheart and neighbors when the men of a European province are called to the colors. He is deemed a coward, but his courage is amply proven when he is wounded in an engagement. He returns blinded, but glorying in the maintenance of his ideals, for he had killed none of his fellow men. The story was conceived and presented in a fine spirit and is certain to appeal to those who realize the futility of war. Douglas Gerrard plays the idealist.

Universal Film Corporation Specials

UNHAND ME, VILLAIN (L-KO), Aug. 9—A very successful three-reel comic, featuring Alice Howell as a slum girl who breaks into a theater, pursued by cops. She makes herself solid with the manager and gets to be leading lady. Some excellent burlesque scenes are pictured. The fake cow and horse, the railroad scene and the snowstorm, which winds up with fire, are all laughable. The chase at the close is short and well done. A sure laugh-producer.

BRENNON OF THE MOOR (Universal Special), Aug. 21.—A two-reel Irish story, featuring Francis Ford and Grace Cunard. An old Irish poem forms the plot basis of this, and frequent excerpts are quoted in full. It tells of an Irish lad who is ready with his fists, and indulges in numerous fights. He becomes a highwayman and is captured by British soldiers. Later he escapes with his sweetheart to America. A typical subject of the kind. The costuming, atmosphere and general presentation are very good. The photographic work is also above the average.

THE HEART OF A SHOW GIRL (Universal Special), Aug. 28.—A pretty, innocuous two-reel story that at times shows a tendency to drag because the plot material is rather thin. A very severe dramatic critic writes unkind things about a petulant little dancer, whom he fails to recognize when they meet on a summer vacation. Their romance, culminating in a marraige, is anything but a surprise to the spectator, but placed on the average program, the picture will make passable entertainment. Ella Hall, Franklyn Farnum and Arthur Hoyt portray the central characters.

CALL OF THE PAST (Imp), Sept. 1.—For the hero of this very satisfactory underworld melodrama, Harvey Gates, the author of the scenario, took a crook with a better side to his nature, married him to a sweetly innocent girl and then brought about his regeneration. It is a well constructed two-part picture, with Director William Lowery, Agnes Vernon and Frank Brownless playing the leading roles. There are few superfluous scenes and some of the action is exciting.

DEAD OR ALIVE (Special Universal), Sept. 4.—Episode No. 4 of "Liberty." This installment is alive with interesting events. Liberty is married to Manuel Leon, to save the honor of the man she loves. The trustees quarrel over the affairs in general. There is an exciting effect achieved by the band of desperadoes, who board a rapidly moving train from the backs of galloping horses. The experiences of the American refugee are also thrilling depicted, he being one of four men who were stood up to be shot. The picturesque localities and fine photography are a great help to this serial.

CROOKED FROM THE START (L-KO), Sept. 6.—A two-reel comic number, featuring Dan Russell, Gertrude Selby and Billy Ritchie. This is very funny throughout and particularly in the opening scenes where the pretty girl speeder is brought to the police court. She escapes and the chief of the force and another member enter into rivalry for her hand. This is full of laughable action and done in the best style for this sort of production.

LOVE AND WAR (Special Universal), Sept. 11.—No. 5 of the "Liberty" series. The plot moves along with agreeable complications in this number. There is a great deal of fighting in the open between Mexicans and Americans. Liberty and her friends are all made captive. Manuel, finding himself at odds with everyone, sells his sympathies to the bandits, in exchange for an officer's commission. Some of the fighting scenes are rather obscure in meaning at the beginning, but clear up later. The installment closes with Pedro strapped to the back of a wild horse and turned loose on the plains.

THE TRIUMPH OF TRUTH (Rex), Sept. 7.—A two-reel seacoast story, by J. F. Abbott. Cleo Madison, Thomas Chatterton and Seymour Zeliff play the leads. The story is conventional and has no great dramatic strength. At the same time it is pleasing in its general effect. The hero rescues the fisher girl from drowning and later she saves him from the same fate at the hands of a jealous rival. The stretches of rugged coast are well pictured. This makes a good average number.

THE PRINCELY BANDIT (Gold Seal), Sept. 9.—A two-reel feature, with Grace Cunard as the madcap queen and Francis Ford as the bandit prince. This would be more attractive if greater attention had been paid to settings and costuming; they are too ordinary for a romantic type of plot. The young queen captures the bandid and then insists upon marrying him in preference to Count Michael. This is fairly strong.

HIRED AND FIRED (Universal), Sept. 11.—This two-reel number, by Bess Meredyth, continues the adventures of Timothy as a would-be moving picture star. Carter De Haven extracts considerable amusement out of the part, particularly in the second reel, where he attends a moving picture performance and watches his own efforts as Jim, a miner, whose wife has deserted him. The burlesque touches in the second reel are very good. The number as a whole makes an entertaining offering of the lighter type.

LOVE'S MASQUERADE, Sept. 13.—Emmett Campbell Hall constructed the plot of this three-part picture around an odd situation. A marriage license is obtained in one state and the contracting parties, aboard a boat, are in another state when the ceremony is performed, therefore the marriage is invalid. With this situation as a basis Mr. Hall conceived a story in which the happiness of four people is made possible by the anulment of the marriage. Mary Fuller, Harry Benham, Johnnie Walker and Margaret McRae portray the leading figures in a picture of more than ordinary interest.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE KID (Vitagraph), Aug. 28.—An attractive five-part production featuring Lillian Walker. The story treats of how a girl reporter ferrets out a murder mystery and in so doing reveals the fact that her own father, whom she has never known, is one of the backers of the beef trust. A full review of this picture will be found on another page of the magazine.

World Film Corporation

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR (World-Paragon), Sept. 4.—A picture of considerable merit, based on the estrangement of a husband and wife brought about by the man's too persistent quest of "the almighty dollar." The most notable scenes show a wreck in the New York subway. Frances Nelson, E. K. Lincoln, George Anderson and June Elvidge are in the cast. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

BURTON HOLMES BACK FROM HIS SUMMER TRAVELS.

Burton Holmes, the well-known traveler and lecturer whose motion pictures have been released exclusively through the Paramount Pictures Corporation, has returned from his summer journeyings, during which he was in search of new material. He is now deep in the preparation of five new travelogues, to be delivered by him personally in the principal cities throughout the country during the coming season, and in the preparation of new weekly travel pictures for Paramount.

Beginning with September, Mr. Holmes' first four Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture releases will be devoted to Scotland and Ireland—two releases on Scotland, one release on Ireland and another divided between the two countries.

NO CHANGE IN BLUEBIRD POLICY.

In the thought that a notice supplied by Bluebird Photoplays and published in last week's Moving Picture World might be misconstrued by some readers the assurance is given that there will be no departure from the Bluebird policy to advertise and promote the play rather than the player. Bluebird has entered upon the policy of making "The Play the Thing" with determination, is progressing with an extensive advertising campaign to that effect and there will be no return to the "star system" at any time. The leading players will always be of "star" caliber and standing in their profession, provided their talents are exactly suited to play the roles required of them, but always the play itself will be Bluebird's first consideration.

COBE VISITS WESTERN AND SOUTHWESTERN EXCHANGES.

Following The Unity Sales Corporation's policy of doing everything to aid the exchange men and the exhibitors to properly exhibit the features put out by its company, Mr. Cobe, vice-president and general manager, left this week on a tour of the Southwestern and Middle Western States. While away Mr. Cobe will visit The Unity Exchange office in Milwaukee, Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas. Mr. Cobe has but lately returned from a similar visit to the South Eastern territory, and before "The Yellow Menace" release Labor Day every exchange handling "The Yellow Menace" will have received a personal visit.

THURLOW BERGEN AGAIN APPEARS IN A PATHE PICTURE.

Thurlow Bergen, who has had leading parts in a number of well known Pathe features, is again to be seen in one. In "A Woman's Fight," the five-reel Pathe Gold Rooster Play made by Herbert Blache, he plays opposite Geraldine O'Brien.

Mr. Bergen will be remembered for his work in "The Stain," "The Boundary Rider," "A Prince of India," "The Fireman and the Girl," and "A Change of Heart," all Pathe five-reel features with the exception of the latter, a two-reel picture, which is to be released on September 10th.

MARIE DORO IN NEW LASKY PRODUCTION.

Under the direction of James Young, work has been begun on an elaborate production at the Lasky studios entitled "The Lash," in which Marie Doro will be starred. "The Lash," which provides for Miss Doro a role of great appeal, has practically an all-star cast. Among those who will appear with the star are Elliott Dexter, Raymond Hatton, James Neill, Veda McEvers and Josephine Rice.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A British H. O.

REFLECTING as it does the present situation in England, the Gaiety News, the house organ of the Gaiety, Twickenham, is of unusual interest. It is an eight-page issue about 9x11 inches, on colored paper, the colors being changed each week. It was started the latter part of June, when the house was reopened. One thing that attracts attention is the price charged for outside advertising. The makeup of the sheet gives a two-inch column on the front page and two 2¼-inch columns and one 3-inch column on the other pages, exclusive of the double middle page on which the program itself is run. The wide columns are taken for reading matter and the side columns given to trade advertising. Half of one of these columns (styled a quarter page) brings £1 an issue, save on the back page, which brings only three-fourths of that. Front page advertising is ten shillings for an inch and a half, each insertion, and yet the distribution is only 5,000 copies an issue. And a pound is more than five dollars at that. This would seem to be a pretty good price for over here, though it really is reasonable enough. The prices of admission run from 6 to 30 cents, plus a war tax of 2 to 4 cents. Season tickets are sold twelve for the normal price and the war tax is paid by the management as a bonus. The house runs continuously from 3 until 11 o'clock. Another hint of the war comes in the effort of the management to endow a "Twickenham flat" through the sale of war seals. A "flat" is an apartment in one of the houses to be built to permit disabled soldiers to live on their pensions instead of giving it all to the landlord. It is a sort of apartment hospital where the soldier may live with his family in a three-room and kitchen flat, and a practical and deserving charity. Incidentally, it is good business, since it links the town with a national movement that is held prominently in the public eye. A further suggestion is shown in the announcement that no aliens or eligibles are employed. The program shows a split week, one page being given to the first half and the other to the latter half of the week. Three or four comics, a couple of topicals and a longer subject make up the average program. Evidently the house believes in the personal note, for the vacant program space is taken up with such lines as "If you want to grumble do so to our manager, Mr. Ramsden; he has a kind heart"; "If there is a film you want to see, tell Mr. Ramsden and he'll get it for you"; "Mr. Ramsden, our manager, is a little man, but he has big ideas—give him a few more." In addition an announcement on the first page shares the space between the statement of ownership and the announcement that Mr. Ramsden will be at the theater daily from 2:30 until 11 o'clock. Evidently they know the value of personal contact and play it up intelligently. The remaining pages give a column of reading to the page, and much, if not most, of it is light stuff that only occasionally concerns the house or its program. It is what the management pays the reader for his trouble in reading, and it is what permits them to get a good price for the trade advertising. They do not make the too common mistake of making it all solid advertising. Much of the stuff is purely humorous, as, for instance, when they locate in the "News by telegraph and telephone" column of the Daily Mail the statement that Napoleon died 95 years ago, "and ask if the wireless came from above or below." It is a well-planned and well-handled sheet from every angle, even to a smart house talk column on the back page, where there is a running story on the house and its program.

Too Crowded.

The Regent, Arlington, Mass, gets out a throwaway program that would be better if set in a smaller type. We think it will pay the management to have a talk with the printer, who seems to be one of those who thinks that white space is a waste. The same material in a better choice of type faces would have shown well, since it offers a three-section program on a 5x9 inch sheet. There is plenty of space for the announcement, but not in the type employed. There is not more than a six-point space between lines from the top date to the scale of prices. Smaller faces would give white space that would throw the lines into relief and a seeming gain in size can be made by spacing between the letters with three or four two-em spaces or even brass one point. It is pretty hard to make some printers realize the value of display, and when they cannot they should be made to behave. In this case the printer works his ink badly, as well, and gives a poor impression, though the stock is plenty good enough. Blue ink does not always run well, and if he habitually spoils the impression he should be put back to black ink, which is safer.

Looks That Way.

A correspondent sends in a clipping from a college paper in which a reader comments on a program he saw at a local house which also announced morning matinees for women and midnight performances for men of the Twilight Sleep Film. According to the writer, the regular program stuff was worse than the twilight sleep discussion. In a way the man is right. The twilight sleep film is one of real importance. It is too dignified to be made the subject for midnight performances. Morning matinees for women only are entirely in keeping. Special showings for men are permissible, but that "midnight matinee" is too suggestive of the "blow off" of the old store shows, and inevitably it will and must react upon the business. Men do not stay up after midnight because they are interested in lessening the pains and perils of childbirth, but because they hope that the discussion will have its salacious points, and this is too well known to be misunderstood. If you have a film that is issued for real propaganda and not merely in the guise of propaganda, don't make a cheap bid with it. Respect it. You can make it do you more good in the long run, and you will help business in general as well.

Shoot.

William Wright, of the Kalem Company, sends in this post card, gotten out by the General Film Exchange in Denver for the new Kalem serial. The idea is good enough to pass along, for it is not alone the Kalem story it will fit, but it can be used as an attention getter for any copy. The original is on a post card, but it can be used for program work or in the newspapers. Any cut of a person pointing a gun is good attractor stuff and works on the same principle of optics that causes a person photographed full face to seem to follow the observer with his glance, whatever his position. We are glad to see that the General Film exchanges do some work. We have valuable aid from the Seattle and Kansas City branches of the V-L-S-E, but there are no Norths or Scotts in the General Film apparently. For that matter there are very few exchange managers who seem to give a whoop about the exhibitor's prosperity. They rest content with taking his checks and offer no exchange of ideas, and yet there are some exchange men who help their patrons get the money with which to make good the checks. This leads to the reflection that the Sherry Punch seems to have lost its punch.

Speaking of advertising from exchanges, David E. Dow, of the Bangor branch of Unicorn, sends in a capital mailing card that unfortunately will not reproduce, being blue on blue, but in a comparatively small space he tells all about the service he offers and gets the interest of the reader. It is good work.

Better Still.

Walter Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatsville, Pa., has again changed his program form and for the better. This time he uses a six-page folder so nicely designed that we are going to try and get one that will reproduce. Mr. Brooks is batting about 1.000 right along. Wait a couple of weeks and we'll show you the new one. It is not easy to describe.

Local Pride.

Tom North is not merely trying to sell film for V. L. S. E. He is working for the business and takes a pride in the business he is in. In a recent Pals he announces that the next time we get out an anniversary number the extreme northwest will be better represented if he has to sit up nights to write the stuff himself. By next year he'll have them trained to do it themselves, for Pals is a regular correspondence school in live wiring.

All There.

One of the handsomest and most appropriate programs for Carmen comes from J. A. Partington, of the Imperial, San Francisco. It is printed in red on the correct shade of yellow to get the Spanish colors, save for a photo-brown portrait of Miss Farrar in costume pasted to the front page, where a frame of red has been provided. The announcement is hand lettered and takes but comparatively small portion of the space. The second page gives another character picture and a sketch of the opera; the third page gives the cast and musical program, the latter including members of an Italian opera company. Five of the principal numbers were sung by a cast of five as a prelude to the picture. The back page gives a sketch of the star. It is all in excellent taste from very point of iew and we do not blame Mr. Partington for being proud of it.

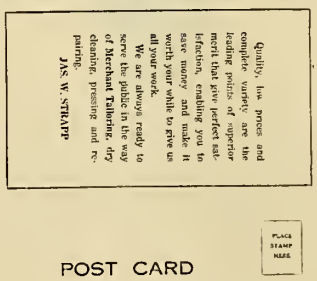
Days Also.



A. W. Eller, of the Bijou-Grand, Walla Walla, Wash., gets out a neat monthly program on a small Hennegan folder, but while he dates the days he does not name them. It works both ways, and it would be better to give both the day and date. A reader may not stop to figure out the day from the date where he will remember that a certain feature is to show next Wednesday or a week from Sunday. Otherwise he works his program very nicely, but will he please give his printer one solemn warning against all capital letters on the back page and kill him on the second offense?

Foolish Mr. Wall.

S. E. Wall knows by this time that he is welcome always, and that he is regarded with dislike only when he acquires writer's cramp. He should not start his letter as he does. Mr. Wall is an old and valued friend and he does not have to wait until hot weather to find a cordial greeting. He always comes with at least one idea, and the ideas are always good—though sometimes his printer is not—which is what he means in the last paragraph. Once we advised him to kick the printer, and he blushingly explained that the printer was a lady.

> You may say "any man that will sit down voluntarily to write a letter when the mercury is flirting around the 100 mark, must be effected with the heat," but honest, I'm not—I am perfectly cool, calm and collected; my reason for writing when it's so durn hot is that maybe no one else is writing now, and friend editor will give us the O. O. for want of something else to do.
> I am enclosing herewith a few of our post card programs which I find are very effective advertising; you will note that we enclose heralds, sometimes one, sometimes two, and often three, each stamped with day and date, all held together with a paper clip; you will also note that we use the one-cent stamp instead of getting a post office permit. I figure that a piece of mail with a stamp on it is more important looking than one with a "postage paid" permit, and while I realize it's some little job to lick all those stamps, I feel it's worth the effort.
> We send each of the ministers in town a program each week, primarily to keep them in close touch with the policy and efforts of the house in providing the proper kind of pictures.

We aim to get one program in each house in town, except a very few who we know that we could not possibly coax in on a bet.

We still use the hand-written post cards once in a while; the five or six days prior to July 4 were spent by me in earnest toil, proclaiming via pen and ink our Fourth of July program, and despite the extremely hot weather on that date we shattered all previous records, besides turning away a considerable number who got tired standing around waiting to get in.

Kindly comment on the enclosed post cards, and if you must unburden your system, heap the coals of wrath upon my head, for it was me that told the lady printer to do it that way. Thanking you for the many valuable things gleaned from your department, I remain.

Note what Mr. Wall says about the postage paid permit. He is in a small place (Piaae City, Ohio), where tho little things count, and he is watchful of the small things. The post office permit is a mighty handy thing in large ruas, but sometimes it pays better to lick the stamps. Tho post card programs to which he refers are four-page mailing cards which aro here shown front and back. The back is a trade advertisemeat and the house gets the double middle. As will be seen, there are two columns of display and a running story in between. This does not relate to the films directly, but to the house, and this is a sample of the sort of stuff he runs:

> FAR BE IT from us to light a candle and place it under a bushel, not while we can get hold of a candle stick; to do so would be poor advertising.
> However, in our advertising we aim to be conservative and at all times refrain from using such superlatives as "the world's greatest," etc.—these expressions are stock phrases of the circus and side show and have no place in honest advertising.
> If we have a program that we think you will like we want you to know it, and if we have one that you will not enjoy, we want you to know that, too; we would much rather that you stay away than to come and be disappointed; by saying disappointed, we do not mean that we allow pictures of an inferior quality to slip in unnoticed, but in our diversified program likes and dislikes are bound to find expression.

This plain talk, week after week, has done much to make Mr. Wall solid with his community. One of them announces that he offers no "speckled dramas," which is one reason why he can send his programs to the clergymen. Where the heralds are sent they are simply fastened inside with the paper clip that keeps the card together in the mail and all travel for the one cent, since two ounces are allowed on one stamp. This is a cheap form of advertisement, since manila stock is used.

Bowles Can Hustle.

George Bowles, of the Universal Exchange, Kansas City, believes in setting his patrons a good example. He goes after them just as strong as they should go after their patrons. One of his stunts is a set of mailing cards that look like cards for a dwarf street car instead of "postals", for they are 6x11 inches. We reproduce one for Shoes:

He does not get them all out in the same form. One for the stand-by stuff, Traffic in Souls, Damon and Pythias and the Submarine pictures, carries a lot of cuts, and a couple are the talks from Carl Laemmle. It is to be presumed that the recipient also gets the Universal house organ, but these are lifted out and presented so they have double force.

It Was—

Dan Carrothers, of Pocatello, Idaho, remarks that it was some time ago that he wrote us last. It was. Since then he had added a second house to his string. He writes:

> When I last wrote to your department, which was quite a while ago, my partner, Mr. Archibald, and I, were running the Orpheum theater in this city. The Orpheum has been under our management for the past five years. We have just lately taken over the Princess here, a photograph of which I will send you in the near future. We are running Triangle at the Orpheum and Paramount at the Princess.
> We have lately gotten together with the city paper and on each Saturday night they publish two full pages of our copy, in return for which we give them a 30-inch advertisement for each house. We have not had time as yet to figure out the direct results from this advertising, but it looks to me to be a very good proposition. We have only one paper in this town of fifteen thousand, and the circulation is comparatively big. You will notice that the Auditorium and we are the only houses that have thus far come in on the proposition.
> Pocatello supports seven moving picture shows and the competition is pretty strong. When we first came there was only two, so you can see that times have changed considerably. However, the town has grown and we have always been able to scratch out an existence.
> We will be glad to have your "Brickbats and Boquets" on this form of advertising, and thank you for any criticisms that you care to offer through the columns of your valuable paper.

If it is good, newspaper work is always the best form of reading. But newspaper work is not profitable if it costs more than it will bring in. We do not know what the rates are, but presume that they are not very high. At the same time four fifteens is 60 inches of space to pay for, and it should bring a considerable return to show a profit. Where there is but one sheet in the town it is apt to be generally read, and if the paper is liberal with its reading notices; and the Tribune is more than liberal, it should pay to be represented. It is not alone the direct return in the interest created in the particular stories, but a two-page photoplay department in the local paper gives the pictures in general a standing that nothing else can give. This, in itself, is worth something, and it is to be regretted, in one way, that the non-contributing houses obtain part of this benefit; though, on the other hand, the three houses in the scheme get the stamp of being the big advertisers and, presumably, are credited with having the better bills. Unless the cost is too heavy the scheme is a good one in a town where the big city papers do not detract from the popularity of the local daily. Both houses get a good display and do not crowd the space. The other house, the Auditorium, rather crudely advertises the "Battle Cry of Peace" as:

10,000 of it.
Over two hours of it.

The repetition of the "it" or indeed the first use, jars. It does not suggest a big subject, merely a long one.

Here It Is!

This is the store card of the Lehigh Orpheum, of which we wrote some weeks ago. Mr. Heiberger had a couple run off in black on white and dated the days, an addition which he thinks himself helps some. The chief value of naming day and date lies in the fact that the reader gets the day and date along with the film title. He may be appealed to by only one title on the list. If he remembers that, he does not have to look up the day and date. It is right there for him and he takes in the announcement as a whole. This is a point that many overlook. They put a date line somewhere and suppose that to be sufficient. But they do not realize that the date may be obscure and that it may be overlooked. In the case of these cards, for example, it may be that a date might be covered if it rose to the top of the card, but with the day and date always showing beside the title, the entire information is taken in at once. The reader does not get the title and forget to look at the date. He cannot help seeing, for instance, that The Dividend will be played on Wednesday, the 26th. In the original these cards are 7x11 inches and the colors are rotated. The titles are clear and distinct and there is no crowding anywhere. Indeed, it is seldom that we can even quibble over the Lehigh-Orpheum printing. It is almost invariably good both in text and type. These cards are particularly useful in that they can be used to a large extent to replace the house program if for any reason the latter must be abandoned, but they lack the intimacy of the program. Taken in conjunction with the program the combination cannot be beaten.

Waited a While.

Ross D. Rogers, of Dype, Ford & Rogers, Plainview, Texas, is one of those who tells you what you've missed after you've missed it. He has several novel stunts that he has used, but he doesn't like to take up time. He writes:

> I am enclosing two copies of recent issues of a weekly program that I get out for our two houses in this city. I have been an exhibitor for nearly four years, and have been in my present connection about one year. I have used house programs for the greater part of the time that I have been an exhibitor, and believe them to be the best medium of securing business in a small town, if put out to the people in the proper manner. I am at present using a mailing list. I have about five hundred dependable names on the list. Plainview is a town of about five thousand people, and I am going to build my list up to about a thousand names if possible to secure that many dependable ones. We have been using an eight-page program, with two pages of local advertising, for the past six months. I believe strongly in changing the style of my program quite often, and I use every means possible, in trying to prevent my programs from being confused from week to week. I use a different color ink each week, until the available supply of colors is exhausted, and then start with the first again.
> I have been a constant reader of the World, since the second month I embarked in the business, and have always paid particular attention to your department. I have used a number of ideas from your department, and some of them to great advantage. I have intended for a long time to start communicating with you, and sending in some of our ad matter, and am going to try to write you at intervals in the future. I have used several "stunts" that I have never heard of any other showman using, but will not take up any more of your time in this letter.
> We run two theaters in this city—the Ruby and the Olympic. We use pictures exclusively. We run continuous shows from 3 to 10 p. m. daily, have two Powers' 6B machines in each theater, a direct current device, and everything else in proportion. Our projection is as good as anything in Texas, and of course that means the U. S.
> The writer will appreciate anything you may be able to suggest to make the enclosed program better, and any criticism will be thankfully received.

The programs sent are along the same general line, four pages, 6x9 inches, with the middle pages set the wrong way, one-half being given to each house. This gives a column 3¾ inches wide and 9½ inches long. The make-up is awkward in that the program has to be turned after it is opened, but against this is the more advantageous distribution of space. With a margin the page to a house would give about a 2½-inch column width. At the same time there is so little display in the advertising (very evidently through a lack of type in the small sizes) we think that by taking a page to each house and using the layout of the Theater Louisiana, recently commented upon, the same relative display could be achieved and perhaps bettered. One program is better than the other in this respect, for they have an 18-point they use here for the main title each day. We hope soon to have one of the Theater Louisiana programs to reproduce as a guide. It is an unusually good form where much must be told in little space. For a display form the inside pages do well as they are, but display is less essential in a program than in newspaper work.

The back page is largely wasted. One shows an advertisement for Maria Rosa, and the other announces Paramount re-bookings and gives some "interesting facts" that do not interest as much as would real film talk. We think that it would be better to change this back page to a double column seven or eight-point face chat page, partly house talk and partly film news. Make is something that people not only will read but will want to read.

The scheme of rotation of inks or rotation of colors in paper has been suggested before, and it seems to work well where the colors are well chosen and match the stock, as in this case. It is better to change colors than to change form or general style too frequently. It is a better plan to make the format suggest the house wherever it is seen, and then let the color tell whether it's last week's program or the current issue. For that matter the dated days will perform this service. A five-hundred list in a five thousand town is not bad, but it can be built up through several schemes shown in Picture Theater Advertising, many of which have been suggested here. It is often possible to get the addresses of auto owners in the country from the garages or through the records of the State license department. These should be circularized on the extra big features if not regularly, but much business can be made from such a list if the programs are sent regularly. Other name-getting schemes are suggestion slips, the offer of a small souvenir, such as a post card or set of cards, or a preference list, each requiring the presentation of a signed slip.

It would be a good plan to get up an individual and striking house device to be used not only on the programs but on other matter. Then use this to top the front page with and take the lower two-thirds for text either the same two columns to the page as the back or a cross page editorial argument set in a ten or twelve-point across the page. At present the front page is largely waste, the most conspicuous thing being the Paramount cuts. It should be the house cut that is Paramount.

Paramount Pep.

Paramount Pep is the title of the house organ of the Kansas City branch of the Paramount. Between Pep, Pals and George Bowles the exhibitor must be kept dodging all the time. Here is a dose of pep that will digest any bad business indigestion:

> A timid manager classes advertising as an expense, and usually fails because he is a "flyer" breaking out here and there—now and then—he is the guy that looks upon advertising as a "gamble." He is a failure, or will be, is a safe bet.

There is a whole hookful right in those few lines. It is steady and consistent, often uphill work that counts. You cannot spend three dollars for throwaways and advance the argument that advertising doesn't pay. Don't gamble with a shoestring. Take off the boots, too, and get a return. There is more in the last issue, but nothing that comes up to this.

A One Pager.

The Elite, Merced, Calif., uses a single sheet of colored news for a monthly program, one page for one month. Each day gets three to five lines, single column, and the schedule is made up double column with a lot of small cuts for a frame. Below the heading is the advice "Tack this up in your room," and though the work is rather crude, we think that many will follow the suggestion. It is adapating the d. k. idea to the throwaway, but any condensed calendar will appeal to the fan, and for a small job this is very complete. It will work harder for the house and please the prospective patron more than a more pretentious job might.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising for Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Throwing the He-Cow.

Fool editors hurt the business in many ways, and more than one capable man who grew interested has quit again because he found such editorial asses. This type of editor assumes to know it all and thinks that if he says a story is bad for a certain reason it must be bad for that reason when as a matter of fact he dosen't know whether a story is poor or good and has no business undertaking to advise. One man lately refused a story on the grounds that a certain element was distasteful to his company. And eighteen out of twenty late releases by his firm showed that same element. Another lately sent out reports that he was in dire need of stuff and sent back stories just previous to the announcement with the statement that the company was stocked up for two years ahead. When edtiors needlessly and clumsily lie, it is not to be wondered at that trained writers who might become interested in photoplay grow disgusted and lose their new-born enthusiasm. Some manufacturers, if they really knew what their editors were doing to their business interests would sue them for libel and malicious mischief.

Not a Sign.

Because a company says it is in the market and then does not buy the script you rush in, it does not necessarily mean that they are not buying, and it is a waste of postage to hurry in that important fact. That you stuff does not sell is not sufficient evidence to warrant our going around and trying to kill the editor.

Looking Up.

The mail order schemes have been taking it easy of late, but St. Louis is still on the map. The Producers' League has taken over the Brennan System and now offers this for five dollars with a "membership" in the league which seems to consist in three coupons each entitling you to a letter of advice.

The Brennan "system" we have is merely a collection of mimeograph pages, eight and a half of which give instruction in writing, with a page of review questions and a sample script. The sheets are bound with a colored backing sheet and staples. It is not as hurtful as some instructions since it is cribbed from old but standard books, but as a five-dollar proposition it is incomplete and costly.

The circulars read like Thomas at his best or the Cruze school of acting stuff. One tells of the "working girl" who won $10,000 with a play she once tore up. Then she "Quits work—lives in Ease. Gets ten proposals to wed the first day. Offered free rides by Auto Salesmen. Importuned by Agents, but holds on to money." This seems to be the stenographer who won the Thanhouser prize. She did not write a play or even try to. She guessed at the ending of a serial and won. Such a statement seems to be outside the limit of safety if the post office ever gets interested. Another tells how "Miss Beta Bruel," a New York "working girl," wrote 250 plays in one year and sold 172 of them to a single company." The narrator fails to add that she was a staff writer at the time. Another exhibit tells of a company offering $100,000,000 for photoplays, probably the Famous Players' offer of $1000 each for a hundred plays: what's a little thing like a few million to a mail order concern?

Think This Over.

Writing apropos of our reminiscences of the early days of the photoplay in the Convention Number, Edward J. Montagne, of the Vitagraph, says:

> While reading your article in the current number, I grew reminiscent and it occurred to me that if you could write up the early Inquesters, the hardy little band of pioneer script writers that you organized about five years ago, the article would both be enlightening and inspiring to the novice of today who thinks all editors are crooks, that no one wants to buy a good story and that everything in general is rotten. A good percentage of the old crowd hold down lucrative positions at the present time, yet a good many of us were as pessimistic then as the writer is today.

Not all were novices then. George Hennessy was a star writer, but ill health has set him back. Bennie Schulberg was then, as now, with the Famous Players. James Carroll dropped plays for trade paper editorship. Benjamin Barondess is building up a fine law practice, and Edmund Hirsch is with Bradstreet's. On the other hand, Harry O. Hoyt, now editor for Rolfe, was undecided between law and scripts. Marc Edmund Jones had just given up his clerical position, and since has held down several editorial jobs. C. Doty Hobart is in an editorial position, and Bill Courteney is another who caught on to the studio end. Dr. Reed has just landed a prize play for his first sale, and others who were then sure that they could not write or that it was useless are sitting in the seats of the mighty or just below the throne, and some of the present day kickers five years from now will reminisce just as has Mr. Montagne from his own editorial seat and will laugh at their 1916 foolishness. We do not know a single writer—real writer—of five years ago who is not making money now if they stuck to the business. Be like them, minus the kick.

Just Wait.

The time is coming when the synopsis alone will not be sufficient, and some of the present day stars are going to find that a dark and dismal period, for they cannot write continuities. Lately we saw a couple of reels written by an author who has sold more than a thousand dollars worth of stuff since the first of the year. It was awful. He could give a suggestion that could be fixed up by a staff man, but could not write a continuity as good as the average child. A girl walked into the front door of the house and was seen the next moment in bed and one-sixteenth of a second after that scene ended was out feeding the chickens in broad daylight. There were no break or time leader or anything else. If you are selling synopses on idea and luck, begin now to study continuity writing if you want to pay the same income tax in 1918, for the synopsis only cannot continue indefinitely.

Eventually this business will be for writers and not freaks. It will offer a market only to those who are fully qualified to do their work and who cannot only tell what a story should be about but who can tell the story itself. It is a business for authors and not touts, and while the touts are having their day the authors—real authors—should not become discouraged, but should work harder than ever that there may be a sufficient number of competent writers when the day does come.

Watch Out.

Keep a close eye on the changes that will be announced from time to time in the news department or you will presently find yourself minus a lot of scripts. With the many changes and new combinations there is bound to be a confusion that will result in lost scripts. The Lubin plant, for instance, is practically shut down and scripts sent there will not be given the customary care, if, indeed, they are accepted. This is only a single example. Read the news columns each week and Ribbons.

If you use one color ribbons and hate to throw them away merely because the type track is worn almost white, send fifteen cents for a copy of December Writers' Monthly, the address of which is Springfield, Mass. This issue contains a simple treatment that will freshen a ribbon not once but several times and greatly reduce this expense. To those who have seen the paragraph and have not tried it thinking it too foolish to be useful it may be said that the scheme works perfectly, for we have tried the idea and found it good, for which reason we are passing it along.

Trade Unions.

Because we have recently printed several stories designed to let a little light into the dark corners of manufacturers' brains, it does not follow that we have a red flag waving from our office window and bombs under the desk, nor are we lending the attentive ear to talk about trade unions that will "make" manufacturers pay better prices—to members of the union. We know perfectly well that nothing of this sort will be in any sense practical and have no desire to help radical photoplay writers get any crazier than they are at present. We will form no such organization, aid no such organization and, to the contrary, we shall fight any such organizatiou as being detrimental to the best interests of the business. This platform should be clear enough.

There is just one thing that will lead manufacturers of film to pay better prices and to the right people. That is self-interest. They cannot be threatened or coerced; they must be convinced, and events of the past few weeks and the coming months will be far more convincing than the flatulent remarks of the author-agitator. Spend your time thinking out good story ideas instead of writing letters.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 152.

What would you regard as an extreme practical distance from screen to back row of seats? Why?

Solar Comes Back.

John Solar, Watertown, N. Y., comments on Martin's July 8th article concerning chromatic aberration as follows:

Replying to friend Martin's letter in the July 8th number; also refering to his article on Chromatic Aberration in Feb. 19th issue. In passing a ray of light through a lens two actions take place simultaneously, viz.; the deflection, or bending, of the ray, while at the same time it is separated into the colors of the spectrum. The amount of deflection depends on the angle of incidence, the form of the lens, and its refractive power. The amount of dispersion or the separation between the red and green of the same ray depends on the density of the glass, and any variation, with the same density, is due to the focal length of the lens. From this we can see that the cause for the deflection of a ray is of an entirely different nature from that for the dispersion of the same ray. Rays of light passing through the border of a lens are deflected to a point on the axis nearer to the lens than a ray passing through some point near the center; this is called spherical aberration (collective lens). As dispersion is dependent solely upon the density of the glass, the separation between the red and green of these rays will be the same for those passing through the border as for those passing through nearer the center of the lens, and this is called chromatic aberration. For illustration let us suppose a ray passing through a lens is deflected, no matter what the cause for this deflection may be, to a point say five inches from the lens. In such case the green part of the ray will be a trifle less, and the red a trifle more than five inches from the lens. As we have seen, the colors must follow the general direction of the rays, so that chromatic aberration must follow spherical aberration, or any other cause for the deflection of a ray of light.

From Martin's Figs. 1 and 2, in the issue mentioned above, it is evident he has considered a light ray from one side of the crater or light source to be orange, and from the opposite side green after passing the lens, and the difference in the angles of incidenee the cause for the difference in deflection for the red and green. This gives a width of spectrum or dispersive interval much greater than we could get with any glass. He also shows in his figures, and states that at the meeting point of the red and green rays the light is white, and continues white after passing this point. If this were true, one of the great optical difficulties would be eliminated. For instance: take his fig. 2 and draw in a number of rays from all parts of the lenses. We will see that at the focal point, or at some point between the lens and screen, every red ray has been crossed by a green ray, and, according to his statement, we would have white light at the screen. If this is true why go to all the trouble of correcting a lens for chromatic aberration.

Any single ray from the crater, or light source, is composed of the several colors of the spectrum. The green in this ray is more refrangible than the red, therefore in passing through the lens the green will be deflected more than the red, and for this ray we have a different index of refraction for each color, and this difference in refraction for the colors being considered is the dispersive interval.

For instance: For hard crown glass, u_r the index of refraction for red is 1.5171 and u_g the index of refraction for green is 1.5231. If we add these and divide by two we have the mean index of refraction for red and green $u. = \frac{1.5171 + 1.5231}{2} = 1.5201$ u.

$\frac{u_g - u_r}{u - 1}$ = The dispersive power of the glass, with respect to the red and green rays. Then $\frac{1.5231 - 1.5171}{1.5201 - 1} = .0115$ Dispersive power red and green.

For dense Flint glass:

u_r u_g

Mean refrective index, $u = (1.6224 + 1.6347)/2 = 1.6285$.

Dispersive power $(1.6347 - 1.6224)/.6285 = .0196$.

This fact of high and low refractive and dispersive powers enable us to put together combinations of lenses by which the aberrations may be corrected, and still have some power in the combination. We can correct a lens with another of the same glass and powers, but the negative power would have to be equal to the positive power, hence we would have no power left in the combination.

Referring to my Fig. 1, it shows how chromatic aberration is corrected by the dispersive lens. The lenses are widely separated to show the dispersion more clearly. From the figure we see that the green is deflected more than the red in any of the rays passing through the collective lens. This lens is thick in the center and thin at the border, the dispersive lens being thin at the center and thick at the border. The green in passing through this dispersive lens will again be deflected more than the red, but in an opposite direction, consequently at some point as at A, the red and green will be united in white light, and after passing this point will be again separated into red and green the same as they were before crossing, with this difference: the red and green will have changed relative positions. From the figure we can see that, in order to have white light at the focal point of lenses, the dispersive power of lenses must be such as will bring the red and green to a point in exactly the same plane at which the image is focused. This is one of the several difficulties encountered in correcting lenses.

The following quotations are given in proof of some of the statements I have made. From Light for Students: "When white light is transmitted through an ordinary lens, the general direction of the light is altered, and in addition the light is decomposed into its constituents (colors), which are deviated to different extents. In other words, deviation and dispersion are both produced. It is possible by using lenses of different substances to obtain deviation without any great amount of dispersion."

From A System of Applied Optics: "Thus the liner Chromatic Aberration, as measured along the optic axis, varies directly as the square of V (V, is the distance from the condenser to the aperture, one of the conjugate focal distances), the distance to which it is projected by the lens, just as in the case of spherical aberration, only with this difference, that the liner chromatic aberration is quite independent of the aperture or form of the lens, and the state of divergence or otherwise of the entering rays, the chromatic aberration depends only upon the power of the lens and the dispersive power of the material."

Figs. 2 and 3.

Refering to my Fig. 2. To avoid confusion I am neglecting Spherical Aberration. This shows the focal planes for green and red images, green at F. F. and red at E. E. These planes are located as shown in the Fig. 2 by the following calculations. The radius of curvature r_1 for the first condenser is 3.35 in. (taken from a condeser intended for 6½ in. focal length) the second condenser r_2 is 3.8042 (taken from 7½ in. condenser). The index of refraction u_g is 1.5231 for the green ray.

By the formula for focal length.

$$\frac{1}{f_1} = (u-1)\frac{1}{r_1} \text{ and } \frac{1}{f_2} = (u-1)\frac{1}{r_2}$$

Then:

$$(1.5231-1)\frac{1}{3.35} = 6.404 \qquad (1.5231-1)\frac{1}{3.8042} = 7.272$$

$$\frac{1}{f_1}+\frac{1}{f_2} = \text{E. F.} \qquad \frac{1}{6.404}+\frac{1}{7.272} = 3.405 \text{ E. F. for two lenses.}$$

For the conjugate distances the arc and aperture

$$\frac{1}{\text{E. F.}} - \frac{1}{V} = \frac{1}{U}.$$ In which U the arc distance and V green image distance. Then

$$\frac{1}{3.405} - \frac{1}{20} = 4.103.$$ The distance from the first principal point of the first condenser to the arc. The first principal point is .57 in. from the first surface of the first condenser. Therefore 4.103 — .57 = 3.633 the distance from the condenser to the arc. In the above I assumed V the distance from the condensers to the green image to be 20 inches. We now have the conjugate distances for the green ray 4.103 and 20. For the magnification or diameter of the green image, assuming the crater to be .25 in. Then by proportion we have

4.103 is to .25 as 20 is to the green image $\frac{.25 \times 20}{4.103} = 1.22''$.

The diameter of the green image as shown at F. F. The next step is to find the distance from the green image to the red.

The formula is $\triangle V = \frac{\triangle u}{u-1} \times \frac{1}{F} \times V^2$. In which $\triangle$ is the symbol for increase or decrease, as the case may be, $\triangle u$ is the difference between the index of refraction for red and green rays, 1.5231 — 1.5171 = .006 $\triangle u$, and u is the mean index of refraction for the same rays 1.5231 + 1.5171/2 = 1.5201.

Therefore we have $\frac{.006}{1.5201-1} \times \frac{1}{3.405} \times 20^2 = 1.36$. The distance from the red to the green image, as shown at E. E., Fig. 2. We found the green image to be 20 in. from the condenser, then 20 + 1.35 = 21.35, the distance from the condenser to the red image. For the diameter of this red image, by proportion, 4.103 is to .25 as 21.35 is to the diameter of the red image, then we have $\frac{.25 \times 21.35}{4.103} = 1.3''$, as shown at E. E., Fig. 2.

The dispersive interval at F. F. for any of the four spectrums, A, B, C, D, Fig. 2, is .0945. Meaning by this that the separation between the red and green rays is .0945 in., nearly one-tenth of an inch. (This is a trigono metrical calculation and I have inserted the result only.) This point width of spectrum was my reason for a statement of impossibility in regard to Martin's Fig. 2, where he shows a width of spectrum the full diameter of the image.

In drawing Fig. 2, I have assumed no spherical aberration, in order to avoid confusion. But with a pair of condensers as shown we have a great amount of spherical aberration, the focal points of the red and green images will not lie in the same plane, they will be curved approximately as shown in Fig. 3. And the circle of least chromatic aberration will lie midway between the red and green images, but will be curved similar to the colored images; from this we can see the difficulty in getting clear, even illumination at all points of the aperture.

I would not presume to butt into this particular argument, partily because I don't understand the matter very well (though for heaven'e sake don't tell anyone) and partly because I am getting ready for a long trip into Canada, and have not the time to go into it carefully. I therefore publish the matter, leaving the argument up to Brothers Martin, Solar, Griffiths, Armstrong and La Grow.

Hopes to be Benefitted.

G. A. Yaker, Anadarko, Okla., encloses $4 for a Handbook, and says:

> I have a set of Hawkins' Electrical Guides, two volumes of Talbot's works, and some other books on motion pictures which have no bearing on projection. Am extremely interested in the questions which are running in the department, and certainly am sorry to see them come to an end. I am also much interested in the lens dope that is running at present, and hope to be greatly benefitted thereby. This house (The Columbia) recently changed hands, and I have one of the best managers in this part of the country to work for. Any time I need repaire he is willing to get them; also he cooperates with me to give the best possible projection. In closing I wish you every success.

Well, the questions won't end just now, though I cannot say when they will. Glad to know you have a good manager who understands that without excellence in projection the box office will suffer. The Handbook has gone forward.

Yes, It's Absurd.

Camden, N. J., writes:

> What do you think of this? House cost $150,000; projection equipment, $2,000; organ, $15,000, and the first week's expense sheet shows organist's salary $40 for thirty-six hours and $15 for relief; operator and assistant, $23, and the hours are all the time the theater is open.

Well, Camden, it looks to me as though the organist was getting the cream and the operator the skimmed milk. However, don't forget this fact: the organist never lets pass any opportunity to impress the boss with the fact that he is an artist and not a common workman. On the other hand, the average operator takes little or no pains to try to convince the manager that he is anything more than an ordinary workman; and that, Camden, has considerable to do with the matter, let me tell you. The operator can, by the power of his organization, to a considerable extent raise his wages, but he cannot land in the salary class except by one process, and that is to convince the manager that he is in the class which requires brains in addition to hands.

Slide Projection.

Frank B. Howe, Los Angeles, Cal., who conducts a Motion Picture Publicity business in that city, writes:

> Of late I have been much interested in investigating the projection of slides in theaters, and I want to ask if you won't say a few words in the department which may cause operators to give a little more attention to this branch of projection. The audiences of high class theaters are very apt to become hostile to even the few slides announcing coming features, if the slides be improperly projected, and it seems to me that care should be taken to prevent their refusing to accept any slides at all, since undoubtedly the stereopticon offers a very effective way for the exhibitor to reach his patrons with announcements of coming attractions. This is borne in upon us very frequently by seeing slides, which we knew to be perfect in photography when sent from our laboratories, appear on the screen in such manner they could hardly be read. Upon investigation I have found that many operators really do not know what is wrong, although the matter is perfectly simple. The main trouble seems to be the formation of a moisture film on the slide. Slides are of glass and when taken from room temperature and subjected to heat, such as comes from the concentrated rays of a powerful arc lamp a film of moisture is often formed. Particularly is this true in a damp climate, where there is bound to be more or less moisture in the atmosphere.
> This difficulty can be easily remedied by keeping the slides in a rack, or open wire basket, directly over the lamphouse. They will there receive sufficient heat to thoroughly warm and dry them. In this connection it might be set forth that there is nowadays practically no moisture inside the slide. This was formerly not true, since gelatine emulsion will draw moisture from the air. Nowadays, however, the slides are heated just before binding, thus expelling the moisture, and if manufacturers go to this trouble to insure perfect projection, should not the operator take a little trouble to complete the good work?
> The breaking of slides from heat is brought about through the same cause and can be remedied in the same manner, viz: by having slides quite warm before placing in the light. The third point which operators seem in some cases to forget is the relation between cleanliness and Godliness. What is more disgusting to an audience than the operator's dirty thumb mark which has been imprinted on the slide and projected to the screen. In fact, any dirt on the slide shows on the screen, and looks bad.

At the end of a rather long letter, friend Howe says: "I would like to say that, although I do not know the gentleman, and don't think he runs any of our slides, the operator at the Garrick theatre, Los Angeles, tribe increase."

All that Brother Howe says is true, except that I very much doubt if comes just about as close to our idea of perfection in the matter of slide projection, and films as well, as it is possible to come. May his any process can entirely eliminate moisture inside the slide if the climate be a naturally damp one. Possibly he is right, however, though I doubt it. I thoroughly agree with the correspondent that operators are, as a general proposition, extremely careless in the matter of slide projection, and I have time and again called attention to this item. Whatever excuse may be offered for breakage, there certainly can be no excuse under heaven for a dirty slide. Finger marks, dust and dirt on slides spell slovenliness, laziness and incompetency. It is an open advertisement, made by the operator himself, of his own inefficiency.

Cornell Clubs.

G. M. Best, Ithaca, N. Y., says:

> This is my first letter to the department, but having read your writings for some time, I feel like an old friend.
>
> Am at present in charge of the films belonging to Cornell University, which same are sent around to the various Cornell Clubs in the country. I find that after they have been used a month or so the emulsion side becomes covered with oil, and using a piece of absorbent cotton does not seem to remove much of it. Kindly tell me if there is any better way. I should think the exchanges would have to have some way of removing oil from the film.
> Have been in the operating room for several years, and am at present a student in the mechanical engineering college, as well as the operator for the college picture machine. We have a new Power's Six A, hand driven, 110 volts D. C. direct from the campus power house, and all the shows are lectures, on educational subjects.

If you come to Binghamton, Elmira, or Syracuse on your tour I would greatly appreciate being notified, as I very much want to hear your lecture, and to have the pleasure of meeting you. If you find time to come to Ithaca can assure you of a very cordial reception.

As to oil on the film, I would suggest that your various clubs be provided with a film cleaner, which you can procure from any good supply house for about $5.00. Among others I would recommend the Mortimer and the Ideal, which are illustrated and described on Pages 206 and 207 of the third edition of the Handbook. You can also procure chemicals for use on the pads of these cleaners which will aid in removing the oil. If I ever get around in the neighborhood of Ithaca, I will try to call. That is about all I can promise at this time. It is possible I may deliver a lecture in Binghamton later. Don't know positively, as have not heard from either Exhibitors' League or operators' union there as yet.

Stereoscopic Pictures.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., sends in the following on stereoscopic projection. I publish it because I believe the matter will probably be of at least some considerable interest to a good many of our readers, though from a careful examination of the photographs submitted I don't personally believe there is any possibility of the thing working out into practical form.

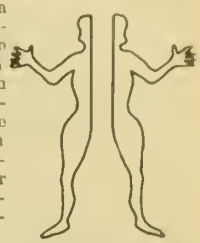
And right here let me display my ignorance again. I don't believe that the stereoscopic effect is altogether due to the viewing of the object with two eyes. I think, and have thought for a long time, that the stereoscopic effect is due most largely to the item "distance." Take two things of equal size, set one of them 10 feet away, and the other 20, and there will be a very decided difference in the appareat size of the two objects. But while I believe this has a great deal to do with the matter, I do not think it has all to do with it, by reason of the fact that in a photograph the same thing obtains. It does not seem reasonable to me, however, that the infinitesimal differeuce in angle when viewing a thing say 50 feet away can possibly bring about the third dimension to any appreciable extent; also if you will look fixedly at an out-door scene and close one eye I do not believe you will notice any appreciable difference in the stereoscopic effect. It is considerable of a puzzle, and I submit Brother Martin's article as covering one phase of the matter.

True stereoscopic pictures have never been produced, except by the one lone method of faithfully reproducing the conditions under which the organs of sight normally operate. The two photographs of a stereoscopic pair are merely reproductions of the retinal images that would occur if the observer were looking at the natural object instead of the pictures, and an artificial optical device, the stereoscope, is then employed to direct each eye upon the picture intended for it. All this is very simple, and well enough understood, without any extended explanation, but the real causes of stereoscopic vision have never yet been satisfactorily explained. The attempts of physiology, optics and other technique to fully account for the phenomena have never been gratifying, and have always left a residual doubt, which in every case points towards the psychological as the true source of the cause.

Let us consider: When we look with only one eye at a natural sceue, an object in the foreground will appear to be, say, to the right of another object in the background. If we now use only the other eye, the same object in the foreground will appear to be located to the left of the other one in the background. The two retinal impressions can therefore be called symmetrical to each other in the sense that one is right-eyed and the other is left-eyed.

But now again consider the nature of the two retinal pictures. If the observer will alternately open and close each eye in succession, the object in the foreground will appear to move to and fro across the scene in the background. That is to say, in the right-eyed picture the object in the foreground is in one place, and in the left-eyed picture it is in another.

This is equivalent to saying that when the scene is viewed with both eyes open simultaneously, the object in the foreground is in two different positions at the same time (the one that Mark Twain missed).



This last statement appears to be a logical absurdity, but again consider the situation: It has been demonstrated by psychological experiment that when using only one eye, a person is but feebly conscious, or aware of the existence of depth or distance measured in the third dimension. The mental impression is the same as secured by looking at an ordinary photograph, in which depth or perspective is merely suggested, but not fully present. Therefore the separate retinal pictures in each eye are really only two-dimensional.

We therefore derive the statement that under normal conditions of vision the impression received by the mind is that of two simultaneous, two-dimensional pictures, in which identical objects in the foreground occupy two different positions at the same time.

This is still illogical, but we have noted before that the two pictures are symmetrical to each other. Consequently we deduce the fundamental principle of stereoscopic vision:

Two symmetrical, two-dimensional objects cannot exist in the same position at the same time in a two-dimensional condition; but may in a three-dimensional condition.

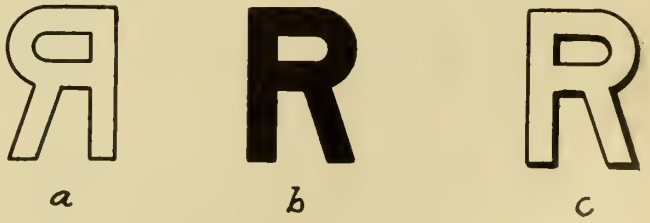
To illustrate the truth of this conclusion, cut out two symmetrical shaped objects of paper and place them upon a table top, thus:

Now, so long as the two symmetrical objects remain in contact with the flat surface, i. e., maintain a two-dimensional condition, no amount of shifting around or adjustment will cause them to coincide, or occupy the same position at the same time; but if one of them is lifted from the table and turned over in the third dimension, then the two objects can be readily made to coincide. Thus it is seen that the third dimension, which is the vital condition necessary for stereoscopic vision, is really caused or brought into existence by bringing two symmetrical, two-dimensional objects into coincidence.

Problem.—To produce the third-dimensional condition, cause two symmetrical, two-dimensional objects to come into simultaneous coincidence.

Demonstration.—Neither the white letter a and the black letter b suggest the appearance of relief or perspective. But the two letters a and b are symmetrical to each other. Now, if letter a is placed over letter b in such manner that a coincidence is almost effected, we get the result shown in letter c. Here is what happens: In letter c, two symmetrical, two-dimensional objects have been so nearly superimposed that the impression conveyed to the mind by the eyes is to the effect that two symmetrical, two-dimensional objects are trying to occupy the same position at the same time (in flat land). But the faculty of reason cannot stand for any such doings in a two-dimensional condition; consequently, the only way out of the dilemma thus furnished by the senses, and so produce harmony, is to introduce the third dimension. Therefore the letter R at c stands out in bold relief, giving the appearance of actual perspective.

Application to Photography.—It requires no added explanation to point out the fact that a photographic negative and its positive print bear the same relation to each other as letters a and b just referred to. Consequently it is evident that if a negative and positive film are placed in very nearly exact coincidence, the appearance must be similar to that shown in letter R at c, and a certain amount of relief or perspective will be added to the picture.



This is exactly what has been done in the moving picture and other films I send you herewith. The work is very crude, as the process is in a very undeveloped condition, but an examination of the pictures will show that the figures have a has relief effect very similar to the letter R at c.

The difficulty evidently lies in the fact that the picture is practically reduced to a monochrome, in which only the shadow effects show, while the tones are almost wholly lacking, and the picture looks much like a crayon drawing.

Realizing this, the writer tried another expedient, as follows: A very light positive print is first made from the negative. After development and drying, the positive is exactly superimposed upon the negative and the two are placed in contact with the final film to be printed. In this position the negative emulsion is in contact with the sensitized surface and the positive emulsion is separated from that of the negative by the celluloid thickness of two films. Consequently, if the pictures are in exact register and the light is passed obliquely through the films, the necessary displacement in register will be secured.

The final result is that the negative does nearly all the printing, while the weak positive will add just a little of the desired shading effect, without detracting much from the true photographic results as secured by the negative. An example of this method is shown in the two kodak pictures, No. 1 being a normal print and No. 2 being produced by the method just described. There are many other variations in application which may prove effectual if developed, but space does not permit any further description here.

Note.—In this article two special terms are used, "two-dimensional" and "three-dimensional." Lest there be any misunderstanding as to their respective meanings, a two-dimensional condition is merely the condition treated of in plane geometry in which objects or things are regarded as existing wholly within a plane or a realm possessing only length and width but not thickness. On the other hand, a three-dimensional condition is the realm in which objects possess or appear to possess the quality of having length, breadth and thickness as all real objects in nature actually do.

The elementary condition of all objects as perceived by the organs of sight is that of symmetrical or double-formed entities existing in a realm of only two dimensions; but by a synthetic process which is a normal function of the reasoning faculty, these double entities force themselves into coincidence and in so doing become projected into a three-dimensional condition. This coincidence substitutes an identity in place of the symmetry first mentioned and if this identity is analyzed back again into a two-dimensional condition it again becomes a symmetrical or double form.

The explanation of just how these processes of analysis and synthesis operate will now be attempted with both theoretical and practical purposes in view.

The Auto-Arc Control.

While in Chicago I made as thorough investigation as was possible, under the conditions with regard to the merits of the new "Auto-Arc Control," the invention of Kenneth Walley, a Chicago operator, which is about to be placed on the market by the American Lighting Company, of Chicago.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Sam Levine, the thoroughly capable general manager in charge of the theaters operated by Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer, I was privileged to witness the operation of these machines in the Orpheum theater. I also talked with the Orpheum operator with regard to their merits, and his opinion ought to have weight, as the Orpheum has been using them for more than a year. His verdict was favorable. In fact he pronounced the controller to be a success. I cannot, of course, utter any final, authoritative opinion without additional evidence, which is not at present available. However, Mr. Levine speaks well of them, and the thing looks very promising on the face of it. I have suggested to the American Lighting Company the advisability of placing at least three sets of these controllers in representative theaters outside of Chicago, so that we may obtain an opinion which will be in no possible way biased. This they have agreed to do, so that, a little later on, I hope and believe that I will be able to give the proposition the unqualified endorsement of the department.

Fig. 1.

The Arc Control presumes to do exactly what its name indicates, viz: control the arc length, or, in other words, automatically maintain the length of the arc. The device consists of a neatly japanned iron frame about 11 inches in length, 6½ inches in width, and 11 inches in height. Fig. 1 shows the general appearance of the controller. The connections up to the machine table switch are made in the usual way, but instead of running to the lamp and the rheostat from the machine table switch, you connect from the machine table switch through the rheostat to the binding posts marked "line," Fig. 1, and from the binding posts marked "lamp," Fig. 1, you connect to your arc lamp. The rheostat may, of course, be placed, and often is placed between the main operating room switchboard and the machine table switchboard. This will in no way affect the operation of the device, but is nevertheless very bad practice, since the rheostat should be dead when the machine table switch is pulled. The controller will operate either on line or arc voltage, though arc voltage is preferred, and is recommended by the manufacturer.

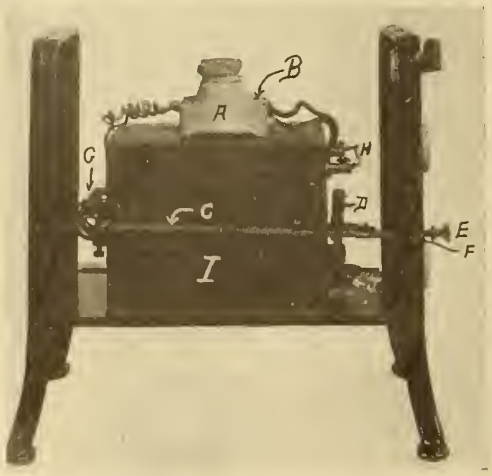


Fig. 2.

In Fig. 2 we see the controller with the casing removed. It is an enclosed relay coil, operating controlling armature G, which is held normally open by spring C, the tension of which is regulated by knob E. The tension on spring C regulates the length of the arc, and has a 20 ampere range. If spring C is set to maintain a voltage of 50 at the arc, then that arc length will be automatically maintained by the instrument, although the actual operation of the device is controlled and set in motion by change in amperage. The device controls within ⅜ of an ampere, which means, in effect, that the voltage of the arc will not vary more than ¼ of a volt, and this in turn means that the length of the arc is maintained with but slight change, which is of course the object sought.

Under this arrangement the manufacturer claims that either a drop or a raise in line voltage will operate to cause the machine to do just exactly what the operator would be obliged to do, under similar conditions, with a hand feed lamp.

In Fig. 2, A is a set of fuses, carrying approximately 1 ampere, designed to protect the solenoid attached to the lamphouse, which connects with binding post B. This solenoid operates a steel ratchet attached to a lever. This ratchet-lever is pulled back by a spring. The ratchet impinges on a ratchet wheel 2½ inches in diameter, which is attached to the carbon feed rod of the lamp. The operation of the device is as follows: When the arc lengthens slightly, thus slightly decreasing the amperage, the magnetic field of coil I, Fig. 2, is weakened which has the effect of weakening the force exerted by coil I, Fig. 2, on armature G, whereupon the tension of spring C, Fig. 2, overcomes the attraction of coil C for armature G, which causes the aforementioned ratchet to get exceedingly busy and rotate the ratchet wheel, thus feeding the carbons closer together, broadly speaking this is the idea. The controller may be fitted to the lamphouse of any projector. The mechanism is simple and remarkably free from complications.

Armature D, Fig. 2, is merely a safety device, which it is not necessary to explain at this time as it has nothing to do with the actual operation of the machine. H is the binding post marked "lamp" in Fig. 1, and J is the binding post marked "line" in Fig. 1.

We will have more to say about the Arc Control after a more thorough test has been made, which same we trust will be supplied in the very near future. I might add that the controller, as shown in Fig. 1, may be placed in any convenient position, but ordinarily is placed on the floor under the lamphouse.

Cannot Do Without "World."

A. W. Hornby, Haileybury, Ont., says:

Just a few lines to let you know I am still on the map, although I almost got off it when I came up into this north country. You will notice by the letterhead that I have changed my abode, as I was in Port Hope until last March. I am always anxious to receive the next issue of the World, and would be glad if you would send it to the above address. I cannot see how some maangers and operators can do without it. I can't, and will frankly admit it, because I make no pretence of "knowing it all." We are doing a good business here; admission 25 cents, in return for which I give a good, clean program, and nearly as possible perfect projection.

Busy Holding Down His Job.

F. F. Layman, Washington, Ind., says:

Enclosed find answer to question 142. It is my first attempt, because I have been pretty busy holding down my job. However, I have studied many of the questions, and thank you for the valuable assistance you have given in the past.

That is what all men should be, viz., "pretty busy holding down their jobs." I know I am. I take my job seriously; also I have yet to see a man who failed to take his job seriously amount to anything. The man who takes his job seriously is always "busy holding it down." He is usually absorbed in his duties. He experiences absolutely no difficulty in finding plenty to do—and then some. Your statement that you are busy holding your job down inspires me with the belief that you are a real operator, or, if not, you certainly will be in due course of time.

Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators.

The Future of Motion Picture Photography as a Profession.

In a recent editorial article in this magazine by Louis Reeves Harrison entitled "No Brains Required," the following paragraph occurs:

> Even photography is no longer regarded as a merely mechanical process. It has developed into a subtle art in this new avenue of opportunity. Brains are required to bring out fine picture composition in photographing the action of a story. Brains are required to select such settings as will harmonize with the atmosphere and mood of the story. Brains are required to grasp and interpret the characters of the story. Brains are required to direct the movements of interpreters and to supervise the visualization of the story.

There are probably more men who call themselves motion picture photographers not working at the present time than ever before in the history of the business.

The wages paid, for what seems to many the mere turning of a crank and a little mechanical knowledge appear so enormous and gratifying that it has attracted a large number of men totally unfitted for the profession of which they claimed to be masters as soon as they were able to thread a camera and learned in which direction to turn the crank.

On the other hand, there has always been a dearth of men trained and fitted for the profession of cinematography. The business is so new, its methods as yet not standardized, that men who have happened to have the requisite ability and training to become proficient in the art are very few indeed.

Practically all of the distinguished men of to-day have come to their new calling with a fundamental training in photography or high-class mechanical work, and have by application and study built upon their original foundation the other requisites which go to make up the necessary qualifications of the master craftsman.

Unlike almost any other profession, there are no regular schools or apprenticeships to be served and up to recently, the gradual realization dawning that the camera man must be something more than a mere mechanic, many a man with the gift of gab, proficient in the art of tooting his own horn gobbled the fat jobs, many times to the exclusion of those better fitted who were not so ardent in their paeans of self-praise.

More and more does it become evident that the man who can hold down a job as a motion picture photographer must be a man of exceptional ability coupled with a rigid training. He must have the equivalent of a college education in several branches of science, although he may not know what the interior of a college looks like. He must known a good deal of chemistry; he must have a very considerable knowledge of the physics of light, not necessarily a general knowledge, but a special knowledge of that branch which relates to optics as applied to photographic objectives and lens images. He must know considerable of mathematics; otherwise he cannot apply his knowledge of the physics of light or derive the full benefit of his chemical knowledge. He must also have a great deal of mechanical training in precision instrument making; otherwise he is incompetent to work with an instrument as precise as his camera should be, or with perforators and printing machines and similar impedimenta. Besides all these, he must have a broad and well balanced mind and an artistic perception. He must be able to comprehend the ideas of his director, and collaborate with him. On him, more than on the producer, depends the artistic effect of the pictures which he photographs. He should be a master of every detail of dark room work. If he is not able to give instructions to any one of the numerous manipulators who go to make up the force of the film factory; if he cannot do this, he is not a photographer—he is a motor for a moving picture camera.

Organization and system are fast coming into place on the producing side of the picture, but the dense ignorance prevailing in every part of the producing side in regard to anything pertaining to photography has retarded the development of orderly methods which should as surely obtain in the factory as in the studio. In fact, the temperamental difficulties encountered in systematizing studio production should be many times as great as the application of system to the factory end. It is probably due also to the lack of a sufficient number of assertive men with the proper training to bring order into the chaos, which has reigned in the photographic processes of the average factory, but the change is coming inevitably. The numerous number of producing companies at the present day render it more and more imperative that every branch of the industry become standardized. It is one of the axioms of the efficiency engineer that there is but one best way in which to do a thing. This neither means the slowest nor always the quickest way, but it does mean the quickest way consistent with a certain high grade of quality. That means a saving in time, and time, the world over in business, means money. Efficiency also calls for specialization. Each man to his own task—the task best fitted for him. Though there has just been promulgated an ideal of the training of a cinematographer no one man can ever hope to excel in every branch, nor will the natural ability of most men permit them to go beyond a certain point.

To turn again to Mr. Harrison's article, he quotes from Dr. Frank Crane, the famous editorial writer, who said:

> There are two kinds of work in the world which may be called routine work and creative work. By routine work we mean the tending of a machine, the discharge of office duties, keeping accounts, tending the sick, running a business and the like. By creative work we mean the writing of stories, the composition of music, the painting of pictures, the modelling of statues. Creative work is the scarcest in the world.

The man with creative ability and a thorough training in the principles of photography is the kind of a man who should be placed in charge of the film factory. He should not only have charge of the film factory, but should superintend the work of the routine camera man. Only on rare occasions should he turn the camera crank himself, but at a certain time each day or at certain scheduled intervals he should consult individually with each camera man who is working upon a picture. Not only that—the director or producer should also be present at this consultation. This master photographer should also be the right-hand man of the supervising director, and the supervising director should be the central nucleus from which radiate all of the activities of the studio.

In the large studio of the future each photographer will do mainly special work for which he is particularly adapted. In all probability each director will still retain his own particular photographer, but when any photographer attached to a director encounters anything special in any line, whether it be trick work, lighting effects or such, he will have the consultation and assistance at his command of specialists in those lines who will assist and collaborate with him to produce the highest artistic effect attainable. Through the mechanical department he will have at his disposal any sort of apparatus that he may require. Each large studio will also maintain a photographic research laboratory, where chemists and physicists will work out with scientific care and precision many baffling photographic problems, and contribute their knowledge to the making of more perfect pictures.

It may seem like an idle dream, but some time in the future it seems likely that the various companies will see the advantage of each contributing their share towards a central research laboratory, where the many problems still unsolved in the industry may be pinned down and examined in the light of science and the common cause—where every manufacturer can go for information—where he can obtain a standard for every measurement and for every machine. It is likely too that manual training schools and technical colleges will introduce courses which will train men for the many different occupations which one may follow in the film factory. It is not likely that the remuneration of ordinary photographers in the business will increase materially. In fact, it is much more likely that there will be a slight decrease, but for the creative worker with a broad and thorough technical training the remuneration is now at its lowest level, and will certainly increase as the qualifications become more rigid.

There is a prosperous but limited field for an efficiency engineer in the factory side of the picture industry. Men with the qualifications for such a position will be cheap at large salaries. No matter what they get, they will save many times the amount that they receive for their employers.

Motion pictures in natural colors will appear, and the demands upon technical training will be enormously increased. I do not prophesy that pictures in colors will ever supplant the black and white any more than the colored supplements have supplanted the ordinary newspaper. But the field when it comes will be a highly remunerative one; which one cannot enter without the highest type of technical training.

Many special branches of the motion picture business still undeveloped will attain a growth to-day undreamed of. There has been much said and written about the educational picture. From the standpoint of the educator who pursues a systematic course of instruction, there have as yet been no educational pictures made. The time is coming when every educational institution, no matter how humble, will be incomplete without its projection room and requisite apparatus.

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "The Yellow Menace."

Released by the Unity Film Service.
(Suggestions Prepared by S. M. Berg.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 5½ T "The Normal Population—" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 33 D "When Ali Singh Appears Through Trap Door" is a description of action.

In order to create the atmosphere of Menace, "Hindoo Priests," by Bendix is suggested, played slowly and gravely, instead of the marked tempo with liberal use of a large Chinese gong.

Further inquiries concerning any phase of this work should be addressed to Mr. S. M. Berg, Columbia Theater Building, New York City.

34½	T	"I will start tho fight—"
36½	T	The End.

Time schedule: 36½ minutes (three reels—about 2,455 feet).

The first episode introduces the chief character, Ali Singh, the Yellow Menace, who is a person of marvelous abilities with a brutal fanatic instinct. The first scene opens in a Chinese city where Ali Singh is in conference with a high council called to plan the extermination of all white races. A native outbreak against the Americans takes place, but Ali believing the time unripe stops the battle and executes the Chinese leader. The council then decides that he shall go to America and start the campaign. United States Secret Agents receive orders to prevent his landing, but by a clever ruse he eludes them and reaches New York. His first step is a threatening letter sent to J. D. Bronson, a banker who is giving his financial support to the Anti-Alien Committee.

"THE MUTILATED HAND."

Second Episode.

6¾	T	Ali Singh, the Yellow Menace.		Repeat: No. 1.
9½	T	"My good friend—"
10¼	T	That night. (Dog barking)	12.	Mysterioso No. 3—Andino.
11¾	T	"Their disappearance is—"		Repeat: No. 4.
13	T	The search proves fruitless—(Dog barking)
14	T	"Absolutely no trace."		Repeat: No. 7.
17¼	T	"We will raid Ah Chow's now."
17¾	T	The raid on Ah Chow's den.	17.	The Swallows—Klein. (Allegro galop)
20½	D	When food is brought to Margaret. (Gong)		Repeat: No. 1.
22½	T	"I hold women inviolate."
23½	D	When detestives leave bunks.		Repeat: No. 5.
26½	T	"Stop Willard—"		Repeat: No. 8.
27½	T	"You owe your life to the girl." (Motor-boat effects)		Repeat: No. 1.
29	T	The End.

Time schedule: 29 minutes (two reels—about 1,900 feet).

The second episode introduces the principal white characters, Errol Manning, U. S. diplomatic confidential agent, and his sister May, and Bronson's son and daughter. To prove his threats are not idle, Ali kidnaps Margaret Bronson from her father's Long Island home, taking her to an opium den in New York. Two detectives sent to hunt for her are found in the river mutilated. Suspicious of the opium den, Manning and Willard Bronson, the banker's son, together with Captain Kemp of the New York police, lead an attack on it. Margaret is rescued but Ali Singh escapes in a motor-boat.

Note particularly: Liberal use of Chinese gong with strong, slow strokes at the scenes of the Menace (Ali Singh). Note dog barking, shooting, motor-boat and water effects.

THE ORGAN.

Music and the Screen Action it Depicts.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

THE selection of appropriate music for the organ is highly important when playing for moving pictures, and it is a subject requiring much thought and consideration. The pianist who has had professional experience will have little difficulty along this line, for his chief obstacles are usually technical difficulties and the progress made depends entirely on himself and the time, study and efforts he spends acquiring technic that will make the rendition of organ music possible.

It is hoped that the following suggestions regarding suitable organ music for the film will prove helpful to the professional organist as well as the beginner. There are many musicians whose reputation rests entirely upon the manner in which they interpret selections. Managers realize the importance of a well arranged setting for the film, and the organist who directs his efforts towards satisfying the patrons will find himself rewarded for the time and effort spent in preparing appropriate music.

The most satisfactory method of ending a picture and adding the "punch" to your program is to select a well known love-song, and during the last few minutes of action to play it slowly and in a singing manner. As the closing scene of nearly every picture is a love-scene, many leave the theater with the song in mind. This adds to the organist's reputation. Often the picture will not please, but if the music is appropriate and well rendered, the audience is satisfied. A few of the many popular love-songs are: "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice," "Oh Promise Me," "Forgotten," "Because," "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," "Answer," "Non e Ver," "Dear Heart," "Ich Liebe Dich," "One Who Has Yearned Alone," etc.

Some of the best known plaintive numbers for organ that are suitable for screen action are: "Adagio-Souata Pathetique," "Beethoven," "Berceuse," Iljinski; "Elsa's Dream" ("Lohengrin"), Wagner; "In the Garden" ("Rural Wedding"), Goldmark; "Moonlight Sonata," Beethoven, and "To Spring," Grieg.

The church organist who is troubled with the problem of suitable music for the film will find such numbers an important and valuable acquisition to his library.

Popular and standard waltzes are also suitable for the screen action, but care and judgment must be exercised in phrasing and tempo, and the organist must not fall into the habit of over repeating.

The songs of Shubert and Robert Franz are popular with a vast number of theater-goers, and fit many scenes well.

Airs from musical plays and comic operas have a popular appeal to an audience, and often if the opera is forgotten many will recall the music. Among the songs from musical plays that have a popular appeal are the "Moon Song" from the "Mikado"; "Day Dreams," "Spring Maid"; "Kiss Me Again," Mlle. Modiste; and "Glannina Mia" from the "Firefly," etc.

Descriptive and characteristic numbers suitable for the organ will be found among piano albums and folios. The ambitious organist will learn that nearly all piano pieces sound well on the organ, but he must be extremely versatile in adapting piano music, and the style in which he plays it. A piano number that is used for organ should always be practised in private before playing it in public, but many musicians do their practising before an audience regardless of the difficulty of a number. This is a detriment to his reputation as well as an imposition upon the patient audience.

Menuets and gavottes are appropriate for many scenes, and the organist should not neglect these popular numbers when purchasing new music.

The church organist should never be at a loss as to what to play for church scenes, but for the organist inexperienced in church work the following numbers should be included in his library:

"Come All Ye Faithful," Adeste Fidelis; "Crossing the Bar," Barnby; "The Heavens Are Telling" ("Creation"), Haydn; "Prelude," Lohengrin, and the "Lost Chord," Sullivan.

Movements from suites and sometimes the entire suite itself will be found appropriate in depicting the varied emotion on the screen. The standard and popular overtures lend themselves well to certain scenes, and often a movement from an overture will fit the action perfectly. Incidental music and dramatic music should not be overlooked, and of the late issues, Berg's Incidental Series will be found a very practical and necessary acquisition to the musician who strives to interpret pictures correctly.

There are certain movements from the symphonies that are very effective for organ as well as concert-program selections.

The organist who endeavors to interpret pictures correctly and gain the best results from his efforts should not neglect the new issues of the various publishers, and it is interesting as well as profitable work; keeping in touch with the music centers and playing new selections that are appreciated by your audience.

Musicians who experience difficulty with the selection of appropriate musical programs will receive information and suggestions if they will address S. M. Berg, in care of the Moving Picture World.

British Notes

ERE this communication appears in print Britain will have her first state owned moving picture theater. It is situate in a remote part of Cumberland and is for the benefit of a number of war workers. It will be under the management of the Liquor Control Board.

During the absence of the principals of the company on military service George L. Tucker has assumed absolute control of the producing side of the London Film Company. Mr. Tucker is contemplating the production in the near future of what will probably be the first London "super-film" but before this it is not unlikely that he will renew his American acquaintances with a very definite object in view.

Hughes, Massie & Co. of 40 Fleet street, London, E. C., have been appointed the agents in this country for the output of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation. The first two releases are the dramas "One Day" and "Salamander."

"The Rack," a film regarded as one of the finest creations of the World Film Corporation, has been temporarily withdrawn from the market on account of the verdict of the British Board of Film Censors.

Louis N. Parker's historical play "Disraeli," which has had a successful if short run at the Royalty theater in London, is about to be perpetuated in celluloid. Mr. Percy Nash, until quite recently in Rome with the Tiber Film Co., is the responsible producer. While the affairs of the Panama Canal are so much in the limelight I venture to think that a visual reconstruction of that master stroke of financial diplomacy resulting in the acquisition by Great Britain of the controlling interest in the only other "ditch" comparable to the Panama would make a pertinent appeal to the American public.

The Selig Company announces the re-issue of "The Spoilers."

A third presentation in the Metropolis of "The Birth of a Nation" is being arranged, this time at the Philharmonic Hall. The last production to be screened in this building was the Universal Company's "Dumb Girl of Portici," starring Anna Pavlova, and had a most encouraging reception, being patronized by royalty. Mr. Tippett has, by the way, disposed of the latter territorially.

The M. P. Sales Agency, the agents for Kalem and Biograph productions, is consolidating its renting business by opening a separate exchange at 86 Wardour street, to be known as the Wardour Film Agency.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

New "Civilization" Press Agent

ROBERT W. PRIEST has been appointed to the position of Director of Publicity of the "Civilization" companies. Unlike many who essay the onerous work of motion picture publicity, Mr. Priest has slowly but surely graduated from his old line of work, theatrical press work, to his present highly responsible position by some useful preliminary experience in the film field. He directed the publicity campaign of the Captain Scott Antarctic Pictures in this country, and managed the entire enterprise when those remarkable films were brought here after the tragic death of the intrepid explorer.

Robert W. Priest.

In addition to handling the Captain Scott feature Mr. Priest achieved success in the exploitation of Paul J. Rainey's African Hunt Pictures (series 1914) and Pathe's great biblical masterpiece, "The Life of Our Saviour." He has also been identified in a managerial capacity with the Gaumont Company and was for a limited period a member of the Pathe sales force. Prior to his entrance into the film industry Mr. Priest exploited such stage celebrities as De Wolf Hopper, William Faversham, Mordkin and his Russian Ballet and many others equally as famous, including New York Winter Garden stars and attractions. He was also film director at the New York Hippodrome when that famous amusement temple was converted to the feature picture policy.

"1001 FILM FOLK."

Did you ever before hear of any one claiming to know personally one thousand and one people in the film industry, including all the screen celebrities and representative motion picture men and their home and studio addresses? Well, Arthur Leslie, the publicity man, of No. 1505 Broadway, has prepared such a valuable list of names and addresess of his friends. It is practically a directory, or "who's who" of the producing end of the business. The booklet also gives the addresses of all eastern studios and film companies where casting is done. All players can have a complimentary copy by calling on Mr. Leslie. As it tells them exactly where to seek engagements the players appreciate Mr. Leslie's thoughtfulness. There is no charge whatsoever for this helpful booklet.

CULTURE ABOVE CENSORIOUSNESS.

LET the men who are trying to improve motion pictures think this over." With the above words a writer in the New York Tribune calls attention to certain conditions in many of the pictures of today of which he writes as "The Harrowing Movies." Without doubt the pictures generally referred to have all passed the Board of Censors and yet they do not meet with the approval of such as this critic; another testimony to the fact that censorship is not successful.

With the great variety of opinions and standards it has long ago been demonstrated that censorship is impossible, education and culture however are not impossible, on the contrary they are positive, safe and progressive, and bid well to be the only powers which can control the moving picture situation. The writer to the public papers seems to forget the fact that it is not entirely in the hands of "those who are trying to improve the moving pictures" to remedy all the evils of which he complains, the public at large by the nature of their demands hinder the work of improvement, by giving preference to those very pictures which he finds deserving of criticism, the solution of the whole matter is a campaign of education and culture.

Educating the Public Taste.

Manufacturers and exhibitors alike tell us that the public demand certain thrills in pictures, certain morbid scenes, a certain definite "punch," besides there are other "tastes" to be catered to and of course "we must give the people what they want." Some time ago an article appeared on these pages entitled "Should the people be given what they want, or, what they ought to have?" It is noticeable that manufacturers have as far as possible adopted the policy of giving the public the very best along the line of "what they ought to have," or rather such subjects as would best serve the interests of good moving pictures and the best public taste. The writers of the complaining letters should know that really there is little ground for their complaints now; a few years ago this might have been the case, but not now. Those things with which they find fault are not details which even censors dare to cut out, they are only truthful details which only the most advanced education or culture will ask their omission. It must readily be admitted that many details are often "harrowing," but while they are not objectional, and the higher trained mind has not yet come to demand their omission, we cannot blame their presence on the screen; let it be well understood that the educated scenario writers, and the educated makers; have no other object in view than the production of pictures that shall under all circumstances be of the best possible nature.

The Example of Literary Taste Among the Public.

One of the best places to study the public taste is at the book stalls of the railway stations, the book stores, and the sections of the newspapers. There are at the present time some half dozen magazines of as many different titles to be seen on the book stalls, the selling value of these being found in the nature of those things which are so generally excluded from the screen; yet, it is a commercial truth, that these particular magazines command the greatest sale by more than a small majority; this can also apply to the newspapers, the open eyes of the every day traveler will reveal to him not only what kind of papers people generally read, but also what portion of the paper they seem most interested in.

The result is there never was a time when the screen was cleaner than today, the screen was never more instructive and intelligent than now, there is less cause for criticism or fault finding of any kind; the tendency is markedly upward; in all the world of moving pictures every responsible participant is solely animated by the highest and best possible motives, and all this is having a marked impression on the public mind, so that the time is not far distant when even impatient letter writers of the kind answered by this article will cease to exist.

EDUCATIONAL COMMENTS.

The educational portion of the program at the Strand theater in New York is another proof that high class theaters find that their program increases in value by the use of educationals. In addition to the topical, which has now become both a permanent feature and a standard, a scenic is added—last week finding us studying "Quaint Cape Cod Folk" with much interest—followed by a very interesting description of a death dealing deep-sea mine. The method of construction, the way of planting and anchoring, followed by the details of its manner of exploding when in concussion are all plainly given. Science and mechanics are most intricately interwoven in this deadly invention, making one feel thankful that such ability is not alone applied to warfare, but that the arts of peace are by these means equally benefited. Although not belonging to the moving picture program, yet worthy of mention as a helpful addition to an educational program, was a monologue, entitled "A Parable of Nature," or "What Is Life?" accompanied by appropriate musical selection, exceedingly entertaining and instructive. This innovation is so good that its imitation can only be its just flattery. A diversion which is a pleasing help can always be allowed. Mr. Harry Gribble is the author of this inspiring monologue and his work ought to be encouraged.

"The Lure of Alaska" is still one of the permanent attractions in a New York theater made additionally interesting by the instructive and entertaining lecture which accompanies it. From this metropolitan beginning and reputation no doubt this series will travel widely through the States; all educational institutions will profit by its use.

"The Bermudas," this most complete series, descriptive of these well known and attractive islands, will be most acceptable everywhere, first descriptive, then entertaining and instructive, they are a valuable addition to this class of picture. As the home of the famous Easter lilies they possess an added interest to many people and to see these lilies growing by the acre is beautiful indeed, as are also the sea gardens as seen through the famous glass bottomed boats.

Motion pictures of the 350 members of the American Ambulance Field Service, and of the American Aviators in France, were shown for the first time in this country at Newport. These pictures are from films taken under the auspices of the French government for the field service "in recognition of heroic conduct of Americans on the firing line." It is to be hoped that these pictures will be taken further than the limited realm of private exhibitions at Newport, there are many people who will appreciate these scenes of events recording the kindly activities of the American nurses as well as the ability of American aviators.

Great realism was given to a scene representing a saw mill in the heart of the Sierra forests in a recent picture at the Rialto which reflected credit upon the management. A simple and specially constructed apparatus was made to produce sounds true to the shrieking and ripping of the saw through a log. To further increase the realism, a chemist was employed to prepare a pine perfume which was sprayed into the hugh fans at the proper moment and which swept through the house, giving a perfectly real reproduction of a pine log saw mill. Truly this sort of realism cannot be classed as anything else than progressive and progress is education.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A WELL known and very influential moving picture promoter has declared that the present crisis in the industry will do more towards rehabilitating the real moving picture player in the estimation of the producers than could have been expected from any other quarter. At the same time the so-called legitimate players will find themselves proportionately deteriorating in value in the estimation of the producer. When pressed for the reason upon which his statement was based the promoter said the legitimate players had done more harm than good to the studios and fall far short in making a success with the patrons of the exhibiting houses.

"The players who gave up the stage and adopted the screen with sincere intentions, putting their hearts into the work for success to the producing companies and consequent fame and steady work for themselves, cultivated between the patrons of the screen and themselves an intimacy which was only approached by the most successful of stock companies. It was this intimate relationship that caused many companies to go into the business of publishing in large quantities, with proporationate financial returns, portraits of the screen favorites, and souvenirs of all descriptions bearing similar portraits. And the bonds of intimacy—I may say friendship—were made stronger. When opportunity was afforded the picture players to personally meet their admirers, for by their unaffected and sincere greetings they impressed the screen patrons with a spirit that no other audience in the amusement world had felt.

"How different has the situation today been made by the advent of the legitimate actors upon the scene! The haughty stars lose no opportunity to impress the public with the belief that their appearance upon the screen is made at a great sacrifice of professional pride brought about by overwhelming financial temptation offered by the producers. Indeed, many of them actually tell the people that they should consider themselves indebted to the star for allowing them to see his work at popular prices. When at work on the stage at prices beyond the reach of the people of moderate means he would come before the curtain and tell of the deep gratitude he felt for the encores of the dear public. When posing for the screen he looks upon the public much as he does upon most of the regular photo players who may be in his support. He tries to squelch everything and everybody before and about him with an air of superiority that frequently reaches a boorish point. Although I have spoken only of actors my remarks are directed to the legitimate actresses with equal force. Perhaps I would be hitting nearer the truth if I would refer more pointedly to the latter. Be that as it may, it is an indisputable fact that the legitimate actor who appears before the camera in a condescending spirit is a bad investment. He is gradually undermining the co-operative and congenial spirit which was created by the players who took pride in the moving picture work and labored so cheerfully and industriously to lay the foundation for the standard it has attained."

It is not to be expected that the sentiments expressed by the promoter will be endorsed by all producers, or meet the approval of all exhibitors, but his statements are worthy of publication in leading up to discussion that took place recently in a well known club as to the claims of regular motion picture players upon the producers and studio directors, which was caused by a remark of an old picture player to the effect that producers and directors who pin their faith upon people of the legitimate stage in preference to those who wish to make posing before the camera their life work are making a serious mistake. The player stated that there are scores of picture trained people of unquestioned ability idle while their places are filled by people who are in the work without spirit or pride and will desert the studio upon the first call to the stage. "It does not seem fair," said the player, "that when a producer or director wants talent for a studio that it should be sought in the circles of the stage when there is talent of equal or better merit lying idle among those who are loyal to the motion pictures. The majority of legitimate players, like the owners and managers of the legitimate theaters, are strongly arrayed on the side of the stage as against the silent drama. Today we find them industriously engaged with the managers and booking agents spreading reports of all kinds that will tend to injure the moving pictures in the eyes of the public. Only the other day an actor who was obliged to lay off upon the close of the spring season told me that in a couple of weeks he would again tread the 'dear old boards' and the fast declining pictures would no longer lure him; and yet for over three months this apostate held the place of one of better qualifications both as to stage and motion picture experience. I admit that I am open to a charge of prejudice, but I willingly present myself to it in the hope that it may induce the studio managers to consider what I am aiming at. Stars cannot make moving pictures a success. There may be exceptions, but they are few. The people who make the picture houses their home of amusement seek favorites. Stars are an asset at houses where the patronage is of a transient character, but where the location is residential the favorite player is the main drawing card whether the player be in lead or support. Stage stars cannot fill the bill because they do not appear upon the screen regularly and get acquainted with the patrons.

"It has often been said by producers and directors that the public wants a change of faces upon the screen. For a time it was thought they were correct in this sounding of the public pulse, but now there is some doubt as to whether the sentiment runs in that direction. Inquiries sent to studios, exchanges and exhibitors show a decided inclination on the part of patrons to renew acquaintance with old screen favorites. My personal opinion is that any demand that may have been made by the public for a change of faces must have been caused by producers relying too much upon the screen favorites and overlooking the scenario part of the work. I do not wish to be understood as saying that a resurrection of old screen favorites is needed in the business, but I do contend that a creation of favorites with scenarios of suitable standard will bring more returns at less expense than the present system of depending upon the records of stage stars."

From the various views expressed by the promoter and player one is tempted to conclude that there are many picture players who desire to have a barbed wire fence erected between them and the regular stage people. There appears to be a distinct color of professional jealousy. Yet, when we weigh all that has been said we are inclined to concede that many points are brought out that should receive serions attention on the part of studio managers. It cannot be denied that regular patrons of picture houses acquire a strong attachment for certain players, and the popularity is a big asset for both producers and exhibitors; but at the same time that popularity has been the cause of stranding along the rialto many of those who had the good fortune to enjoy it. For this the players themselves have been responsible. Their success made them easy victims of competing concerns who, by tempting financial offers, induced the players to forsake the old homestead. The moving picture business is not like the legitimate theatrical line in such matters. A star on the stage may change from one management to another without the slightest adverse effect upon personal drawing power. Not so with the moving picture favorite. Some of the favorites have made changes with good results, but they can almost be counted upon the fingers of the hand. A canvass will show that when a picture player leaves the atmosphere in which the popularity has been created there is a decided change on the part of the public. There is still a strong liking for the favorite, but there is something lacking. We have frequently heard in theaters: "There is my favorite, but I would feel so much better if I could see her (or him) in a picture by the —— company." Perhaps the favorite does better work, and has a better photoplay than any in the past, but there is that feeling of "I like you so much better in that other gown."

* * *

In the opinion of one of the most prominent studio managers in the country the motion picture industry has grown beyond the stock company era, just as the old line stock has been supplanted, and the indications are that the policy of the near future will be the booking of casts as the scenarios come to hand. The reason assigned by the manager was that no matter how good a stock company may be there are times when the members grow stale, or it is impossible to select from it players suitable for parts upon which success of the production depends. He admitted that studio trained people were preferable to those of the stage, other conditions being equal, and that the former are frequently superior to the latter although inferior as a stage player. The manager insisted, however, that there are times when stage stars are essential to the production of standard plays, or productions in which they have been starred.

Wanted—A Museum—

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Vachel Lindsay Suggests Columbia University as the Home of the First Museum of Photoplay Writing and Production

LATELY, in the Photoplaywright Department, Vachel Lindsay, the poet-artist, made a plea for the Museum of Photoplay. The idea seems to have attracted considerable attention and not a little comment, though to many the suggestion of a museum is synonymous with a place where persons go Sunday afternoons when they have nothing else to do, to peer through glass at the exhibits and come away unlearned and unimpressed.

This is by no means what Mr. Lindsay had in mind, nor what is needed. Some day, perhaps, there will come into being a photoplay museum for the public, but the present effort is directed not toward an establishment for the public, but for the start of something that shall at least be the germ of a museum that shall be to the student of photoplay what the art museum is to the student of painting and sculpture. Because Columbia University already has the foundation of such a work, gathered by Victor O. Freeburg, Ph.D., as working material for his class in photoplay construction, it has been suggested that this collection be built up to a point where its value to the pupil and the business alike is proven. Then, with the demonstration provided and experience gained, the way will be open for the founding of a museum of broader scope and greater possibilities. The museum at Columbia is not strictly a class affair, but is also available to those who contribute in some slight measure to its upkeep, but a proper museum should be generally available to students of photoplay without any restriction other than intelligent interest, but this can come only in time.

Speaking of the matter and his own ideas, Mr. Lindsay writes:

> Columbia University having set the precedent and made the first great step of actually beginning, it seems to me logical that all good men and true should rally round Columbia and Prof. Freeburg. I hope it is not an impertinent suggestion that The Moving Picture World start in a long campaign for the proper endowment of Columbia in this department and earn the right to a strong advisory board in moulding the policy of the growing institution.
> My only criticism of Prof. Freeburg's outlook, and your own, is that your imaginations for this school move in the specific field of photoplay production. I wish we could hear from Prof. Munsterberg in an outline of his ideal motion picture institution and museum covering every educational and scientific type of film, assuming unlimited endowment. And in a sense we do have unlimited endowment in the interest and loyalty of one hundred million Americans. That endowment has already been frightfully abused, but, like J. P. Morgan, we should bet on the U. S. A.

It will be seen that Mr. Lindsay is a poet. He speaks of a museum and at once conjures into being a special building with an unlimited endowment. It is not our purpose at this time to talk of endowment. The museum of Columbia is contained in a single as yet partly filled bookcase. The present collection consists of perhaps a couple of hundred still pictures, a card catalogue of manufacturers, incomplete files of this publication for less than two years, a few scripts, some of the popular magazines and copies of the three books used as texts, Archer's Play-making, the Leeds-Esenwein Writing the Photoplay and our own Technique of the Photoplay. Apart from the carbons of scripts, many authors have large collections and more ample libraries. To jump from a bookcase to a building is impractical and it is not the purpose of this article to suggest that someone endow the university with a few hundred thousand. It is desired to invite attention to the commencement of the scheme, to point out the immediate needs and the future possibilities. The university, in spite of its wealth and position, cannot well spend thousands, or even hundreds, upon a scheme yet untried. The photoplay class was started last year with only four pupils, growing to about thirty. There were sixty in the summer class and there will probably be about the same number in the fall classes; not a sufficient number to warrant a large outlay for material required, but not actually needed. Indeed, some of the things most needed are not to be purchased. They must come through donation; not because they are costly, but because they are not commercial comodities, to be dealt in.

One thing that is needed is a projection machine for the class room. At present the class has the occasional use of the projection machine in the Pulitzer School of Journalism, of which this class is an offshoot, but this class room is in another building, is in frequent use for the classes in journalism, and a machine should be installed in this class room for the study of film. Also needed is a small machine on the lines of the Portoscope for the more intimate study of film material. This latter need should attract the manufacturers of such instruments, for it would be an excellent advertising point to have such a machine in actual class room work, and it would undoubtedly lead to the purchase of other machines for other classes.

The Universal Company loans the class reels occasionally. Other manufacturers could contribute to the eventual betterment of the business by similar loans.

Scripts of unusual plays or plays with unusual handling or effects are especially desired. Also required are still pictures that tell a story, or suggest one, other photographs, half-tones or engravings that illustrate grouping or dramatic situations, or which represent unusual light effects.

Also desired are one or more copies of text books other than those used in the class room, these being loaned the students the same as other library books. And to complete the list, copies of or subscriptions to class magazines (both trade and popular) and general magazines carrying articles on photoplay. There is a college bindery, and this material will be put in form to careful preservation.

All donations will carry the name of the donor and all donors of materials to the value of two dollars annually or an initial contribution of ten dollars or more will be known as donors and entitled to the privileges of the museum equally with the pupils taking the course.

Several editors and manufacturers have expressed a willingness to help this work along and it is hoped that all will interest themselves since they benefit not alone the university, but the business now and in the future. Contributions may be addressed to Dr. Freeburg, at Columbia, or to this writer, who will pass the matter along.

This is not an effort to provide Columbia University with a museum of photoplay that in time will compare with the dramatic museum or the museums of the School of Mines and other courses. It is an effort to aid Columbia to prove the value of such a museum against the time that Mr. Lindsay's ideas and ideals may be more fully realized, and of these he writes:

> My catalogue of a possible museum and university would be as thick as the catalogue of the Metropolitan Museum and Columbia combined, and I would ask my friends to turn the pages of both and translate them into terms of motion picture. These two institutions represent books and pictures—perhaps the hundredth and thousandth in the list of industries. The motion picture is the fifth largest in the land and is supplanting books and pictures as the railroad and the automobile have supplanted the horse. It is a gigantic crisis, and the means to meet it should be gigantic. I would like to see a big normal school in which motion picture methods covering the entire public school course of study could be devised. This should have a big advisory department for schools and churches and be able to guide the making of the desired films. As to the specific field of photoplay production, I would like to see tireless experimenters like Max Reinhardt, Percy Mackaye, Granville Barker and Gordon Craig given a free hand in this new field, entirely independent of the present commercial demand. Then there should be the best men the practical world can furnish to establish a school of Photography (This is already in existence in Syracuse University—E. W. S.), a school of directors, a school of acting, a school of writing.
> A photoplay museum for insiders may be the expedient thing of the moment, seeing that Dr. Freeburg will have it all to do, but the ultimate museum should be accessible as the public library, with a series of little theaters where fixed programs of classics will be in constant operation and a call room where, on petition of any party of ten, any film in the catalogue can be called up and run. It's an easy thing to build a ten million dollar institution on paper. It's the easiest thing I do, but when one hundred million people are interested, is it absurd to ask?

Let's put it in another way. If a million dollars will better the business to the point where the interest of ten million persons can be preserved, is the investment so great as to be impossible? Let's make a beginning and see how it works.

VINCENT SERRANO JOINS THANHOUSER.

Vincent Serrano, famed from California to the British Isles for his fine portrayal of Lieutenant Denton in "Arizona," has been engaged by Edwin Thanhouser to be starred in a five reel feature called "A Modern Monte Cristo." The scenario is by Lloyd Lonergan. Eugene Moore, who has just finished directing Jeanne Eagels in "The World and the Woman," is to direct Mr. Serrano. The feature will be released through Pathe.

Mr. Serrano has appeared only once before in motion pictures—when he was co-starred with Pauline Frederick in "Lydia Gilmore."

What's Doing With Triangle

Many Subjects Under Way at the Several Studios—Triangles for September.

ACTIVITIES at the Triangle-Fine Arts studio these days are greatly concerned with the making of "Old Folks at Home," the story by Rupert Hughes in which Sir Beerbohm Tree, the eminent English actor who lately has appeared in the elaborate screen version of "Macbeth," is to be starred. In the production Sir Herbert has the role of an old farmer. Josephine Crowell plays the feminine lead; and others in the cast are Incille Young, Spottiswoode Aitken, Mildred Harris and Elmer Clifton. Chester Withey, who wrote and appeared in "Sunshine Dad" with De Wolf Hopper, is directing.

Director William Christy Cabanne is putting the finishing touches to the new Lillian Gish Triangle play, "Diana of the Follies." This is the play in which she is called upon to give an imitation of Sarah Bernhardt, with whom she once appeared on the speaking stage. For this production Madame Care, the studio modiste, has designed nineteen different gowns to be worn by the star. Sam De Grasse plays opposite Miss Gish.

Wilfred Lucas, who has made such a pronounced success in "Hell-to-Pay Austin," the lumber-camp story in which he had Bessie Love as his leading lady, is hard at work on a new piece tentatively called "Rummy." This story details some of the life of a young newspaper reporter, a circumstance of peculiar interest to Lucas, because he was once managing editor of a city daily. Additional interest in this production comes from the circumstance that it introduces to Triangle patrons a new leading lady, Pauline Starke. It is said that she is destined for stardom herself before long, for her work shows pronounced emotional quality.

Bessie Love has become a star, and is shortly to be seen as such in "The Defenders," a production which is being staged by Co-directors C. M. and S. A. Franklin. Ralph Lewis has the principal male role, that of a cold-hearted old uncle who has no use for children. There are a number of juvenile players in support of Miss Love, among them being George Stone, Carmen de Rue, Violet Radcliffe, Francis Carpenter, Beulah Burns, Lloyd Pearl and others. Adults in the cast beside Lewis and Miss Love are Frank Bennett, A. D. Sears and Alberta Lee. Bernard McConville wrote the story.

At the Triangle-Ince studios, William S. Hart has just completed a new bad-man story from the pen of J. G. Hawks. The locale of the story is an Arizona hamlet; and in this the subject is unusual, because the company will not have to leave Inceville for the taking of any of the scenes. It will be staged in its entirety on the 18,000-acre domain in the Santa Monica Mountains. Alma Reuben, who was seen in "The Half-Breed," is leading lady.

William Desmond has a piece in which he is to be seen as the sole star. It is a detective story by C. Gardner Sullivan. The company is now at Bear Valley, California, where a number of the scenes are laid. In support of Desmond in the cast are Margaret Thompson, Robert McKim, J. Barney Sherry, Joseph J. Dowling and J. Frank Burke. Charles Giblyn is directing.

The elaborate Italian drama, in which Clara Williams is shortly to be starred on the Triangle programme, is still under way at the studio. For one thing, an Italian street was constructed on the premises, about three hundred feet in length. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and, curiously enough, while she is appearing in this, he is at work upon another Italian story for her. Reginald Barker is directing the current productions.

Frank Keenan is hard at work on a new play for Triangle, although details have not yet been announced. It is known, however, that some of the most sensational scenes take place in a large court-room. This court-room was built at the studio, and covers approximately 3,000 square feet. John Lynch is the author of the play.

A mammoth ball-room setting that will cover nearly the entire floor space of one of the great glass-enclosed stages at Culver City, where the Triangle-Ince studios are located, is being built this week for scenes of the new play which will present a tri-star combination, Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey. In support of these players are Roy Laidlaw, Gertrude Claire, George Elwell, Agnes Herring and Ethel Ullman. Raymond B. West is directing.

TRIANGLES FOR SEPTEMBER.

Triangle's releases for the month of September bring a wealth of material to the program from the Fine Arts, Kay Bee and Keystone studios. Included in the features are two that are in the nature of a novelty in that they were made in the east instead of out on the Pacific Coast.

The first of the eastern pictures is "The Social Secretary," in which Norma Talmadge is starred, and the second is "Manhattan Madness," starring Douglas Fairbanks. Incidentally it might be mentioned that both stars are now hard at work on new pictures, the releases of which, of course, will not be made until some time later.

William S. Hart is the only one of the Triangle stars who will be seen in more than one picture during the month. He appears in "The Patriot," scheduled for release September 3, and again in "The Dawn Maker," due to be released on September 23. Both pictures are typical Hart stories and give the Triangle-Kay Bee star excellent opportunities for his remarkable talents as a screen actor.

Coupled for "The Patriot" for release on September 3 is "Gretchen the Greenhorn," in which Dorothy Gish is starred. The Triangle-Fine Arts star has never appeared to better advantage than in this story with its atmosphere of old Holland and its actual locale in New York. Already possessed of an enviable reputation as an interpreter of Dutch character roles, "Gretchen the Greenhorn" adds not a little to the following that now welcomes each succeeding Dorothy Gish picture so enthusiastically.

September 10 brings Mae Marsh and Robert Harron, co-stars in a Triangle-Fine Arts feature, "The Little Liar." This is another of those winsome characterizations for which Miss Marsh is noted and, in addition, tells a story of considerable ingenuity and not a little novelty.

The same week Frank Keenan scores again in "The Thoroughbred," a typical Keenan story done in a typical Keenan way. This Triangle-Kay Bee star goes along steadily turning out success after success and "The Thoroughbred" will lose nothing in comparison with the most famous of all the Keenan features.

On September 17, the Triangle-Ince feature, "The Wolf Woman," will be released, and at the same time Louise Glaum, whose work has won no end of praise from critics the country over, will be launched as a full fledged star.

Advance information heralds "The Wolf Woman" as a genuine sensation, and in it Miss Glaum, who has been hailed by more than one critic as the finest interpreter of vampire roles on the screen today, is said to excel her finest efforts in the past.

No picture in recent months to be released on the Triangle program has received the attention in the making as has the Lillian Gish feature, "Diana of the Follies," scheduled to be seen the week of September 23. For some of the scenes an entire musical comedy company was enlisted and the production is as elaborate as that given to the most pretentious musical show ever seen.

Last but not least is a Bessie Barriscale feature, of which more will be heard later. While it was being filmed there was not a few ready to declare it the finest feature ever made by the popular star of the Kay Bee studio.

Many Women Managers

A Kansas City Exchange Boasts of Many on Its List of Patrons.

THE Kansas City Feature Film Company, distributors of Paramount Pictures in that vicinity, is particularly proud of the women theater managers among its patrons. Miss Marie Smith has recently purchased the Pictureland Theater at Ft. Scott, Kansas, a town of 11,000 population. Another lady who has recently assumed the management of a theater is Mrs. Bertha Simon, who has taken charge of the Barrymore Theater, 39th and Summit streets, Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. George Miller is manager of the Bluebird Theater, Girard, Kansas.

Mrs. J. M. Heffner has now assumed the management of affairs at the Bijou Theater, Mason City, Ia., while Captain Heffner of Company B, Second Regiment, I. N. G., is somewhere on the Mexican border.

Mrs. Rose Cornelius, who has recently lost her husband, is now directing the affairs of the Cornelius Amusement Company, which owns several theaters in St. Louis. These theaters are the Royal, Lyric, and Lyric Skydome.

Another lady who takes great interest in the exhibition of motion pictures and is ably assisting her husband in conducting the affairs of the theater is Mrs. Fred Savage, Hutchinson, Kansas. Their theater is the De Luxe.

Mrs. Ida Walden owns and manages the Wonderland Theater, Hastings, Neb. She is regarded as one of the progressive exhibitors of Nebraska and takes an active interest in all affairs pertaining to the film industry.

On the Mutual Program

"Youth's Endearing Charm" Introduces Mary Miles Minter to Mutual Patrons—Other Good Subjects.

"YOUTH'S Endearing Charm," a six-act Mutual Star production produced at the studios of the American Film Company, Inc., under the direction of William C. Dowlan, for release Monday, September 4, serves as the vehicle in which Mary Miles Minter, one of the youngest and most popular of screen stars, makes her initial appearance as a Mutualite. This production, first of the widely heralded series in which little Miss Minter is to be featured, is the principal feature offering of Mutual Film Corporation releases for the week of September 4. "Youth's Endearing Charm," adapted for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford from the widely read novel of the same name written by Maibelle Heikes Justice.

Little Miss Minter in her premier as a Mutual Star, has been surrounded by a cast of unusual merit headed by Wallace MacDonald. Others in the big company supporting Miss Minter include Gertrude Le Brandt, Harry von Meter Alfred Ferguson, Bessie Banks, Harvey Clarke, Margaret Nichols and others of equal note.

Miss Minter essays the role of "Orphan Mary," an appealing and unusually sympathetic characterization.

Second of the Mutual's multi-reel feature productions of the same week will be released September 7 under the title of "The Light" in which Helene Rosson appears in the featured role. The story of this piece, which deals with Hindu occultism, is from the pen of Clifford Howard, author of "Purity," the American-Mutual art feature starring Audrey Munson, the noted model. It was produced by Director William C. Dowlan. William J. Tedmarsh, whose characterization of "Satsuma" in "The Secret of the Submarine," the American-Mutual photonovel, won him wide vogue, has been cast for an important part. Franklin Ritchie plays the chief supporting role opposite Miss Rosson. Eugenie Forde and George Webb are additional members of the star's supporting company.

"The Phantom Crook," first of the series of five three-act weekly releases of the famous "Fantomas" series of detective stories, is the Mutual's three-part offering of the week. It will be released September 7. This is one of the most interesting exploits of "Fantomas," the notorious Paris criminal, and is based on the theft by a mysterious individual of a valuable necklace and a large sum of money from a well-known French noblewoman, and the unsuccessful efforts of "Juvre," the famous Paris detective, to capture him. "Fantomas" is one of the weirdest of detective stories with thrilling situations and startling climaxes permeating each of the three-reel comprising the weekly release.

Mutual's two-part feature offering of the week include "The Atonement," an American release of September 4, in which Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh are starred; "Matchin' Jim," a Western story from the Mustang studios, with Frank Borzage and Anna Little, to be released September 8, and "The Jungle Flashlight," a gripping story of the South African jungles, with Margaret Gibson and the famous Bostock animals, for release September 9.

Among the comedy offerings of the week are "Musickers," a Falstaff offering with Claude Cooper and Frank E. McNish in the laughable roles of "Conrad and Oscar," for release September 5; "The Boomerang Goldbrick," a Beauty release of September 6, with Orral Humphrey; "Making Things Hum," a Cub comedy with George Ovey, for release September 8, and a Vogue comedy to be released September 10, the title of which is unannounced.

Mutual Weekly No. 88 is crowded with interesting features photographed by busy Mutual cameramen in all sections of the globe, among them many new pictures of President Wilson posed especially for this issue at the White House. This, as with "See America First," the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly educational film, will be released on September 6. "Reel Life," which bears the same release to the magazine as does the pictorial reel to the newspaper, will go to the public as usual on Sunday, September 10.

GORDON HANDLES POWELL PUBLICITY.

Kilbourn Gordon, well known in newspaper and theatrical circles, is now handling publicity for the Frank Powell Productions, Inc. Mr. Gordon was for years on the Washington Post and the Washington Herald. He left the latter to do the press work for Richard Bennett's production of "Damaged Goods," and the following season publicized and managed Arthur Byron and Edmund Breese in the Broadhurst play, "To-Day." Recently he has been associated in like capacity with David Bispham.

Essanay Gets "The Chaperon"

Dramatic Success Will Be Produced With Edna Mayo in The Leading Part.

GEORGE K. Spoor, president of Essanay, has just purchased the picture rights for another drama which made a big success on the stage not long ago. It is "The Chaperon," written by Marion Fairfax and adapted into scenario form by H. S. Sheldon, the well-known playwright.

The play first appeared on Broadway with Maxine Elliot and Julian L'Estrange. Edna Mayo, who has just finished "The Return of Eve," will take the leading role, and Eugene O'Brien, who supported her in the latter piece, will again be her main support in the new production. Sydney Ainsworth will take the heavy lead. Arthur Barthelet, the director, will at once begin work on the piece, which is expected to be ready for release late in October. The play will be a five act feature.

A large part of the play is located in the Adirondack mountains, and in accordance with Mr. Spoor's idea of getting realism in all settings, it is planned to take a troupe of players to the Adirondacks to lay the scenes, in a location exactly according to the idea of the piece.

The drama calls for a beautiful summer lodge and Director Barthelet is endeavoring to find an available place. A large portion of the play is laid in the open and a spot of great natural beauty will be selected. Outdoor sports of the mountains will be shown, trout fishing, canoeing, bathing, et cetera, not for their own sakes but because called for in the piece.

That part of the play which touches New York City will be taken in Chicago as it merely requires a large city home and does not bear on local color. The troupe will stop in New York long enough, however, to take the scenes at a steamboat dock because of difference in style of ocean and lake steamers.

The story deals with the problem of wealthy American girls marrying foreign noblemen. In this particular instance the girl weds a count partly because pressed by her mother and partly through pique, the American youth to whom she had secretly been engaged having insisted on releasing her because she had inherited enormous wealth while he was comparatively poor. She finds it a bad bargain, however, and not being willing to stand for the count's attentions to other women, she leaves him and returns home.

Then in the Adirondacks she accidentally meets her old sweetheart. He has regretted giving up the woman he loved even on the principle that she had too much wealth for him to wed her. The courtship is renewed and the piece ends with her promise to wed him when she is freed.

It is believed that this will make one of Essanay's strongest feature productions, both on account of the strong dramatic situations and because of the beauty of the settings in which the scenes will be laid.

PANTAGES BOOKS "THE YELLOW MENACE."

An announcement fom the United Film Service's office in Chicago states that "The Yellow Menace," Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen episode serial, has been booked by the Pantages Circuit for a week's run of each episode in every one of its theaters.

Pantages has one of the largest chains of theaters in the country, with houses in twenty-six cities throughout the West, and in the booking of "The Yellow Menace" by so large a circuit speaks volumes for its popularity and assured success. The principal cities controlled by this circuit are San Francisco, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City, Spokane and Los Angeles. These have all booked the serial for a week's run and, in addition, "The Yellow Menace" will show in the smaller cities reached by this circuit.

The first release of "The Yellow Menace" will show in the smaller cities reached by this circuit.

The first release of "The Yellow Menace" will be on Labor Day, September Fourth. Prominent newspapers throughout the western territory will publish the story simultaneously with the showing of the pictures.

A FILM LIBRARY STARTED BY PATHE IN LONDON

Pathe Freres of London have started the formation of a film library, according to an English magazine recently received. All films of historical interest are carefully stored and preserved with a view of thus compiling a living record of the events of the day. The time is not far distant when it will doubtless be necessary to have a special building for these films, which are now rapidy accumulating. J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is said to be contemplating starting a similar Pathe film library in the United States.

Universal's Fall Program

Beginning September 4 It Opens the Amusement Season—Many Good Subjects.

IN the week of September 4 the first fall program of the Universal will be released. Theaters which have closed for the summer will open again with unabbreviated programs of Red Feather and Universal special features to supplement the gilt-edged one, two and three reel photoplays on which the Universal has been working overtime during the summer months.

During that eventual week Violet Mersereau will be seen in "The Narrow Path," a five-reel Red Feather drama written by Catherine Carr and produced by Francis J. Grandon. Miss Mersereau will be supported by Wm. J. Welsh, Joseph W. Girard, Niles Welch, Clara Beyers, Anthony Merlo, Nellie Slattery and Leonora Von Ottinger.

Carter De Haven will make his appearance in "From the Rogues' Gallery," a two-reel episode of the "Timothy Dobbs—That's Me" series, written by Bess Meredith and produced by Wallace Beery, in which De Haven will be supported by Robert Milash and George Hernandez.

"Dead or Alive," the fourth two-reel episode of "Liberty," the new Universal serial featuring Marie Walcamp with Eddie Polo and Jack Holt, will be released running the week of September 4. Besides the principals mentioned, Neal Hart, Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye and L. M. Wells are in the cast of the serial.

On September 4 Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean will cavort about in "The Boy of the Gilded East," a Nestor comedy written by James Dayton and produced by L. W. Chaudet. The feature for the following day will be J. Warren Kerrigan in "The Code of the Mounted," a three-reel Canadian Northwest Mounted Police drama, written and produced by Jacques Jaccard, in which Mr. Kerrigan will be supported by Helen Leslie, Ethel Phillips, Norbert A. Myles, Wilma Wilkie, George E. Marshall, Buck Connor and T. D. Crittendon. On the same day Harry Depp plays a girl's role with amusing skill in the Victor comedy, "Love's Boomerang," which was written by Harry Wulz and produced by P. C. Hartigan. Others who assist in the portrayal of this delightful little comedy are Ernie Shields, Hall Cooley, Yvette Mitchell and O. C. Jackson.

Irene Hunt will be featured on September 6 in the Laemmle drama, "Circumstantial Justice," which was produced by Fred Kelsey from the scenario by Calder Johnstone. Appearing with Miss Hunt will be T. D. Crittenden, Jesse Arnold and J. F. Connolly. On the same day Billie Ritchie will appear in "Crooked from the Start," a hilarious two-reel L-Ko comedy, in which Gertrude Selby and Dan Russell will assist with the padded mallet. No. 36 of the Universal Animated Weekly also will be released on September 6 with a well-selected program of news events of the day.

On September 7 Pat Rooney will star in the Victor comedy, "He Became a Regular Fellow," written by Ben Cohn and produced by Roy Clements. Appearing in support of Rooney will be Ed. Sedgwick, Mrs. Lydia Titus, Jessie Arnold, Ed. Clark and "Kewpie" Morgan. Following the Rooney release Cleo Madison will appear in "The Triumph of Truth," a Big U two-reel sea drama scenarioized by Harvey Gates from the story by J. F. Abbott and produced by Miss Madison herself. Thomas Chatterton, Seymour Zeliff and J. F. Abbott will appear in support of Miss Madison. On the same day the Powers educational, "Making a U. S. Soldier," will be released.

"The Pinnacle," a two-reel Imp society melodrama featuring Myrtle Gonzalez, Richard Stanton and Hayward Mack, will be released on September 8. The principals will be supported by Fred Belasco and Edward Brown. "The Pinnacle" was produced by Richard Stanton from the story by F. McGrew Willis. On the same day Edith Roberts, Lee Kolmar and M. J. Wilson will be featured in the Rex drama, "His Country's Call." There will be no Nestor release on September 8.

September 9 will see the release of Francis Ford and Grace Cunard in "The Princely Bandit," a Bison two-reel drama written by Grace Cunard and produced by Francis Ford. The principals will be supported by Pete Gerald and Jack Holt. On the same day Ben Wilson will appear with Edna Hunter in the Big U drama, "The Laugh of Scorn," which was written by William Addison Lathrop and produced by Director Wilson. Joseph W. Girard and Charles Ogle appear in the same picture in character roles. The comedy of the day will be "The Deacon Stops the Show," in which William Franey and Gale Henry play the principal roles supported by Lillian Peacock, Milburn Morantt and Charles Conklin. This Joker was written by Ben Cohn and produced by Allen Curtis.

On September 10 Molly Malone and Jack Nelson will be seen in the Big U drama, "Mountain Blood," written by Fred Burns and produced by George Cochrane. Vester Pegg, George Berrill and Fred Burns will appear in support of the principals. On the same day Jean Hersholt and Irene Hunt will co-star in "As the Candle Burned," an Imp drama written and produced by Joseph Le Brandt. Billy Mason also takes a leading role in this picture. There will be no release under the L-Ko brand this week.

"Nothing to Rumors," Says Selig

But "The Country That God Forgot" Will Not Go Out Through V-L-S-E.

WHEN there is any news interesting to the picture-play public or to the trade, the same will be authoritatively announced," stated William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, today. "I would say that the many rumors that seem to emanate from New York concerning the plans of the Selig Company are for the most part unfounded," continued Mr. Selig. "Speaking for the Selig Company I would state that we have completed no 'organization,' entered no 'amalgamation' despite the many and varied rumors to the contrary. It is true that I am considering plans beneficial to the Selig Company and to the pictureplay public. These will be announced correctly and in detail in due time.

"It is true that 'The Country That God Forgot,' the five-reel Western drama, will not be released through the V-L-S-E nor will the original date, August 21, be observed. This photoplay is, in my opinion, an unusually excellent one and a drama that will long be remembered. In many respects it is a worthy successor to 'The Spoilers,' although a picture of entirely different atmosphere. The correct date and the method of releasing this picture will be announced at the proper time. 'The Country That God Forgot' gives Tom Santschi many opportunities for clever character delineation, and he is ably supported by Mary Charleson and George Fawcett. I hope to have some definite announcements to make concerning release plans for 'The Crisis' soon. This wonderful picture, the best I think I have ever made, will speak for itself."

Gaumont Mutual Releases

First Week in September Brings Three Single Reels and the First Episode in "Fantomas" Series.

THE Gaumont Company the first week in September will release the first episode of its "Fantomas" series, as well as three single reels. "The Phantom Crook" is the offering which introduces Fantomas as the master criminal. This will be released September 7. There will follow an episode each week thereafter. These are in three reels, each being a complete, independent episode.

September 6 will bring "See America First," No. 52, to the screen. The pictures are of the new Columbia River Highway, just finished, along the river from Portland, Ore. The road opens to tourists one of the most beautiful stretches of scenery in America, a combination of river, forest and mountain views that is picturesque in the extreme. On the same reel is a Gaumont Kartoon Komic animated by Harry Palmer. It deals in humorous fashion with the antics of a shark and a whale.

"Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, is particularly interesting in the September 10 release, No. 19. It has entertaining views of Texas missions, including the Alamo, the shrine of Texas liberties. Another section shows pictures of such baseball favorites as Christy Matthewson and Jeff Tesreau, showing how they throw the ball to fool the batter. This is under the heading of "Learning the Inside of Baseball," and also contains pictorial instruction regarding how to run bases, face the pitcher and field balls. The third section is devoted to a Gaumont tabloid photoplay, picturing the fable of the Ant and the Grasshopper. In it are such Gaumont favorites as Cyril Reinhard, John Hopkins and the statuesque Iva Shepard.

The third single reel of the week is the Mutual Weekly. As it always secures the latest "front page" news for the screen, it is never possible to forecast an issue of this news reel two days before the date of issue.

Barney Bernard's Picture Debut

Famous Hebrew Comedian in Vitagraph's "Phantom Fortunes."

BARNEY BERNARD, the renowned Hebrew comedian of "Potash and Perlmutter" fame, makes his motion picture debut in the latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, "Phantom Fortunes." Bernard has won many friends through his tours on the legitimate stage and by his dialogue records on the phonographs, but we can safely say that he will more than triple the number of friends when his work in this comedy of Jewish life is flashed on the screen.

Samuel Tauber, who has been associated with Bernard for some time, is author of "Phantom Fortunes," and through his knowledge of Barney's "passed performances" gives him an opportunity to bring into play the same droll expressions and gestures which made him famous in a number of characterizations.

Paul Scardon, who produced the photoplay, has introduced many interesting phases of life in the workshops of New York's East Side. He has followed the theme of the story with perfect accuracy, and gives us one of the best comedy dramas we have had in a long time.

An all-star cast of Vitagraphers including: James Morrison, Adele DeGarde, Mary Maurice and Edward Elkas, with Lester Bernard and Mrs. Moscowitz, who have appeared with Barney on the legitimate stage, make up the balance of the cast.

State Right Buyers Not Affected

Sale of "Fall of a Nation" to V-L-S-E has No Bearing on Those Who Bought.

THE National Drama Corporation announces that the campaigns of its state rights contractors are in no way affected by the sale of the rights for the rest of the country to the Greater Vitagraph. While the V-L-S-E offices are making big preparations for the release date of September 18, state right buyers are likewise working overtime in the sections of the map marked off for them. These are Ohio, sold to J. Frank Hatch; New Jersey, which F. E. Backer of the Nation Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, controls; West Virginia, the demesne of R. R. Roberts, with executive offices at 126 West 46th street, and Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, which belong to W. K. Sheppard, who is located at 410 Southwestern Life Building, Dallas.

SUNBEAM OPENS OFFICES.

The Sunbeam Motion Picture Corporation has opened offices in the Candler Building. The Sunbeam intends to organize four producing companies, at the head of which will be Mitzi Hajos, Vaughn Glaser, Dorothy La Mar and Florence Webber. Miss Hajos is a well-known favorite of comic opera. Mr. Glaser is a successful stock actor of the Middle West, and for a long time had his own stock company. Dorothy Le Mar has appeared in comedy and in vaudeville under the management of Keith and of Shubert. Florence Webber has been seen in among other productions "Naughty Marietta," "Firefly," "The Chocolate Soldier" and "Robin Hood."

The officers of the Sunbeam are Wilbur Dunham, president; Mitzi Hajos, first vice-president; Vaughn Glaser, second vice-president; John Reardon, secretary, and George Ridgwell, general director.

Selig Athletic Film Series

Jiu Jitsu, Winter Sports and Billiards in Next Release Through V-L-S-E.

J. OTAGAWA, Japanese champion of the art of jiu jitsu, and W. Berne clash in a blood stirring jiu jitsu match in the Selig Athletic Film Series No. 10, released through the V-L-S-E.

Another display of unique athletic prowess is a revival of archery, in which Miss Daly and J. D. Baker, who have won wide fame as exponents of this sport, exhibit their skill.

There are pictures of exciting winter sports such as skating, skii jumping, ice boating, obstacle racing, hockey, etc.

The series includes a pocket billiard match between J. M. Layton, world's champion of Sedalia, Mo., and M. Petrie of Denver, Colo.

These pictures are attracting a great deal of attention in the sporting world, and are focusing a lot of interest upon the motion picture screen from a large part of the population that has hitherto not patronized tne photoplay theater.

The special articles accompanying each release, which are appearing in the prominent newspapers of the country, are gaining for exhibitors a tremendous volume of publicity in connection with the exhibition of these athletic films.

Universal Picturizes Jules Verne's Novel

"Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" Will Be Released at Broadway Theater in Early Fall.

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company announces that Jules Verne's best-loved story, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," will be produced at one of the Broadway theaters this fall. German submarine merchantmen and the northward tours of West Indian sharks have played into the hands of the Universal in arousing keener interest than ever in the submarine feature. The well-remembered scenes of the tale, including the fight with an octopus, Captain Nemo's discovery of the pearls, the hunting parties sent out from the "Nautilus" across the ocean's floor, and the burial of a comrade in a coral reef cemetery, all these are actually acted far below the surface of the deep and filmed by special apparatus constructed for the picture.

Work on this production has been in progress for two years, and the recent developments in submarine activity make this the timeliest motion picture production on record.

How Would You Like to be Known as "The Devil"

EDWIN STEVENS, the noted star, who has played leading roles in every sort of dramatic vehicle from Shakespeare to farce comedy, has a distinct grievance against producers and the public because they refuse to remember that he ever appeared in anything aside from the sensational drama "The Devil," in which he created the title role. If you saw "The Devil" you remember Edwin Stevens. It is impossible to forget his remarkable acting in the title role of this really great play. Mr. Stevens earned the unstinted praise of all critics who hailed him as one of the greatest of American character actors. Those who failed to see Mr. Stevens in "The Devil," are now offered the opportunity of seeing him in another dramatic role which he considers gives him wonderful scope for his powers.

Edwin Stevens.

As the star in "The Yellow Menace" the Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen episode serial, Mr. Stevens plays the role of Ali Singh, a suave, crafty Mongolian demon who deliberately sets about to humiliate the white race and exalt the yellow man as a ruler of the Western world. This picture is destined to add to the fame of Mr. Stevens.

Third Year of the Feature Program

Famous Players Founded by Adolph Zukor Has Been Basis of Great Feature Development.

WITH the coming of September, the Famous Players Film Company rounds out its third year as the producer of a program of motion picture features, during which it has fulfilled with remarkable precision the expectations and the hopes of its founders under the guidance of Adolph Zukor, who has remained constantly at the helm ever since the inception of the company.

The first organization to devote itself exclusively to the production of feature pictures in which celebrated stage stars were presented, the Famous Players Film Co., likewise formed the nucleus and the inspiration for the organizing of the great distributing company, the Paramount Pictures Corporation, on the program of which it is associated with the Lasky, Morosco and Pallas productions. The present Paramount organization is based upon the original Famous Players exchanges which were first established to distribute the products of that concern.

With the decision to expand that method of distribution and to enlarge the program to 104 productions a year, a meeting of these various exchange heads was called in New York in July, 1913, by Mr. Zukor, with a view to determining upon a mutually satisfactory basis of operation. Out of this meeting there grew the Paramount system which is today the distribution medium of the Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas pictures in the United States. The production of the first two concerns are released throughout the rest of the world by joint arrangement which has been maintained for the past two years, and which is still further strengthened by the recently formed Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, by which these two concerns were united.

One of the earliest and biggest effects upon the trade directly traceable to the inauguration of the feature program was the erection of new theaters and the conversion of the old legitimate houses to the presentation of feature photoplays. When it was realized that large theaters could be built with the certainty given by the program of being open week in and week out throughout the entire year, the interest of exhibitors and the devotion of capital to the project naturally resulted. Thus many of the most prominent photoplay theaters in existence today were literally built upon the feature program.

The launching of its program in 1913 by the Famous Players Company was preceded by the presentation of great stars on the screen, the first of these being Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth." Mme. Berhardt was followed by James K. Hackett. The first of the productions on the actual program was Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles." On September 10 Mary Pickford, fresh from her appearance on the stage in "A Good Little Devil," was first presented in a five-reel feature by the Famous Players "In the Bishop's Carriage." She later starred in an adaptation of "A Good Little Devil" in the opening scenes of which appeared David Belasco, under whose direction she had been starred on the stage.

In 1914 there was introduced to the photoplay another star who was destined to gain great popularity, in John Barrymore, who first appeared in "An American Citizen." The next of the company's permanent stars to be introduced was Marguerite Clark, who captured the motion picture public over night by her delightful performance in "Wildflower," in which she appeared October 15, 1914. Three months later another luminary flashed upon the screen who has since won great favor, when Marie Doro was introduced in "The Morals of Marcus" in January. April saw the introduction on the program of Hazel Dawn in an adaptation of "Niobe" after her previous appearance in "One of Our Girls," which she followed by several successful productions.

Meanwhile Pauline Frederick, her great success in "Innocent" and "Joseph and His Brethren" still in the minds of the public, had been sent abroad to England, France and Italy for the purpose of adapting Hall Caine's celebrated novel and play, "The Eternal City." This exceptional spectacular production opened at the Astor theater in April and immediately won Miss Frederick recognition as the foremost dramatic actress on the screen.

With these great artistes as a nucleus, the Famous Players contributed a series of notable productions to the Paramount Program introducing various well-known stars to the screen from time to time. Then in June of the current year another permanent acquisition was made in the person of Ann Pennington, of "Ziegfeld Follies" fame, who scored a great success in "Susie Snowflake." Now there is scheduled for appearance shortly the internationally celebrated dancing pair, Maurice and Florence Walton, who are to star in "The Quest of Life," an adaptation of the English play, "Ellen Young."

In all, the Famous Players company has introduced upon the screen over thirty well-known stage favorites during the course of its four years of existence and has produced 135 feature photoplays, a record that is unapproached by any other producing concern in the business. Concerning these achievements Adolph Zukor, the guiding spirit of the company, is very modest. After giving due credit to his associates for the progress thus far made by the organization, Mr. Zukor said:

"While it is true that we have, in a measure, scored a success, still that record of achievement during the last four years is only of interest in so far as it sets a mark which must be surpassed during the future. In a business that is growing and changing as rapidly as this, it scarcely behooves me to give much thought to the past, except as it indicates the probable course of the future.

"If the motion picture is to hold the position which it now occupies in the realm of public amusement, it seems inevitable to me that all branches of the business, production, distribution and exhibition, must be improved. Perhaps the most serious question today is that which pertains to the method by which the exhibitor can get the most out of every picture which comes to his house. In other words, showmanship must be cultivated by those who possess it only in minute degrees. It is a distinct art in itself, but the rudiments of the game can be taught to anyone, and I am glad to say that steps have already been taken toward showing exhibitors of our pictures the best way of 'selling' not only the individual pictures but the theaters themselves to the public."

Monmouth Has a Series

It Will Appear in Two-Reel Features, Sixteen in Number, Known as "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal.'"

THE Monmouth Film Corporation announces the production of a series entitled "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal.'". It is the brain child of Frank L. Packard, famous as the author of "The Miracle Man" and other "best sellers."

This film novelty, while called a "series-serial," is a departure from the usual serial. Each of the sixteen episodes of "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Gray Seal,'" is a separate and individual adventure of a modern "Robin Hood," and is completely told, or rather visualized, within the two reels composing each episode. The name of the author is sufficient sponsor for the worth of the story.

It is to be produced under the direct supervision of Harry McRae Webster, president of the Monmouth Film Corporation, formerly director of the Essanay Film Company, and is also well remembered for his good work with the Universal.

Among the stars who will appear in the cast are: E. K. Lincoln, Edna Hunter, Paul Panzer and Doris Mitchell. In their support will appear a cast of players who, if it were not for the over-shadowing fame of the stars, would attract attention in themselves. "Jimmie Dale, Alias 'The Grey Seal,'" will be released to the public on October 16, and will appear weekly thereafter for sixteen weeks.

LESLIE ELTON, CARTOONIST, JOINS PARAMOUNT-BRAY FORCES.

Leslie Elton, the well-known cartoonist, who has contributed to the Philadelphia Record, Public Ledger, Motion Picture Magazine, Photoplay Journal and the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, has joined the forces at the Bray studio, and will contribute his comedy to the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, the weekly animated cartoon released by the Paramount Pictures Corporation. The enlargement of the staff of cartoonists at the Bray Studio will enable the producers to give a greater variety of subjects. Mr. Elton will work on a variety of subjects.

SLADDIN STARTS ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN.

Spencer G. Sladdin, director of publicity of the Consolidated Film Corporation, presenting "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the sixteen-episode super-serial, left Wednesday, August 23, for Chicago, to supervise the placing of the publicity campaign in that city. Paid advertisements and the novelization of the serial, done by Albert Payson Terhune, will be started in many representative newspapers. Mr. Sladdin expects to be gone about ten days. While his temporary headquarters will be in Chicago, his activities will take him over a large territory in the West.

World Film Matters

Rumors of a Change in Policy—Some Important Forthcoming Brady-Made Productions.

THERE are surface indications of a sharp revision of policy in the World-Brady camp, and these indications are borne out to an extent by the fact that Mr. Brady himself declines to either affirm or deny their authenticity.

The recent simultaneous engagement of two such prominent stage luminaries as Marie Dressler and Lew Fields for separate Brady productions was a matter of sufficient moment to occasion remark, the more so in connection with the coincident expiration, without renewal, of the contracts of several minor stars in the World firmament.

It is known that the World powers were not in the least dissatisfied with the work of these players or the popularity of the plays to which they had been contributing their services. It thus becomes evident that something is in contemplation which does not as yet appear to the cursory view.

A rumor has it that Mr. Brady has already contracted with a number of very conspicuous stars of the dramatic stage in addition to Miss Dressler and Mr. Fields, and that the names of these are being held back for announcement at the most propitious moment. If this report is correct, it probably means that the new stars will be seen in plays already made familiar to the public through the "regular" theater.

Of these plays Mr. Brady personally controls a large number, either produced originally by himself or acquired since his association with motion picture work. The value of these plays would be enhanced if their principal roles were to be personated by nationally famous actors or actresses.

For, while "Tillie's Night Out" by itself might be a screen attraction of doubtful quality, with Miss Dressler heading the cast it arouses immediate and general interest. The same situation applies to "The Man Who Stood Still," with Lew Fields acting the character played upon the speaking stage by Louis Mann.

This portraiture, by the way, will provide Mr. Fields with a long coveted opportunity to demonstrate the possession of gifts other than those of purely comic character.

The World Film Corporation will release for the week of September 11 "The Velvet Paw," with House Peters and Gail Kane in the leading roles, a play dealing with a woman lobbyist in Washington.

For the local atmosphere required in the taking of this picture, Director Maurice Tourneur of the Paragon Studio took a company of thirty players to Washington, where they remained for three weeks taking pictures in and around the Capitol. Then an exact replica of the Senate Chamber was reproduced at the Paragon Studio, where characters most resembling the leading lights of our national political center were chosen.

The gallery, built to hold 300 persons, and the main chamber required more than half the entire floor space of the Paragon Studio.

Besides House Peters and Gail Kane, Ned Burton and Frank Goldsmith, Charles D. Mackay, Charles Edwards and Alex Shannon also play prominent parts. The photoplay is exceptionally good, due to the efforts of Cameraman John V. de Brock.

Alice Brady will be starred in the principal feminine role of "Bought and Paid For."

"Bought and Paid For," a sensationally successful stage production, was Mr. Brady's initial offering as producing manager of his new theater, the Playhouse.

The drama ran far into its second year in New York without a break, and afterward toured the American continent, attracting record audiences.

The play was written by George Broadhurst, the author of "The Dollar Mark" and other plays which have held enviable places in the motion picture field.

William A. Brady, under whose personal direction "Bought and Paid For" was first introduced to the public from the stage of his own theater, will also superintend its transit to the photodrama in the studios of the film corporation of which he is the director general.

ASIDE FROM THAT, HE'S ALL RIGHT.

After several weeks of illness, due to an automobile accident, in which he had his nose, three ribs and his jaw broken, and necessitated his getting store teeth, Mr. Bud Fisher has resumed his usual vocation of having Mutt and Jeff appear in the various newspapers throughout the United States. It will be recalled that Mr. Fisher was seriously hurt in an automobile accident, his car having skidded and turned turtle.

"Conquest of Canaan" Nearing Completion

Frohman Amusement Corporation's New Feature Will Soon Be Ready for the Market.

"CLOCK-MADE" features seem to have no place in the lexicon of the Frohman Amusement Corporation. 'Time enough to do everything essential if it takes a year," is the slogan of that concern, and under the direction of George Irving, the next production, "The Conquest of Canaan," is nearing completion after seven weeks of perfect weather conditions, ideal work on the part of the cast and more than satisfactory studio arrangements.

Having credited "Jaffery," William J. Locke's delightful story, for William R. Hearst's International Service, and having seen this production granted the honor of initiating that company's feature releasing, Mr. Sherrill, head of the Frohman concern, again sought the market of popular novels for a following feature, and Booth Tarkington's story was secured.

"The Conquest of Canaan" in its pictured form will have a cast of players almost of the all-star variety. Edith Taliaferro, the princess charming of that historic theatrical family, and Jack Sherrill, famed for his work in "Just Out of College" and "Then I'll Come Back to You," are handling the two principal roles, with Ralph Delmore playing the virile part of Judge Pike.

These three characters were the great outstanding incidents in the Tarkington novel, while the roles of Mamie Pike, played by Marie Edith Wells, Claudine, portrayed by Gene La Motte, the Squire played by David Davies, and Peter as played by Martin Mann, has been enlarged in scope so that the tale has an added interest and added features which Mr. Tarkington himself indorsed after reading the scenario.

In addition to those mentioned above, the cast of "The Conquest of Canaan" will contain John Sutherland, May Price, Madeline Cadieux, Ralph Dean, Howard Missimer, George Melville, Francis Lincoln, Walter Hiers and Jack Hopkins. The story contains three hundred and fifty-one scenes and will, in all probability, be in six reels.

The Frohman Company have under option now five big plans which were secured, last week from one of the foremost theatrical producing concerns. These plays are all of sufficient importance to receive special treatment and will be given the same thorough production as have those made under Mr. Irving, in the past.

PATHE'S FOR THE WEEK OF SEPTEMBER 10.

Pathe has a generous program consisting of thirteen reels, for the week of September 10. The feature, "The Fear of Poverty," is a gripping five-reel Gold Rooster drama with a vital message featuring Florence La Badie in a dual role. It is produced by Thanhouser and directed by Frederic Sullivan.

"A Change of Heart" is a two-reel Pathe drama. It is a touching story of a crook's redemption through the memory of his "best girl"—his mother. There are splendid characterizations and the story has a convincing charm. Thurlow Bergen is the star.

The current release of "The Grip of Evil," "The Dollar Kings," is built around a very strong theme. Because he lives up to his labor reform ideals the son of the president of a colossal Cardboard Trust loses his home. John Burton backs him with his huge fortune and gives him free rein to build up a workingman's Utopia.

"Busting the Beanery" is a slapstick Heinie comedy. Heinie and his partner in crime and comedy give a "finished" touch to an emporium of eats that would make a famished tramp shake with envy. A slapstick comedy with a good "kick" to it.

"Pear Growing" and "Historic Mobile" make up an excellent split reel.

The Pathe News No. 74 on Wednesday, September 13, and No. 75 on Saturday, September 16, finish out the program.

PATHE ISSUES "FOLLOW UP" PRESS SHEET.

Pathe is to "follow up" a picture with a press sheet after release. "The Woman's Law" is the picture in question. J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, felt that the experiment was worth trying and selected "The Woman's Law" as the subject of it since it was felt that this Arrow-made picture was one of the strongest productions of the year. Florence Reed attained in it the topmost heights of screen art and the story is so good that her opportunities to register effectively are many.

The "follow up" press sheet is designed not only to help book the picture, but also to aid the exhibitor to adequately advertise it.

Metro's Fall Program

Contains "Romeo and Juliet" and a 14-Episode Serial by Bushman and Bayne, With Many Other Splendid Subjects.

METRO'S fall and early winter plans, which have just been announced in the general offices of that corporation in the Longacre Building include the most extensive program and a greater variety of activities that this company ever prepared. First in importance, perhaps, is the definite announcement that the $250,000 screen reproduction of "Romeo and Juliet," with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the title roles, will be ready for release the first week in October.

Metro has also planned the production of a Bushman-Bayne serial. It will consist of fourteen episodes in two reels each, and Miss Bayne and Mr. Bushman will be given the greatest opportunity ever afforded them to display their versatility. W. Christy Cabanne has been engaged to direct it. At present Mr. Cabanne is on the Pacific Coast and is completing a feature picture in which Lillian Gish is starred. He will hurry East to take up his work here as soon as that feature is completed.

In the meantime Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne have begun work on another five-part Metro wonderplay called "A Diplomatic Romance." They are now in Washington, D. C., with a company of players, where all of the exterior scenes and many interiors will be photographed. Charles Horan, who has been directing Lionel Barrymore in Metro productions, will direct the Bushman-Bayne Company in this production. P. Thad. Volkman will assist in the direction. This feature will be released on the Metro program October 16.

Ethel Barrymore, who is under a long time contract to appear in Metro wonderplays, will next be seen in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." This will be a five-part picturization of the play of the same name by Margaret Deland, and a strong supporting cast of stage and screen artists is being engaged to appear with Miss Barrymore.

The fall releases of features in which Mme. Petrova is starred will include "The Secret of Eve," "Extravagance," and "The Weaker Sex." Two of these features are almost completed and the third will be put in readiness for release upon the return of Mme. Petrova from Bar Harbor, Me., where she is spending a brief vacation.

Emmy Wehlan, the dainty and gifted Viennese star, who has just been seen in "The Pretenders," a recent Metro-Rolfe production, has signed a long time contract, and hereafter will appear regularly upon the Metro program.

Viola Dana will be seen on the Metro program September 4 in "The Light of Happiness." This feature was written and directed by John H. Collins. "Mister 44," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the stellar roles, will be released September 11. This is a picturization of the novel of the same name by E. J. Bath, and was scenariozed by Charles A. Taylor. Henry Otto is directing the production.

"The Wheel of Justice" is the name of the sensational five-part feature in which Emily Stevens, the well known stage and screen star, is starred. She is supported by Frank Mills and a big cast. "The Wheel of Justice" deals with the subject of circumstantial evidence and will be released September 18. George D. Baker is directing this feature.

Mabel Taliaferro, who is now working exclusively in Metro screen productions, will next be seen in "The Light o' Love." It is a story with the action laid along the coast of Maine, where Miss Taliaferro and her company are now at work. Edwin Carewe is directing the production and it will be released September 25.

William Nigh, the versatile Metro director, who not only writes and directs his own features, but stars in many of them, will be seen on the Metro program in "Life's Shadows" on October 2. Irene Howley, who has been seen in other Metro Wonderplays, is starred with Mr. Nigh in "Life's Shadows." There is a strong supporting cast including Robert Elliott, Roy Clair and Kathleen Allairs. David Thompson assisted in the direction of the feature.

Nance O'Neil, who is a new star on the Metro program, will make her first appearance in "The Iron Woman," October 9. Miss O'Neil is supported by a cast of stellar proportion, which includes Alfred Hichman, Christine Mayo, Evelyn Brent, Louise Hale, Einar Linden, and others. Carl Harbaugh is directing this production, which is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Margaret Deland. "Gates of Eden," with Viola Dana in the starring role, will be released October 23. Mr. Collins is directing this feature.

Lionel Barrymore will be seen in "The Brand of Cowardice" on October 30. John W. Noble, who directed the big "Romeo and Juliet" production, is directing the Barrymore picture. This will be followed on November 6 with "Big Tremaine," with Harold Lockwood and May Allison starred. "Big Tremaine" is a picturization of the popular novel of the same name, and it will be directed by Henry Otto. Emily Stevens will be seen again on the Metro program November 13 in "Infelice."

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, the foremost purveyors of refined comedy on the screen, will be seen every week in a new one-reel comedy. Ralph Herz, the popular comedian, will also make a one-reel comedy every week under the direction of "Billy" Quirk. The weekly Metro Travelogue will continue as an attractive feature on the Metro program, and some startling novelties are promised for early release.

Metro has taken over another studio in New York City. The old Victor studio, located at Forty-third street and Tenth avenue, has been engaged, and after it is overhauled and rearranged it will be the home of the Bushman-Bayne players. The Herz comedies will also be produced there on the third floor of the studio.

Another Selznick Company

Makes Deal With Anderson and Weber to Star Kitty Gordon in Big Features.

ANOTHER deal was effected by Lewis J. Selznick last week when he closed negotiations for the control of a big series of pictures starring Kitty Gordon, the famous beauty of the light operatic stage. The transaction was with Lawrence Weber, the well known stage and screen producer, and G. M. Anderson, better known as "Broncho Billy" Anderson of Essanay fame.

The first of the new Kitty Gordon pictures indicates the character of all the productions. It will be an adaptation of one of the biggest American novels ever written, "Vera the Medium,' by the late Richard Harding Davis, the world-famous war correspondent and writer of stirring fiction.

With the new Kitty Gordon features Mr. Anderson will return to studio activity. He will be director in chief of all the productions, and has already begun preparations for the first picture at the Blache Studio, Fort Lee, where the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation will share quarters with the new Selznick company.

Miss Gordon has appeared in only a few pictures but her beautiful face and figure are already known to millions of admiring picture patrons and the demand for her continuance as a screen star has been incessant. The new series of pictures will be chosen from subjects that will give Miss Gordon a better opportunity than she has had so far to make the most of her personality and dramatic gifts.

The central role in "Vera the Medium" is tailor made for Miss Gordon. The story is a typical Davis conception, clear, strong in action and rapid in development, with an absorbing love interest.

DR. REED GUEST OF LASKY COMPANY.

Dr. R. Ralston Reed, winner of the Columbia University Prize Play Contest, held last winter under the auspices of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is leaving this week for the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., to be present during the making of his prize photoplay, "Witchcraft," in which Fannie Ward will appear soon as the star.

When the photoplay class at Columbia University was established the Lasky Company through Samuel Goldfish, offered to produce the best play written during the school year and as a prize to send as its guest the winner to the Lasky studios in California. William C. De Mille chose as the best manuscript one by Dr. Ralston Reed, of Morristown, N. J. "Witchcraft," in addition to Miss Ward as the star, will be given an elaborate production and the cast will include Jack Dean, Paul Weigel and Lillian Leighton.

MISS STERNE WRITES "SONNY JIM" BOOK.

Miss Elaine Sterne has written and the W. A. Wilde Company of Boston and Chicago will publish on September 1 a 314-page book entitled "Sonny Jim." Miss Sterne has used as the basis of the eight stories contained in the book the scripts from which the Vitagraph Company produced these interesting tales of childhood and in which Bobby Connelly was featured. The portrait of Bobby appears on the cover. "Sonny Jim" is illustrated by half-tone reproductions of stills taken in the course of the making of the subjects. The price of the book will be $1.

Strong Men in Consolidated

Heads of New Producing Company Men of Varied Experience in Motion Picture Business.

LUDWIG G. B. ERB and O. E. Goebel, heads of the Consolidated Film Corporation, make a strong combination. The Consolidated Film Corporation is about to release the first episode of the sixteen-episode serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery"—the first picture that this company will have put out, and already the attention of the trade is directed toward the two men who have shown such constructive ability in the motion picture business.

Ludwig G. B. Erb.

Ludwig G. B. Erb is a pioneer film man. He began his career when films first became a practical proposition. He specialized along the technical line and today is known for the remarkable results he has achieved. Mr. Erb is considered a genius in his line. He was one of the first independent managers in the business. Today he is the owner of the Erbograph Company. During Mr. Erb's busy life he found time to work out at least a score of inventions that have revolutionized the practical end of the film business.

Mr. Goebel is a young man—just having crossed the thirty-year mark—but he is filled with energy. His entrance into the picture field was a more or less picturesque one. In his early twenties he was graduated from the St. Louis University of Law. He lost no time in opening offices and soon had many wealthy clients whom he was serving. One day, one of these came to the young lawyer and said: "I have money I desire to invest. I am interested in the motion picture business. Of course, all is not gold that glitters, and I want you to investigate it for me and upon your report I will make my decision of investment."

Oscar E. Goebel.

Mr. Goebel lost no time investigating, and shortly the St. Louis Motion Picture Company was formed. O. E. Goebel was president and O. E. Goebel was treasurer. When Mr. Goebel decided to come to New York, he had a big idea. He arrived here and immediately began to collaborate with Mr. Erb. Now Mr. Erb is considered a genius in the technical lines of motion pictures. He is a tireless worker, but there is a method in his hard work. When a producer who is pressed for time and wishes the most expert piece of work possible to be done, he feels perfectly safe when once this work is accepted by Mr. Erb and in his hands, for few can equal the product that he will turn out. Well, Mr. Goebel and Mr. Erb met, and the Consolidated Film Corporation was formed. They decided to produce "The Crimson Stain Mystery" and give to the world something new.

Mr. Goebel is genial, pleasant and imparts to all those about him an enthusiasm in their work that cannot fail of making whatever he goes into a success.

Thomas Holding to Co-Star With Kathlyn Williams

THOMAS HOLDING, who for the past year has been appearing in leading parts for Famous Players, has been engaged to co-star with Kathlyn Williams at the Morosco-Pallas studios for the Paramount Program. Immediately after signing the agreement in New York, Mr. Holding left for the Los Angeles studios of his new associates.

As a photoplayer, Mr. Holding has gained a large following in this country since his motion picture debut in "The Eternal City," a little over a year ago. As leading man for Pauline Frederick and Marie Doro he appeared in various Famous Players successes including "Sold," "The White Pearl," "Bella Donna," "Lydia Gilmore," and "The Moment Before." Prior to his advent to motion pictures, Mr. Holding enjoyed a most successful career on the speaking stage in this country as well as in England and Australia.

Thomas Holding.

Just before departing for the West Coast, Mr. Holding expressed enthusiasm over his new affiliation and the fact that he was to co-star with Miss Williams. "I have often watched the remarkable work of this beautiful actress and although I have never had the pleasure of meeting her personally I feel that I already know her well. As an associate in a big subject I feel that she is a most desirable partner and with facilities such as are offered by the Morosco-Pallas organizations and evidenced in all their photoplays I am naturally most enthusiastic over the outcome of my new engagement."

MELIES TRANSFERS RITER TO CHICAGO.

W. C. Riter, who has represented Melies Manufacturing Company on the Pacific Coast, visited the New York office this week and has been allotted the Middle West territory, with headquarters in Chicago, Illinois. Mr. Riter is a live, hustling young man who appreciates the quality of Knickerbocker Star features and Vim comedies, released through General Film service, and is an enthusiastic salesman in consequence.

Mr. Riter knows pictures from the exhibitors' standpoint, having been press representative for American and Liberty theaters, in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1912. He later became assistant manager of the American theater, and held this until the fall of 1913, resigning to accept the position of booker in the Salt Lake office of the General Film Company, where he was later made assistant manager. From there he was transferred to the Denver branch in the same position.

O. A. C. LUND TO DIRECT FOR THANHOUSER.

Edwin Thanhouser announces that he has added to his staff of directors O. A. C. Lund, who will start immediately to produce a five reel feature to be released through the Pathe exchanges.

Mr. Lund has had a long and honorable career in motion pictures, having directed many of the best features produced by the Metro, World and Eclair companies. He is a writer as well as a director. Among the many plays he wrote and produced are "Autumn," "The Dollar Mark," "The Marked Woman," "Silent Jim," "Just Jim," "The Price of Malice" and "Dorian's Divorce." Among the stars he has directed are Violet Mersereau, Lionel Barrymore, Hamilton Reville, Barbara Tennant, Harry B. Carey and Robert Warwick.

Denison to Assist Paramount Treasurer

Former Manager at Detroit Comes to New York—Brooks to Succeed Him—Other Vehicle City Changes.

THE manager of the Detroit exchange of Paramount Picture Corporation, D. Leo Denison, has been appointed personal representative of James Steele, secretary and treasurer of the Paramount Pictures Corporation. Mr. Denison has already assumed his new duties, making his headquarters at the company's New York offices. Mr. Denison will have supervision over the Detroit, Chicago, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh exchanges and will also assist materially in the various sales campaigns to be projected by Paramount during the coming year. Mr. Denison came to Detroit when the local exchange was opened over a year ago. He was formerly connected with the Pittsburgh and Chicago offices of the Paramount, and has previously been associated with George Kleine, the Harry Davis Enterprises in Pittsburgh, the Shubert Theatrical Enterprises of New York, and with other legitimate operators. He is an enthusiast about Paramount productions.

D. Leo Denison.

J. O. Brooks has been appointed manager of the Paramount exchange at Detroit to succeed Mr. Denison. Mr. Brooks has been associated with the local exchange as special representative for the past year and is also a recruit from the ranks of the legitimate stage and George Kleine.

A new publicity department has been created at the Detroit exchange in charge of William M. Elliott, for many years advance man with Cohan & Harris, Shubert and other leading road shows. This new department will aim to bring about closer co-operation between exhibitor and the Paramount exchange on advertising and publicity. Mr. Elliott will provide a campaign of publicity for each exhibitor, all without cost. Mr. Elliott knows the kind of matter exhibitors can use, whether he is in a small or big town.

Jack Loranger, formerly with the Casino Feature Film Company, of Detroit, and C. C. Pippin, formerly with the Mutual exchange in Detroit, have been engaged as traveling representatives in Michigan for Paramount.

Harry Hanning has been appointed manager of the advertising poster department, and G. Norman Shield, formerly with the V-L-S-E in Kansas City, has been made assistant.

George Almardt, formerly with the Triangle at Buffalo, has been appointed in charge of the single-reel program of Paramount, comprising Bray cartoons, Pictographs and Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.

BIG FOUR CHANGES.

Several important shifts in the personnel of the V-L-S-E's selling organization were made during the past week, the principal ones of which were the transfer of C. W. Sawin to Atlanta as manager of the exchange in that city, and the elevation of W. K. Howard of the Chicago office as manager of the Minneapolis Branch.

Mr. Sawin, who has gone to the Atlanta office, has been in charge of the Minneapolis exchange ever since the inception of the V-L-S-E.

C. A. Meade, just recently transferred from the Dallas office of the Big Four to Cleveland, has appointed as his assistant branch manager J. R. Johnson, formerly branch manager in Cleveland for the Pathe Exchange.

Several promotions also have been made in the Boston branch by Manager Balsdon. Alfred Breault has been made bookkeeper, supplanting Clarence Fishel, who recently was transferred to the Cleveland branch, and Miss Julia Sullivan, promoted from the stenographic ranks to become assistant bookkeeper and billing clerk.

Paul Hayes, who has been handling the publicity work for this exchange, has been appointed to the sales staff. L. A. McCracken, of the shipping department, has been made booker, and J. R. Grindley advanced from poster clerk to shipping clerk.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of August 27 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"The Victory of Conscience" at the Strand.

LOU TELLEGEN in the Jesse L. Lasky Company photoplay, "The Victory of Conscience," was the feature at the Strand theater for the week beginning August 27. The story combines all the atmosphere and charm of a costume play with facts and scenes as recent as the first days of the great war. Lou Tellegen as a gay young Parisian who causes the downfall of a young girl, becomes a priest in an endeavor to atone for his sin. One of the most exciting of the many tense scenes in the screen play occurs when the invading Germans attack a French convent, which is defended by the penitent priest and his brothers.

Subsidiary features were the Strand Topical Review, Travelogue, a short comedy, and a Mutt & Jeff cartoon. Soloists for the week included Bruce Weyman and Arthur Clough.

"Plain Jane" at the Rialto.

Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray in "Plain Jane" were the stars at the Rialto theater. The picture is a modern version of the "Ugly Duckling," in which Miss Barriscale, as a boarding house slavey in a small college town, idolizes a serious-minded college youth, played by Mr. Ray. He remains blind to her charms until he discovers that "fine feathers make fine birds."

The educational film, taken specially for the Rialto by Robert C. Bruce, showed a trip up the War Creek Trail to the ancient battlefield of the Skagit Indians in Northern Washington.

Vincente Balester, Gertrude Hutcheson and James Price were the soloists.

"The Honorable Friend" at the Broadway.

The chief attraction at the Broadway theater was the Jesse L. Lasky-Paramount picture, "The Honorable Friend," with Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor, in the stellar role. The photodrama was written especially for Mr. Hayakawa by Elizabeth McGaffey.

Hayakawa is seen as a young Japanese gardener, working for a wealthy and unscrupulous Japanese curio dealer. An interesting and dramatic love story runs through the play and is worked out in an unusual manner.

The weekly news, scenic and educational studies, and a two-part comedy rounded out the program.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four new Triangle Pictures were shown. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Henry Walthall in "Pillars of Society," and a new Sennett-Keystone comedy were on the program. Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Bessie Barriscale and Charles Ray in "Home," and a Keystone Comedy made up the picture portion of the entertainment.

GENERAL FILM VITAGRAPHS.

Vitagraph releases on the General Film program for the second week of September consists of two one-part comedies of a high quality.

Mary Anderson in "It's a Bear," from the pen of Mark Swan and produced by Dave Smith, starts off the week. Mary has a role that is somewhat different than she has been seen in recently and furnishes many funny situations, with the assistance of a little poodle dog given her by her hubby, but stolen by a janitor who is "charged" with something stronger than soda water. The janitor then sends her a bundle of sausages with a black ribbon tied around them. The real fun comes when an amateur trance medium endeavors to bring the dog back. At the close of the picture the odds are still on the sausage machine. In the cast with "Sunshine Mary" are Archie Warren, George Kunkel and Ralph MacComas.

Hughie Mack again lives up to his reputation of laugh-maker in "A Villainous Villain," the latest effort of the Graham Baker-Lawrence Semon combination of authors and produced by Semon. Hughie as a detective goes through an awful deal at the hands of a villainous gang, but comes out on top when an auto filled with the lawless ones goes to the bottom of the ocean. Even in the water's depth they "pull off some dirty work!" The last scene shows Hughie with the heroine on the rear of the police launch, safe from all harm. Patsy DeForest, William Shea, Harry Hammill and Edward Dunn make up the remainder of the cast.

What Greater Vitagraph is Doing

Unusually Strong Program of Big Features Planned for Early Release.

VITAGRAPH'S fall program will surpass anything that this organization has ever before attempted in the way of feature productions. Such names as E. H. Sothern, Barney Bernard, Peggy Hyland, Anita Stewart, Lillian Walker, William Duncan, Naomi Childers and Marc MacDermott stand out prominently in the all-star casts of the Blue Ribbon Features now ready.

Starting on September 4 Vitagraph presents the famous Hebrew comedian, Barney Bernard, who will make his screen bow in "Phantom Fortunes," an original story from the pen of Samuel Tauber, who excels in word pictures of Hebrew characters. The exhibitors of America can assure their patrons that this picture will set a new record for clean, wholesome comedy as true to life as anything ever written. Barney Bernard's name and fame are known throughout the length and breadth of the land for his inimitable characterization of Abe Potash in "Potash and Perlmutter."

On September 11 the Vitagraph will release "His Wife's Good Name," featuring Miss Lucille Lee Stewart. This is a powerful drama in which Miss Stewart has an exceptionally good opportunity to prove that she is one of the screen's finest emotional actresses.

On September 18 Vitagraph will release "Through the Wall," a master drama of a super criminal written by Cleveland Moffett, who can tell a story of this character better than any living author. Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt are featured. The picture is a Western Vitagraph that can be put in the same category as "God's Country and the Woman," and other pictures directed by Rollin S. Sturgeon.

On the last week in September the long-awaited Vitagraph-Sothern release will make its appearance. The renowned E. H. Sothern has for his first appearance in motion pictures a play called "The Chattel," written by Paul West. Of it Mr. Sothern says: "I never dreamed that the limitations of the camera would permit me to register as I have in this well-plotted story. I consider it quite an honor to make my first appearance in motion pictures under the Vitagraph banner and to know that literally millions of people will have the opoprtunity of seeing this production into which I have put my very heart and soul." Supporting Mr. Sothern in "The Chattel" is the famous English beauty, Peggy Hyland. Fred Thomson, who will direct Mr. Sothern in all of his Vitagraph releases, has attained in "The Chattel" a standard of excellence which will endure for years to come.

Other pictures equally as good as these just mentioned are in store for exhibitors and their patrons. Lillian Walker, one of Vitagraph's charming ingenues, will be seen this fall in a screen version of "The Blue Envelope Mystery," the serial story that created such widespread interest when it appeared in the Woman's Home Companion. Wilfrid North has directed this mystery story, which was written by Sophie Kerr, the internationally famous fiction writer.

One of the finest pictures which Anita Stewart has ever done is "The Combat," which will be a fall release. Ralph W. Ince is responsible for the direction of Miss Stewart in this charming story of society life.

During the month of September Earle Williams, an international screen favorite, makes his bow at the wheel of "The Scarlet Runner," Vitagraph's mile-a-minute motor series in twelve episodes adapted from the book written by C. N. and A. M. Williamson. Mr. Williams plays the lead in every episode, each a complete story. As the genial Christopher Race, owner of "The Scarlet Runner," a motor which is famous for its speed, Mr. Williams succeeds in getting mixed up in one mysterious and thrilling adventure after another. Twelve beautiful and talented young women appear in the various episodes of "The Scarlet Runner." Among them are Edith Storey, Lillian Tucker, Marguerite Blake, Zena Keefe, Betty Howe, Gypsy O'Brien, Adele Kelly, Billie Billings and Jean Stuart. The first episode of "The Scarlet Runner," entitled "The Car and His Majesty," and directed by William P. S. Earle will be released September 18. Mr. Earle also directed "The Jacobean House," the fourth episode, and Wally Van has directed the ten other two-part episodes.

WATSON NOT FOR LEGITIMATE.

Harry Watson, Jr., who plays the title role in George Kleine's "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer," wishes to deny a report which is in circulation to the effect that he has returned to the legitimate stage. Mr. Watson, now under the direction of Louis Myll, emphatically states that he is in the picture game "for all time."

Kalem's September Releases

A Ham Comedy, "Girl from 'Frisco" Series, an Ivy Close Subject, and a Helen Gibson on the List.

KALEM'S first release for the week of September 11 finds Ham, the popular comedian, coming forward with a substitute for gasoline that might find favor with motorists complaining of the sky-high price of that necessity.

In "Patented by Ham," the big fellow sets out to earn a $50,000 reward offered by a prominent automobile manufacturer for a gasoline substitute. Ham presents a mysterious powder, but his real substitute is Bud, whose job is to push the auto from behind. After pushing a seven passenger car bearing Ham and Ethel up the steepest hill in Los Angeles, Bud falls down an open man-hole just as the reward is about to be handed over and all is off. "Patented by Ham" is released on Tuesday, September 12.

Kalem's next release for this week brings "The Treasure of Cibola," sixth episode in "The Girl from 'Frisco" series. Marin Sais and True Boardman meet with exciting adventures in this episode following the trail of legendary treasure. Wednesday, September 13, is the date of issue for "The Treasure of Cibola."

On Friday, September 15, Ivy Close is presented in "The Mysterious Double," which finds the English beauty playing two roles. Henry Murdoch, Arthur Albertson, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross are others in the cast.

In "The Hoodoo of Division B," issued on Saturday, September 16, Helen Gibson performs one of the most novel feats of her career. Aboard a locomotive she jumps to a flat car on an adjoining track, uncouples it from a runaway engine and then jumps back to her own locomotive. Then, coming to a switch, Helen takes it just behind the runaway engine and succeeds in coupling up, bringing it to a stop.

Veta Searl

FRANK POWELL, the man who first saw the picture possibilities of Theda Bara and Blanche Sweet, believes he has made another discovery. This time it is Veta Searl, a young woman described as the fortunate possessor of "personality plus," on whom the Columbus-like eyes of the director have rested. Hitherto unknown to stage or screen, Miss Searl will be seen in a prominent part in the support of Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis in the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

Veta Searl.

"I have always believed," says Mr. Powell, "that one of the most important factors contributing to the success of the player in pictures is that intangible something which, for lack of a better term, we call personality. Given that and with it intelligence, add an inherent sense of the fitness of things, and you have the stuff that makes stars.

"Take, for example, Miss Sweet's case. In 1909 when I was directing comedies for the Biograph, Miss Sweet came to the studio job hunting. I saw and talked with her and decided to give her a chance. She played Cupid, and appeared in three scenes. They were enough. The next day she was cast for the lead in 'Too Many Husbands.'

"A friend wrote me of Miss Bara. She had never been on the screen. At my suggestion she waited three months until we were ready to picturize 'A Fool There Was.' She immediately was cast for the vampire and the rest is screen history.

"Recently I met Miss Searl. She impressed me as possessing in abundance those qualities which make for prompt and lasting screen success, and I engaged her on the spot."

"Thrills in Shielding Shadow"

Every Episode of Fifteen in New Pathe Serial Carries Some Startling Situation.

IT is no longer possible to deceive motion picture audiences by throwing a dummy over a cliff or substituting for the leading lady, when the scenario calls for a hazardous feat. "The public is familiar with the tricks of the camera," says Louis J. Gasnier, president of the Astra Film Corporation, which is producing "The Shielding Shadow" serial for Pathe, "therefore, we must give them exactly what the scenario calls for.

"In 'The Shielding Shadow' we have combined everything which experience has shown that the motion picture public wants. We have a beautiful girl in the lead, supported by two splendid actors, and an actress famous both on the stage and screen, Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard, Leon Bary and Madeline Traverse."

"We have adventure, love, mystery, and a strong element of suspense throughout. There is a mysterious character called Ravengar, which will baffle audiences more than did the mystery of the Laughing Mask in 'The Iron Claw.' Then there is the Shielding Shadow itself. This is a mask of black with two gleaming eyes and white hands clutching a dagger. It appears whenever Leontine, the heroine, is in danger."

"There are more thrills, greater thrills, than there ever have been in any other serials. We show a prisoner escape at sea by being thrown overboard in a coffin. We show him washed to the rocky shore of a barren island. He finds the treasure for which hundreds of men have sacrificed their lives. As he sits on a rock examining it, an octopus creeps out of the sea, and after a terrific fight, drags him into the water.

"In the first episode there is a fire at sea in a crowded ship. This is probably the most realistic fire scene ever filmed. Fifty members of the cast were fitted out with asbestos suits. They were soaked with oil and the match applied. While the camera clicked, the human torches plunged into the sea.

"In one of the early episodes there is a balloon race in which twelve balloons take part. The scene shows Miss Darmond and Ravengar in a balloon in which the villain has planted a dynamite bomb. In mid-air the bomb explodes. There is only one parachute. In it Miss Darmond escapes by dropping into the sea. Ravengar is compelled to jump. The audience sees the real parachute drop and a real jump into the sea with the balloon's basket as Ravengar's parachute."

There are plenty of other thrills in "The Shielding Shadow" according to Mr. Gasnier at least one great big sensation in each episode.

METCALF'S CATALOGUE MOST COMPREHENSIVE.

We are in receipt of "The A B C of Moving Pictures," an alphabetical arrangement of photoplay equipment, issued by G. A. Metcalfe, the progressive Pacific Coast supply man, with stores in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle. The book, which is of 176 pages, was compiled by Walter L. Stern, sales manages. It is a credit to the house of Metcalfe. The catalogue is clearly printed on fine paper and is profusely illustrated.

One of the features of the publication is the alphabetical arrangement of the articles described. These cover, among others, the products of the Nicholas Power Company, Baird Company, Precision Machine Company, Northern Seating Company, Newman Manufacturing Company, Caille Brothers, Minusa Cine Products Company, Westinghouse Electric Company and General Electric Company.

It is a most comprehensive publication.

RALPH INCE ONLY ON VACATION.

So many conflicting rumors have been circulated about Vitagraph's Bay Shore studio that the company's executives have asked that the truth be made known at once.

Ralph Ince, producer and general manager of the Bay Shore studio, is leaving for California, where he expects to visit his brother and enjoy a well-earned rest.

During his absence the entire staff of people at Bay Shore —stock members, cameramen, scenario writers and electricians—will be employed at the large Flatbush studios. Mr. Ince is several productions ahead of his release schedule and feels that he can be spared at this time. "His Wife's Good Name," featuring Lucille Lee Stewart, one of Mr. Ince's latest offerings, is to be released September 11, and another one of his productions comes out on the 9th of October, featuring Anita Stewart, beloved of the fans and a sister of Miss Lucille Lee.

Irving Lesser

IRVING LESSER, who for the past year and a half has been manager of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., at San Francisco, has been appointed manager of the branch of the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., and the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., maintained at Los Angeles, succeeding E. D. Tate. Mr. Lesser, who is a brother of Sol L. Lesser, of Pacific Coast film exchange fame, is one of the youngest men in the business, being but nineteen years of age, but has had no lack of experience and training, having been connected with the business for years.

Irving Lesser.

He assisted his father in the stirring days following the great fire of 1906 and while still in school took out pictures and played them on a percentage basis. He has a very wide following in the San Francisco Bay region and it is confidently anticipated by his friends that it will be but a short time before he is as well known and as well liked in the Los Angeles field. His marked success in the moving picture field is attributed to his winning personality and to his thorough knowledge of the business, there being no branch of the trade with which he is not familiar.

No successor has been named to fill his former position at the San Francisco office of Sol L. Lesser, but for the present the Golden Gate bookings will be supervised by Louis Hyman, manager of the All-Star Feature Distributors. Before leaving for Los Angeles Mr. Lesser was presented with a handsome silver card case by associates in the film exchange, a gift deeply appreciated by him.

MOTION PICTURES AT HOPEWELL, VA.

Hopewell, Va., the little town near Petersburg that was built by the Du Pont Powder Company, is soon to have a first class motion picture theater. S. A. Xippas and Roy C. Davis, the owners, were in New York the other day, making final arrangements for service against the opening date, which will be soon. The house is to be called the Marcelle Theater, and it is said to have cost about $30,000.

LUNA PARK TO ENTERTAIN PLAYERS.

On Wednesday night, September 6, motion picture players and members of the Screen Club will be the guests of Luna Park, Coney Island. Tickets for admission to the park and several of its attractions, including Bostock's wild animal arena, are now being distributed.

There will be staged a free modern dance contest in Luna's ballroom, the contestants being restricted to motion picture artists only. There will also be a drawing contest to determine which woman and man shall make an ascension in the captive balloon Luna.

Those who haven't already been supplied with tickets may secure them through their representatives, the Screen Club, or the publicity department of the company with which they are engaged. In case of inclement weather the date will be postponed to Thursday night, September 7.

JANE GAIL LEAVING CALIFORNIA.

Word has been received in New York that Jane Gail, who for four years has been successfully featured in productions of the London Film Company and the Universal Company, has resigned from the latter organization and shortly will leave the coast for New York. Miss Gail has just completed her work in the interiors of the big subject, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," the exteriors of which were taken in the West Indies. Miss Gail's reason for leaving Universal City is said to be the very good one that she prefers to live in the East.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"THE LITTLE LIAR" (Triangle).

Mae Marsh, assisted by Bobby Harron, returns to the Triangle program the week of September 10 in as whimsical and interesting a story as has been seen on the motion picture screen in many moons. Mae Marsh, as "the little liar," is delightful, and Bobby Barron, as the reporter who sticks to her through thick and thin, is decidedly convincing.

Prominent in the support of Miss Marsh are Olga Grey and Scene from "The Little Liar" (Triangle).

Carl Stockdale. As an adventuress who, for the time being, stoops to become a shoplifter, Olga Grey is excellent, and Mr. Stockdale, as her partner in crime, is finely cast.

The story has to do with a little girl who has an overpowering fondness for telling lies. It seems impossible for her to get the better of the fault, and her own parents finally give her up as incorrigible. Thinking to cure her, they place her at work in a boarding-house where she meets the young reporter, the shop-lifter, and the latter's side partner.

It is the general excellence of the entire company, perhaps, which stands out the most prominently in "The Little Liar." A better balanced cast would be hard to find, and the combination of Miss Marsh and Mr. Harron which has proven so effective in other Triangle-Fine Arts features was never a more happy one than in this picture.

Decidedly interesting are the scenes depicting life in the cheap boarding house to which her parents have sentenced the little girl. Lloyd Ingraham, who directs the picture, has found and preserved the atmosphere of that atrocity known as the boarding-house, with painstaking fidelity, and it adds not a little to the feeling of conviction the picture carries with it.

Miss Marsh, who was last seen on the Triangle program as the winsome little Irish colleen, plays a decidedly different role in this feature, and stamps herself as one of the screen's leading character actresses.

REMARKABLE ILLUSIONS IN "THE SALESLADY'S DREAM."

"The Saleslady's Dream," the latest fashion playlet of the International Film Service, Inc., is now being staged and will be shown for the first time on September 4th. "The Saleslady's Dream" is by far the most pretentious fashion playlet yet produced by the International, and introduces a number of surprising illusions.

The saleslady is seen in the showrooms of a fashionable modiste. It is closing time. Tired by her work, she sits down, with a book, "A Princess for a Day." She reads a few lines and falls asleep.

Instantly she is transformed into a gorgeously gowned princess, seated on a throne. The "dummies" upon which other wonderful gowns are draped, suddenly become beautiful women of the court who parade before the throne, and pay homage to the princess.

The store watchman, who has changed into a court attendant, hands the princess a glass of rare old wine. She drinks it and awakes to find herself again a tired saleslady, the women of her court dummies, and the court attendant again only a shabby watchman who is shaking her and telling her it is time to go home.

The part of the saleslady is played by Mineta Timayo. In staging the illusions, H. E. Hancock, who is directing the playlet, has secured perfect register by an invention of his own.

LUDWIG HOMMEL & CO. CELEBRATE.

On August 20th, Ludwig Hommel & Co. celebrated their 10th birthday—that is, on August 20th they were 10 years old, but the real celebration took place a few days earlier. They sent out pieces of their birthday cake to all their friends and customers, and, judging from the comments, they should certainly receive a great many letters of congratulation.

In addition, all the salesmen held a birthday party at the Fort Pitt Hotel, Saturday evening, with Mr. Hommel as guest. Ten covers were laid, and the entire sales force was present, numbering the following nine men: J. R. Newman, C. A. Swartz, Albert Cook, A. B. Beach, A. M. Cunnings, L. G. Luckie, W. F. Stuckeman, M. H. Livingston, S. M. Finkelstein.

During the evening the sales organization presented Mr. Hommel with a loving cup in commemoration of the event. We wish Ludwig Hommel & Co. all success and many more happy anniversaries.

DORIS GREY TO BE STARRED.

Edwin Thanhouser announces that Doris Grey, the beautiful Boston girl, is to be starred in a Thanhouser-made Pathe Gold Rooster play to be called "Her Beloved Enemy." The story, by Lloyd Lonergan, was written expressly for Miss Grey. Ernest Warde is directing the picture.

Miss Grey sprang into public notice at the Moving Picture Exhibitor's ball in Boston last December, when she was chosen as the most beautiful girl at the ball. Miss Grey was promptly signed by Mr. Thanhouser with the understanding that if she proved to have talent as a motion picture actress she would be given big things to do. She accepted a rare opportunity, and she made good.

"What Doris Did," was Miss Grey's first picture, and it was such a success that she was immediately given leading parts in other Thanhouser plays. Such natural aptitude has Miss Grey shown that in less than ten months she has taken her place as a real star in the motion picture world.

Miss Grey is only 19 years old, and Mr. Thanhouser believes she is the "find" of the year. Her personality is crowded with the determined ambition and enthusiasm of youth. She is eager to triumph, anxious to become an artist in every sense of the word, and Mr. Thanhouser predicts that she is well on the way to genuine triumphs.

Wayne Arey, whose work in "The Shine Girl" received such favorable comment, supports Miss Grey in "Her Beloved Enemy."

UNUSUAL STORY IN PATHE'S "THE FEAR OF POVERTY."

"The Fear of Poverty," the Pathe Gold Rooster release for September 10, has a title which in itself commands attention. If it is true, as it is said, that over eighty per cent. of the population of the United States is either wholly or partially dependent in old age, then the fear of poverty may be considered as an almost universal characteristic. Taking this as a theme, Miss Agnes C. Johnston, the brilliant young author of "The Shine Girl," a recent Pathe release, has written a story which will excite a wide interest.

Florence LaBadie, star of "The Million Dollar Mystery," as well as many successful features, is the central figure of this production. Her part is unique, since she is required to play four separate and distinct roles—first, that of a young girl brought up in poverty; secondly, the same girl married to a wealthy man and taking an active part in society; thirdly, that same girl a middle-aged mother, and, fourthly, her young and frivolous daughter, capable of great depths but as yet not aroused to her inner self. Such a part is a strong tax upon the artistic resources of the player, and that Miss LaBadie is always convincing in her various roles speaks strongly for her talents.

The story in its later phases, where the rich young girl is yet to find that she has a soul, brings to mind the famous play "The Poor Little Rich Girl," which was one of the biggest Broadway successes of recent years. In each a girl surrounded by all that money could buy was, by reason of her wealth, a lonely figure without real friends and by force of her training never allowed to be her real self.

The cast is excellent, including, as it does, in addition to Scene from "The Fear of Poverty" (Pathe).

Miss LaBadie, Ethyl Cooke and George Marlo. Elaborate settings and beautiful exteriors signalize a production which evidently received unusual care from the Thanhouser Company, which produced it.

"CIVILIZATION" OPENS AT BOSTON.

"Civilization" will open on Labor Day at the Tremont theater, Boston, which has been rebuilt at great expense, making it the most beautiful and one of the largest first-class houses of Boston.

Some of the leading organizations of New England have become vitally interested in "Civilization" because of its theme, spectacular beauty and the great lessons to humanity it teaches.

Governor McCall of Massachusetts has accepted an invitation to attend with his family the private exhibition of "Civilization" to be given on Sunday evening previous to Labor Day. The Mayor of Boston and other distinguished citizens of Massachusetts will be invited to attend the informal exhibition.

THE COLUMBIA RIVER IN PICTURES.

One of the latest scenic marvels available for tourists is now to be shown in pictures by the Gaumont Company in its "See America First" series. This is the wonderful Columbia Highway, which not only furnishes wonderful views of the river of the same name in the state of Oregon, but also provides mountain scenery of unsurpassed loveliness. These views will be presented on Number 52 of "See America First," which will be released September 6.

"WAR BRIDES" PROGRESSING.

Herbert Brenon has progressed sufficiently already with the photodramatic version of Marion Craig Wentworth's play, "War Brides," with Nazimova in the role which she created on the speaking stage, that he is willing to take the public into his confidence as to the general results he has obtained. The picture will be released in a little more than a month, through Lewis J. Selznick.

The biggest scenes in "War Brides" are those which take place in the humble home from which the men have gone to war. Nazimova plays the part of a young wife whose husband, shortly after going to the front, is killed. She is about to become a mother, and there is a tense struggle between her love for the unborn child and her determination not to permit herself to become the tool of a cruel empire, which wants more men for soldiers, from generation to generation.

"So completely does Nazimova throw herself into these tense scenes," says Mr. Brenon, "that even the moving picture veterans around the studio are affected by her emotional acting. Men who have been with me for a long time, all through the work of producing 'A Daughter of the Gods,' have forgotten the Cooper-Hewitts, the camera, and all the accessories of the studio, and have had to turn away and dry their eyes."

NEW UNICORN COMEDIES.

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation is now making releases of its new brands of film, and General Manager Schlank states that a large part of the program will be devoted to comedies. The first of these new comedies is released on August 30, entitled "A Foolish Romance," the principal parts being played by Tapple Berg, Billie Leslie, Harry Fischer and Jane Keckley, and directed by James Schneider, for a long time a Keystone producer.

These comedies are made by the Metropolitan Film Company, of Los Angeles, and are being put out under the "Jockey" brand, in two reels. They are a mixture of comedy-drama, comedy, slapstick and sensation. They follow a clearly defined story.

In "A Foolish Romance" Miss Billie Leslie, a dainty, pretty girl, does some clever straight work. Harry Fischer, a hotel clerk, and Tapple Berg, a bogus count, are in love with the girl, and amusing complications result.

An automobile crashes through the railing of a high bridge and falls in the river below, and a street car picks up the elopers on the fender.

"THE EVIL WOMEN DO" (Bluebird).

There will be great advertising value in the Bluebird release for September 25 in that Emile Gaboriau's novel, "The Clique of Gold," upon which E. J. Clawson founded his scenario, has been widely read in years past and has been considered one of Gaboriau's best detective stories. The part Parisian police take in the story is only incidentally shown, the principal interest being confined to the progress an evil woman makes until meeting the inevitable fate of an adventuress.

Rupert Julian directed the production and plays one of those character roles which he has proven himself to be abundantly qualified to enact. Elsie Jane Wilson, who was seen to remarkable advantage in a low comedy role in "Bettina Loved a Soldier," a recent Bluebird, plays the courtesan role, and Francelia Billington, who screens so sweetly, has the part of the persecuted but finally triumphant heroine.

Supporting the three leading characters, Hobart Henley will have a prominent role, and Sydney Dean, Douglas Gerrard, C. N. Hammond and Tom Lockhart will be among the others. Important scenes will embrace the gaities of the Latin Quarter of Paris, where a girl of the street, born to beg and steal, comes under the influence of a scheming artist who shows her the way to accumulate wealth by enticing men, by her great beauty, to do her bidding.

ACROSS NIAGARA BY CABLE.

The opening of the cable line over the Niagara Whirlpool, three miles below the Falls, has been signalized by filming the remarkable views obtained over the boiling water by a Gaumont cameraman for the Mutual Weekly. The pictures are now on the screen, having been incorporated in Number 87 of this motographic news reel. These have been obtained exclusively for the Mutual Weekly, since the management desired the pictures shown by the news reel which stood unquestionably first.

This new aerial scenic tramway is 1,800 feet long and has been built exclusively for carrying passengers across the Whirlpool. It is the longest of its kind in the world and was constructed by a Spanish company which had already built a smaller tramway of similar design at San Sebastian, Spain.

Another remarkable series of pictures which make this issue of the Weekly notable is Gaumont views of the Battle of the Somme. The smoke of this great engagement still hung over the battlefield when the pictures were on their way to America. Particularly interesting are the pictures of the village of Curlu, or pictures of all that is left of it.

War on this side of the water, of a mimic nature, is pictured in the big gun practice at Fort Totten. Other pictures show Candidate Hughes swinging around the circle; the collapse of a building in New York; Dario Resta winning an automobile race at Chicago, and the Italian liner "Stampalia" which was torpedoed in the Mediterranean.

EDNA GOODRICH IN NEXT MOROSCO OFFERING.

As its next release on the Paramount Program, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company announces Edna Goodrich in "The House of Lies," a stirring dramatic subject by L. V. Jefferson, following her debut on the screen under the Morosco banner in "The Making of Maddalena." Miss Goodrich has received many congratulatory communications from exhibitors as well as patrons, commending upon her artistic work in this subject. In her new Morosco vehicle the star is given particular opportunity not only to display her great talent, but her exceptional charm as well. As Edna Coleman, she appears in the role of unusual dramatic qualities for which she is well suited.

Among the more elaborate sets used in "The House of Lies," is an outdoor theater which necessitated a tremendous outlay, particularly considering the fact that it was used only in one scene. This structure was built in the private gardens of a well known multimillionaire in Pasadena, under the personal supervision of William D. Taylor, who directed the subject. Another set that is expected to create considerable comment is a grand reception hall scene showing a conservatory adjoining the main room, and containing an elaborate pipe-organ. In this production the Morosco company expects to exceed its own high standard for rich settings, and high class photography.

Supporting the star is a typical Morosco cast including Juan de la Cruz, Kathleen Kirkham, Lucille Ward; Harold Holland, and that veteran actor Herbert Standing. The photography was entrusted to Homer Scott, who is responsible for many artistic displays in recent Morosco films.

"THE COMMON LAW" COMPLETED.

The Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation completed its first production this week, the long-heralded adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' widely-read novel, "The Common Law." The final scenes were photographed by Director General Capellani in the Blache Studio at Fort Lee, N. J., and the picture is being cut and assembled under his personal supervision.

The first of the new Clara Kimball Young pictures promises to exceed the expectations of all concerned, both in the general breadth and power of the story it unfolds and in the opportunities it furnishes Miss Young for superb emotional acting. Lewis J. Selznick, president and founder of the new corporation headed by the popular film star, gave a number of his exchange managers a private showing of parts of the film at the studio last week, and all were highly enthusiastic in their congratulations to Miss Young and M. Capellani.

"The Common Law" will be released next month in six reels. Special editions of nine reels are to be prepared for showings in some of the larger theaters. Only a few of the Southern States remain uncovered by Selznick exchanges, and deals now under way will be concluded for that territory long before the release date. The rest of the country has been entirely taken care of by a system of exchanges headed by the biggest individual film men in each locality.

IVAN COMPLETES "HER SURRENDER."

"Her Surrender," the newest all-star cast Ivan production, from the pen of Ivan Abramson, has been completed as a five-reel feature for September release under the Ivan banner. The Ivan Productions consider this as their best effort to date, and assert this feature will enhance their reputation as producers of features which are of a standard to cope with the market.

The all-star cast which was brought together to enact the various roles required by the story is Anna Nilsson, featured in the sensational serial success "Who's Guilty?" by Pathe and the Fox film "The Regeneration"; Rose Coghlan, the distinguished artiste of the legitimate stage whose work in "The Faded Flower," a previous Ivan release, aroused much favorable comment from the critics; Harry Spingler, starred for a year with William Farnum, and considered one of filmdom's leading juveniles; Wilmuth Merkyl, star of "The Blindness of Virtue" and co-star with Virginia Pearson in "Blazing Love" as well as other well-known photoplays; William H. Tooker, the most notable delineator of screen character roles today, starred by William Fox in "A Fool's Revenge" and other plays; and Frankie Mann, whose screen work with the Lubin and Vitagraph organizations stamp her as among our most promising ingenues.

The production was made by Ivan Abramson in the Ivan studios and at Bradley Beach, the Duveen estate being employed to make some exterior views required by the story. Several novel lighting effects have been introduced by M. LePicard, chief of the Ivan camera forces. The Ivan exchanges throughout the country will release this feature as the regular Ivan production for September.

SMALLEYS WILL MAKE MORE BLUEBIRDS.

Lois Weber and her husband, Phillips Smalley, are reviving from their summer lay-off, since introducing Mary MacLaren as a Bluebird star, in "Shoes," and have in preparation several subjects they will contribute to the program during the autumn months. Two features are completed and in both of them Miss MacLaren will be the leading lady.

"Saving the Family Name" will be the September 11 Bluebird, with Phillips Smalley acting as the MacLaren girl's leading man. Miss Weber founded her scenario on Evelyn Heath's story of the same title and directed the production. Miss Girrard Alexander, Harry Depp, Jack Holt and Carl Von Schiller will be in the supporting company.

Three weeks later (October 2) Miss Weber will present another feature from her own scenario, "Wanted—A Home," in which Miss MacLaren will be featured. In this production Mr. Smalley assisted his wife in the direction. The purpose in releasing another Smalley feature so soon after "Saving the Family Name" is to give exhibitors the opportunity to capitalize upon the excellent impression the last-mentioned production will, in the manufacturer's opinion, most certainly create.

James Oppenheim's story, "Idle Wives," will bring both of the Smalleys and Miss MacLaren into one subject as combined features, thus building up the interest the public will find in the series of Lois Weber productions. Miss Weber made the scenario and will act opposite Mr. Smalley in presenting the leading roles, with Mary MacLaren featured.

Exhibitors have found the Smalley productions extremely popular in the Bluebird program and will recall "Hop, the Devil's Brew," "The Flirt," "John Needham's Double," "The Eye of God" (all Smalley pictures) as some of the best money-getters in the series. There is assurance that the forthcoming Smalley plays will be equally popular with the theatergoing public.

"GRETCHEN THE GREENHORN" (Triangle).

Dorothy Gish and the Triangle kiddies make a delightful combination in the Fine Arts picture, "Gretchen the Greenhorn" released by Triangle, September 3. Moreover, Miss Gish adds one more Dutch characterization to the list of those she has to her credit, and not a few of the critics declare it to be her best.

The scenes of "Gretchen, the Greenhorn" are all laid in New York, yet the story has all the atmosphere of Holland, and is typically Dutch in its characterizations. The role of Gretchen fits Miss Gish perfectly, and with the remainder of the cast excellently selected, the picture is easily one of the best acted photo-dramas ever presented.

Miss Gish, as the little Dutch girl who comes to America and almost straight away finds herself involved in all sorts of adventures, does the finest work of her career. As the little mother of the Garrity Kids, played so excellently as is always the rule by the Triangle Kiddies, she is most appealing, and as the brave-hearted miss who thwarts the band of counterfeiters she is downright inspiring.

The few scenes from Holland are gems of realism, not a detail of the picturesqueness of that country being lost on the screen. Photographically too, "Gretchen the Greenhorn" is truly representative of the best of Triangles.

"Gretchen the Greenhorn" does not lack for action despite the fact that its characters are of a race supposedly noted for the stolidness of its people. From the moment Gretchen arrives in America until she is finally rescued from a boat where she has been carried captive by a band of counterfeiters, there is action every moment of the picture. In fact, it has come to be expected that there will be considerable action in every Triangle picture that numbers in its cast the Triangle Kiddies. Those youngsters have a way of starting things from time to time, that insures plenty of excitement in every picture in which they are seen.

Ralph Lewis, who plays the chief lead in support of Miss Gish, gives one of the very best screen interpretations of his career. As the old father of Gretchen, who is led into wrong-doing by his trustfulness, he is most convincing.

"Gretchen the Greenhorn" is without question Dorthy Gish's best picture, and it promises to be one of the most popular on the Triangle program.

FIRST "FANTOMAS" EPISODE.

The first three-reel series ever inaugurated in America will have its first episode released when the Gaumont Company issues "The Phantom Crook" September 7 as the initial number of "Fantomas." This Mutual series was made in France, and follows closely the series of remarkable novels which have been the most successful detective stories in the French language. The first episode enlists some of the most popular screen artists of France in the leading roles. The part of Fantomas throughout the series is played by Victor Navarre, an actor who is one of the matinee idols of France. Opposed to him is James Breon as the detective who so relentlessly pursues the master criminal. A third character which appears in each episode is that of the journalist, Fandor, played by Louis Melchior.

With the usual Gaumont skill in picking a cast which will have an international appeal, beautiful Jean Faber was secured from the Comedie Francaise to portray Princess Sonia Danidoff, the first victim to the calculated cunning and desperate daring of Fantomas. Renee Carl has the part of Lady Beltham, a titled Englishwoman who falls under the influence of the sinister criminal. These facts are well known to readers of many American newspapers, as the "Fantomas" stories have been appearing this summer in many Sunday papers. Thus "Fantomas" is already known to millions of Americans who can be depended upon to form the nucleus of patrons who will enjoy the film version.

"SPEEDING" (Universal).

The girls at Universal City are becoming more versatile in their accomplishments every day. Not only do they ride bucking bronchos, play tennis and golf, swim, drive their own autos, but here they are dashing along Laemmle boulevard, on the outskirts of Universal City, on high-powered motorcycles.

Of course the girls would rather ride in a cushioned Rolls-Royce, but the play in which they were cast, "Speeding," required them to mount the cycles, and mount them they did, breezing along the countryside for practice spins before they swept past the camera.

Scene from "Speeding" (Universal).

"Speeding," as its title implies, is a tale of Fords, Rolls-Royces and speeding motorcycles; ice cream parlors, country jails and village constables figure prominently in it. Harry Depp plays the part of the soda fountain clerk; O. C. Jackson, his hard-hearted boss; Yvette Mitchell is cast in the role of Harry's sweetheart, and Ernie. The story of the play written by R. A. Dillon was scenarioized and produced by P. C. Hartigan. "Speeding" will be released under the Nestor brand on September 15.

"COL. HEEZA LIAR PLAYS HAMLET" (Paramount).

Col. Heeza Liar, having received a letter stating that the Face, Gun, or Bug Powder Co., in which his money is invested, has blown up, is overcome with shock. His colored house keeper summons Dr. Slauter Haus in a hurry. The vigorous way this doctor arrives at his diagnosis of nervous prostration is sure to create many laughs. The Colonel finding life not worth living now decides upon suicide and starts down the street with this in mind. As he is passing a Motion Picture Studio, he is suddenly run down by Charlie Chaplin, who, after doing a few funny tricks disappears into the studio. The Colonel asks a crows of boys who it was, and is told it is Charlie Chaplin who gets $670,000 a year salary.

The Colonel forgets suicide, and rushes into the studio and applies for a job, going through numerous humorous manoeuvres until he is finally signed up at $1,000,000 a week to play the lead in Hamlet, with Charlie Chaplin for support.

What the Colonel and Charlie don't do to Hamlet in the grave yard scene is not worth doing, and they finally drive the director into nervous hysterics and wreck the camera, with the result that the Colonel is kicked out of the Studio, and buried under a pile of furniture, etc., that is thrown out after him.

At this point he wakes up to find that it has all been a horrible nightmare, and that he is lying on the floor with his faithful hound licking his face sympathetically.

On the same reel with above is an interesting study of the peculiarities of the giraffe and the hippopotamus at feeding time, by Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, Curator, at the N. Y. Zoological Park.

"A MILLION FOR A BABY" (Essanay).

This is rather a unique photoplay, based to a certain degree on a Chicago court action which gained nation-wide prominence through the newspapers. The action is fast and the situations intense. The three-act play carries a strong cast, including Bryant Washburn, Marguerite Clayton, John Lorenz and Lillian Drew. The story deals with a wealthy couple who are childless. The woman's father, however, disgusted with the spendthrift habits of his son-in-law, settles practically all his wealth on an heir, if there should be one. The money otherwise goes to charity. The man adopts a baby and persuades his wife to acquiesce in the scheme, although she does not wish to. The man who has been appointed conservator of the fortune is in love with the wife. Neglected by her husband, disgusted at his dissipation, she finally falls in love with the conservator. She gets a divorce from her husband, giving up the fortune altogether to marry the other man.

SCENIC FEATURE, "SEEING AMERICA" (International)

Edward S. Curtis, famous author and photographer, has returned from the West and Northwest, where he made a series of remarkable photographs for the International Film Service, Inc. These scenic wonders, described as "the greatest miracle of motion picture photography," will shortly be shown by the International as a series of four features under the title, "Seeing America."

The first of the scenic features, "Nature's Miracle," will be released throughout the country on September 9th. It is a marvelous screen interpretation of the scenic mysteries of the famous "Yellowstone Park." Following "Nature's Miracle," will be "The Giant at Sunset," showing a series of motion pictures of the animal life of Yellowstone, the canyons and other remarkable scenes in America's wonderland. Next will come "In the Valley of the Yosemite," with the forests of gigantic trees, the unparalleled falls and the entrancing scenery of the nation's most beautiful park. The final features of the series will be "The Canoe Indians of Alaska," showing the life and customs of these picturesque and historic people who are known by Curtis as Remington knew the Indians of the plains.

TEXAS MISSIONS FILMED BY GAUMONT.

The description of "Reel Life" as the Mutual Magazine in Film is particularly apt when one considers the contents of Number 19, released September 10. Foremost come the picturesque missions of Texas. These stand as monuments to the efforts of the Spanish fathers to civilize the great southwest at a time when the English had not yet begun to fringe the Atlantic coast with colonies. From an historical point of view first place must be given the Alamo, the mission at San Antonio, where the revolutionists intrenched themselves in 1836 and fought to the death for Texas independence. Here perished David Crockett, the celebrated hunter, and Col. James Bowie, from whom the famous hunting knife takes its name.

The Great Atlantic Feature Film Company is the style of a new exchange with offices in the Murchison Bank Building, Wilmington, N. C. They will handle features, State Rights and Specials in surrounding territory.

Menger & Ring, Inc., the New York manufacturers of lobby display frames, report successful business throughout the South. Among the theaters recently equipped by their Mr. Kornicker are the Alcazar, Strand, and Rialto in Birmingham, Ala., also the fine new Rialto in course of construction at West Palm Beach, Fla.

MYSTERY DEEPENS IN "GLORIA'S ROMANCE."

Chapters 17 and 18 of the George Kleine motion picture novel "Gloria's Romance" seem to bear out all the claims that were made for this tale ere its release, that it would reveal an absorbing mystery ere it was finished. Events happen so thick and fast in Chapter 17 that one is fairly dazed in attempting to follow the quick turns of the plot. Things that you were almost certain about in the past you will surely doubt after seeing Chapter 17. First one and then another character in the story is thrown under suspicion, and Billie Scene from "Gloria's Romance" (Kleine).

Burke, as Gloria Stafford, the heroine of the story, finds herself in a sorry tangle when she attempts to solve the mystery that has surrounded her now for months. The farther she progresses into its mazes, the more confused she becomes.

Exhibitors and public the country over have long been convinced that it was Gideon Trask who murdered Freneau, Gloria's fiance. But was it? After viewing Chapter 17, a tremendous doubt will exist in the minds of all, for the evidence uncovered by Gloria seems now all to point toward David Stafford, her own brother, as the murderer.

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

American Boys in France Filmed

Newport, R. I., Society Sees Picture Made by French Government to Honor Her American Soldier Boys—Is Called "Our American Boys and the European War"—Proceeds to Aid American Ambulance Corps.

By William M. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

NEWPORT, R. I.—Probably one of the most fashionable audiences that ever gathered at a moving picture show was present at Newport, R. I., this week, when war films entitled "Our American Boys and the European War," were shown under the patronage of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor. The show took place in their magnificent ballroom at Beechwood.

Mrs. August Belmont, Mrs. Borden Harriman, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney and Mrs. Ethel Harriman were among the patronesses. Mrs. Ethel Harriman was chairman of the committee in charge of the affair.

The exhibition took place at 5.30 P. M. and it seems as though all the notables in the blue book of society were present. Those in the audience to witness the pictures could have written checks for close to a billion dollars.

The pictures were taken under the auspices of the French government as a tribute to the work done by the American Ambulance Corps, and were brought to this country by Robert Bacon, ex-ambassador to France. Of the 348 members of the American Ambulance Corps, in which nearly every state in the Union is represented, eighty-six are from the New England States and of these sixty-eight came from Massachusetts.

Later the picture will be shown at various other summer resorts, and in October will be shown in Boston. The proceeds of the various exhibitions of the picture will be turned over to Lee, Higginson & Co., who will see that they reach the American Ambulance Corps in France.

S. W. Hand Manager at World Film.

Boston.—S. W Hand, formerly assistant sales manager of the New York office of the World Film Corporation, nas taken over the management of the Boston exchange. He was formerly head of the Boston office and about a year ago went to the New York office in the sales department. Mr. Hand is receiving a hearty welcome back to Boston from the hundreds of New England exhibitors with whom he worked for many years. He is familiar with the entire Eastern territory and during his management of the Brady-made features will spend much of his time among the exhibitors. His assistant, G. J. Shaefer, will look after the detailed office work while Mr. Hand is on the road. The Brady-made features have just been sold to the Union Square, a new theater in Lewiston, Me., under the management of E. C. Denault.

Bernard M. Corbett Dies.

Boston, Mass.—Word has just been received in Boston of the death at Houlton, Me., of Bernard M. Corbett, formerly of No. 152 West Concord street, Boston. He was president and treasurer of the New England Criterion Film Company, and was widely known in the motion picture supply business. For several years he was business agent of the Boston Moving Picture Operators' Union. Mr. Corbett was 32 years old. Some time ago he underwent an operation. He was a member of the Winthrop Lodge of Elks. He leaves a wife, a year old daughter and four brothers.

Reopening of the Tremont.

Boston, Mass.—Opening the thoroughly rebuilt Tremont thearte on Labor Day, Sept. 4, the attraction will be "Civilization." The theater stage was burned by a fire that nearly wrecked the entire theater six months ago. Since that time the entire auditorium of the theater has been rebuilt, the stage enlarged and made over and the auditorium redecorated and refurnished.

Too Many Scripts Submitted.

Boston, Mass.—Because of the great flood of manuscrips that were submitted, it is announced by the Boston Traveler and the Atlas Film Company, which conducted a $1,000 scenario contest, that the announcement of the awards will be delayed and cannot be made on September first. The readers of the scenarios say that most of the amateur authors reached into the lower walks of life for their theme, making the general trend of all stories towards crime. Stealing, kidnapping, illegitimacy, betrayed young women, ministers sons who went wrong, etc., were the general stories told. Some of the manuscripts were labeled: "This is the story of my life," or "This is an honest-to-goodness true story."

A New Incorporation.

Boston, Mass.—The New England Photo Play Company of Boston has been incorporated with the following directors: J. D. Ferguson, Edward H. Kelly and Geo. E. McNamara. The company is capitalized for $90,000.

Gem Amusement Buys Theater.

Boston, Mass.—The Gem Amusement Company, Incorporated, has bought the interest of Charles B. Reid and Nellie D. Reid in the buliding known as the Newton Opera House, situated on Center street, Newton. The property is valued at $65,000. The new owners plan to run an up-to-date moving picture house at this location.

Two New England Local Films.

The Leominister, Mass., "Enterprise" and the Attleboro, Mass., "Sun" are running moving picture contests to pick out the most popular young men and young women to take the feature parts in a local moving picture production. The productions are named "A Romance of (the name of the town). Great interest is being shown in the contests in both cities and contestants are making a wild scramble for votes.

Herman Rifkin, manager of the Eastern Features Film Company, has arranged with the Boston Sunday Herald to carry a weekly story on "The Yellow Menace," which is released in the New England district September 4. This feature film, Mr. Rifkin says, has been the biggest seller in the New England district of any feature he has ever handled. With the aid of special publicity the feature is expected to make a clean-up.

New Houses — Changes in Policy — Houses Closed — Orchestras and Music.

By Clarence D. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

RICHMOND, Va.—The Strand theater is hereafter to be the home of Triangle in this city, according to the program of the Wells interests, for the Bijou theater, controlled by the same people, at which these films have been shown in the past, will open its doors on October 1 as a legitimate house, with road shows. The Strand has been completely renovated for its opening with the big features. It will have the Bijou orchestra and the equipment used at that theater in connection with the films.

Richmond, Va.—Plans have been filed with the building inspector here covering the transformation of the building at 114 East Broad street into a motion picture theater. It is estimated that it will cost $4,000 to do this work. The building is a three-story structure. Upon being turned into a theater the upper story will remain unoccupied.

Norfolk, Va.—The Bonita theater, according to current report, will close its doors on September 1, and with its passing goes the last of the five-cent motion picture shows in the downtown section.

Roanoke, Va.—The management of the Jefferson theater has secured a five-piece orchestra, under the leadership of Dan Mannix, to furnish music daily at that house. In addition to this, the Roanoke Orchestral Society, which is composed of some of the best musicians in the city, under the direction of Francis Goodman, will give concerts twice weekly, on Tuesdays and Fridays. It is stated that on these special evenings there will be twenty-five pieces in the orchestra and that a fine program of music will be provided.

Norfolk, Va.—The Hofheimer Brothers are planning the installation at their Strand theater here of a twenty-five piece orchestra and are about to close that house for a week in order that proper preparations, including the fixing of an orchestra pit, can be made. At the same time the house will be thoroughly renovated and put in readiness for the fall business.

Why Ban Picture Shows Only?

Philadelphia Exhibitors See Many Wholly Unrestricted Places Where Children Gather to Play or Swim, While Prohibition of Attendance at Picture Shows Is Putting a Serious Hole in Their Profits.

From the Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Building, Phila., Pa.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.—The ban on children under sixteen years of age is still in force in dear old Philadelphia, and many persons are wondering just why Dr. Krusen discriminates against the theaters and not other public places such as swimming pools, where a number of children assemble in a small dressing room and throw their clothes on top of each other and then all bathe in the same water, or playgrounds, where children assemble and play in the same dirt where cats, dogs and other animals are playing. To come directly to the point there has been no ban placed on any public place of amusement outside of the moving picture theater.

Moving picture theaters are under a large expense, paying licenses to the city and state governments and built according to the requirements of law, with ventilation by many doors and windows and exhaust fans to keep them properly aired and ventilated, at this time more than ever. The lame excuse has been forwarded by the authorities that there are not enough inspectors to visit the moving picture theaters and determine as to whether or no conditions are perfectly sanitary and thus safe for children to attend. Proprietors of moving picture theaters come back with the argument that they are willing to pay the expense of extra inspectors and that they welcome any inspection of their establishments.

When word was first received that their establishments were to be closed to children on account of the epidemic of infantile paralysis, local exhibitors joined the movement with good will, but when it was discovered that other public places were not to be effected and that the moving picture theater was to be made the goat for the health authorities, the exhibitors became indignant and every effort is now being made to have the unjust ban removed.

Philadelphia to Have New Amusement Center

Plans Are Under Way to Construct a Splendid New Picture Theater on Market and South Ninth Streets—Will Cost Half a Million.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—A real estate transaction far reaching in its consequence, and one that will change the character of one entire neighborhood in a business sense in practically a day, when otherwise its growth would have been but gradual, was announced this week and far overshadows in its importance anything that has taken place in the Philadelphia realty world for a long period of time. It is also an episode in the theatrical firmament, because it foreshadows the establishment of a great amusement center in a section hitherto untouched by those who give the public entertainment, and opens up a wonderful field for development.

These facts became known when Mastbaum Bros. & Fleisher, the real estate brokers, announced from their offices in the Finance building that they had sold numbers 1900 to 1914 Market street, and 2 to 22 inclusive on South 19th street, to the Stanley Realty Company, owners of the Stanley and many other large moving picture theaters in all sections of the city, and on this large site it was announced that a new and imposing moving picture theater will at once be erected.

Already Mr. Mastbaum has instructed the architects to prepare plans, advertise bids and commence operations upon what will be one of the most commodious theaters in the city, or indeed in the United States. It will cost approximately $600,000, exclusive of the price paid for the site, which, it is reported, amounts to upwards of $500,000, the entire proposition meaning an investment of more than $1,100,000.

"From every point of view," said Mr. Mastbaum, when interviewed concerning the new project, "the site is an ideal one, and the erection of this new house will mean much to those who have property in a neighborhood that is rapidly changing from the purely residential one which it has been for so many years past. The new theater will be the largest and most complete one of its kind in the world, and will be devoted exclusively to the exhibition of first class moving pictures. Of course the policy of the Stanley Company will be in force at the new house and only the best of first showings will be presented to the patrons, and this applies to dramatic, comedy and travel pictures. I have given the contract for the plans to the Hoffman Company, and that the new house will be one of beauty there is no doubt. These architects were the designers of the Stanley theater, and everyone knows the delightful character of that house. In the new theater the architects have been given carte blanc as to all details.

"In the building there will be many novel features. There will be no stairs, the balcony being reached by means of inclined walks, escalators and elevators. It will be a fireproof structure, with main floor and gallery, and the seating arrangements will accommodate four thousand people. I am sure that the efforts of the Stanley Company to give their thousands and thousands of friends the best in plays, produced by the best houses, will in this instance, as during the past two years, continue to meet with public approbation."

Baltimore Ave. House Sold.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The theater at 5026-28 Baltimore avenue, West Philadelphia, has been conveyed by Rose Kenin to James Nugent, subject to a mortgage of $27,664, and then reconveyed to Earl M. Fort, subject to a mortgage of $25,500. The property, which measures 40 by 92 feet, is assessed at $25,000.

Herbert Griffin Here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Herbert Griffin, of the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold street, New York, is numbered among the recent visitors to Philadelphia and intends to spend considerable time in this vicinity taking care of the Power interests.

One of a Thousand Little Proofs.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Lewis M. Swaab, 1327 Vine street, reports a most novel and interesting occurrence. While recently looking over his mail, he was surprised to find a letter from Queensland, Australia. The message was from Mr. Cairns of the Palace theater, Queensland, asking for a Swaab catalogue, remarking that he had noticed their add in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. This not only demonstrates the vast circulation of the best and most influential moving picture magazine printed, but also demonstrates to the supply and service man that an advertisement in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is productive of wonderful results.

Progressive Amusement Circuit Inc.

Philadelphia, Pa. — The Progressive Amusement Circuit, Inc., has recently been incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware for the purpose of conducting places of amusement. The new concern has beeen incorporated for $250,000, L. H. Gunther, George V. Reilly and Samuel P. Howard, all of New York City, being the principal incorporators.

Irving Plone Booked.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Irving Plone, one of the best-known operators in this vicinity and a member of the local union, who has been employed at the Nixon theater, Fifty-second and Chestnut streets, for some time past, announces his engagement to Miss Esther Sklar.

Chestnut Street House Reunion.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Rumors are afloat to the effect that W. Moore Patch, of Pittsburgh, Pa., is making efforts to lease the Chestnut Street Opera House for the coming fall and winter seasons. It is said to be his intention to conduct a first-class moving picture theater.

L. H. Keen to Manage the Regent.

Philadelphia, Pa.—An item of particular interest is the announcement that Lionel H. Keene, of Baltimore, Md., will be the manager of the Regent theater here. The Regent is located on Market street, below Seventeenth street, and is being remodeled at a cost of nearly $20,000. The claim is that it will be one of the prettiest theaters of its size in the country. Among the many novel features is the new seating plan, termed "the saucer," including the very latest in orchestra chairs. There will be a selected orchestra of talented musicians, in addition to the wonderful Kimball organ (the first to be installed in the city of Philadelphia) which when improvements are completed will be an attraction of no mean importance. Unique lighting effects, ladies' rest room with a matron in attendance, etc., will all go to make for the comfort and pleasure of Regent patrons. The program will include first presentations of Metro and World photoplays, and a selected number of short subjects.

Mr. Keene has been associated with the Stanley Company of Philadelphia since the beginning of last season. While only twenty-five years of age, his experience in the theatrical business has been varied.

Mr. Exhibitor:—You will get more helpful information by carefully reading one trade paper weekly than by skimming over three or four. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD is the one paper you need.

Vivian Whitaker Opens Pickford Exchange in Washington.

There will be chronicled in the next issue of Moving Picture World, under the usual Washington heading, something more than the following brief announcement of the formation of the new Mary Pickford exchange involving a three-cornered move among exchangemen. It must suffice at this time merely to state that Vivian Whitaker, who, up to about six months ago, was connected with the Washington office of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, is opening the Pickford exchange here in the building occupied by Reid S. Baker, on F street; B. C. Cunningham, now manager of the local office of the Mutual, goes to Philadelphia for the same purpose, and Mr. Evans, who looked after the Baltimore territory for the Mutual, comes to Washington to succeed Mr. Cunningham.

Titusville's Orhpeum to Open.

Titusville, Pa.—The new Orpheum theater, now being erected at Titusville, Pa., will be opened about October 15, the owners have announced. The house will represent an investment of over $30,000 and promises to be strictly up-to-date in its construction and arrangement. The seating capacity will be 600.

New Woodlawn Theater.

Woodlawn, Va.—Panopolis and Lambrus, who operate the Lyric theater, a 1,000-seat house, at McKeesport, Pa., have purchased a plot of ground at Woodlawn, Pa., and contemplate erecting on it a new and modern picture theater. The site measures 50 by 120 feet and is centrally located. No definite plans for the theater have as yet been formulated.

Break Ground for New Gem.

Derry, Pa.—Ground was broken last week for the new $10,000 Gem theater, which G. B. Meyers & Son will erect on First avenue, between Chestnut and Ligonier streets. The building will be of approved fireproof construction. It will be one story in height with a balcony. The basement will be sublet.

A fine new Simplex motor-driven machine is now on the way and new equipment for the theater has also been ordered. Only pictures will be shown and a continuous performance without waits will be given.

Theater Renovations and Additions.

East Liberty, Pa.—The Regent theater, in the East Liberty section, Pittsburgh, Pa., one of the Rowland & Clark chain of houses, has been equipped with an elaborate air washing system at a cost of $1,400. The new appliance has greatly improved the ventilation of the theater and makes the atmosphere pleasant at all times. The air is thoroughly cleansed by passing through sprays of water.

Oil City, Pa.—The Lyric theater, Oil City, Pa., is being improved and enlarged by the addition of a balcony, which will make it a very roomy and inviting house. New decorations both inside and out are also under way and Manager Stahl hopes to have everything in readiness for reopening about September 15.

Fairmont, W. Va.—The Grand theater, owned and managed by Charles Miller, at Fairmont, West Va., has been reopened after being remodeled and improved considerably. The new interior decorations are in harmony with a beautiful Japanese stage setting that has been installed, and the theater combines an unusual degree of attractiveness and comfort. A new $4,000 pipe organ has been installed. The seating capacity of the Grand is 700.

Beaver Falls, Pa.—The Colonial theater, Beaver Falls, Pa., has been improved with new seats and other equipment during the past few weeks. The seats were installed at night without closing the house, as the Columbia's business has been too good to suspend the show for even a few days. The seating capacity is 500. Samuel Goodman is the owner and manager.

Meadville, Pa.—The Photoplay theater, Meadville, Pa., has reopened after remaining dark throughout the summer months. Manager Weir has beautified the house considerably and installed some new equipment, making it one of the most up-to-date and attractive theaters in its locality.

The local branch of the Metro Pictures Service will handle ten prints of the great new serial picture "The Crimson Stain Mystery," to be released soon. Manager J. E. Davis reports excellent bookings on this subject throughout the territory covered by the branch. The Pittsburgh office will supply Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio and Kentucky.

Films at Pittsburgh's Schenley

Magnificent Theater in the Oakland District Has Been Taken Over by Its Owners and Is Being Run as an Exclusively Picture House—Seats 1,809 and Was Built at a Cost of Quarter of a Million in 1914.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa

PITTSBURGH, Pa. The Schenley theater, on Forbes street, in the Oakland district, Pittsburgh, Pa., has been taken over by the owners of the building and is now being operated as a photoplay theater exclusively. The Schenley Amusement Company relinquished its lease on the house after having conducted it for about two years, first with vaudeville and later with a combined program of vaudeville and feature pictures.

The Schenley is one of the finest theaters in Pittsburgh, having cost a quarter of a million dollars to build. It is located near the most exclusive residential section of the city and caters to a large patronage of the better class. The seating capacity is 1,809. The theater was erected in 1914 for the Schenley Amusement Company and is modern in every particular.

For the time being the management of the house will be looked after personally by one of the owners, W. M. Jacoby, a prominent real estate man with offices in the Vandegrift building, Fourth avenue. The other well-known real estate men connected with the enterprise are C. J. Kelly, Jr., Henry Irish and A. M. Thompson. While all the details have not yet been worked out, it is probable that a company will be formed by the above men for operating the theater.

The Schenley was reopened in a very auspicious manner several days ago, after having remained dark for about a month for repairs and re-decoration. A pleasing feature introduced by the new management is a symphony orchestra directed by Gilbert C. Friar, who has arranged scores especially to accompany the photoplays shown. The best big feature pictures, including Triangle, Red Feather, Bluebird and World, are being presented daily. The admission price is 10 cents.

Hommel Company's Anniversary.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Ludwig Hommel & Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., the well known moving picture supply house, recently observed its tenth anniversary in a brilliant and fitting manner. The main event of the celebration was a banquet tendered Mr. Hommel in the Fort Pitt hotel by the sales force of the company. Covers were laid for ten and the following were the guests: C. A. Swartz, J. R. Newman, A. B. Beach, Albert Cook, L. G. Luckie, A. M. Cunnings, S. M. Finkelstein, Mark H. Livinston, W. S. Stuckeman and Ludwig Hommel. As a token of their esteem the salesmen presented Mr. Hommel with a beautiful loving cup, appropriately engraved. Many interesting facts in connection with the moving picture supply business in this city was brought out by the celebration. Mr. Hommel was the first to introduce the converter in the Pittsburgh section, also the Edison Super-Kinetoscope, the Minusa screen, and also the Hommel economizer. A souvenir of the occasion in the form of a small birthday cake was mailed to 3,000 exhibitors in all parts of the country. The congratulations of the trade everywhere were received by Mr. Hommel.

Big Picture Company Opens Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Offices have been opened in the First National Bank building, Pittsburgh, Pa., by the newly organized moving picture corporation made up of the Success Films Corporation, Success Releasing Corporation and the Success Real Estate Corporation, incorporated in South Dakota, with a capital stock stated at $7,500,000. According to an announcement issued here, the financial center and general offices will be located in this city. A. C. Reinecke, associated with Otis & Company, bankers, of Cleveland, O., is the representative of the new concern, now located here.

Ashbys Building House in Erie.

Erie, Pa.—A modern moving picture theater is to be erected on the northwest corner of Fifth and State streets, Erie, Pa., by H. V. Ashby and E. B. Ashby. The structure will be three stories high and will have a frontage of 120 feet. The entrance to the theater proper will be on State street, while storerooms will occupy each side and extend around the Fifth street side of the building. The construction will be of steel, brick and tile and fireproof throughout. The front will be ornamental and the latest ideas will be embodied in the arrangement and equipment of the theater itself. Plans are being formulated, but no announcement has as yet been made as to when the work will be started. Messrs. Ashby are prominent business men of Erie, operating the Ashby Printing Company and other enterprises.

New Greensburg Theater Ready.

Greensburg, Pa.—The handsome new theater being erected at Greensburg, Pa., by Manos Brothers, is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready for opening about the middle of October. This undertaking has been considerably delayed on account of a shortage of structural steel, as the theater was to have been completed some time ago, according to the original plans. The theater is to be one of the finest in the state and will represent an outlay of $100,000.

Reopening of the Bijou.

Belle Vernon, Pa.—The Bijou theater, at Belle Vernon, Pa., is to be reopened September 4, after undergoing an extensive remodeling process which has greatly increased the attractiveness and size of the house. The seating capacity is now 500. A new lighting system has been installed and the interior beautifully redecorated. The Bijou is owned and operated by B. Dattola, who also conducts the Majestic theater. These are the only houses in Belle Vernon and are both up-to-date in every particular.

Howe Travel Films at Nixon.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Nixon theater, Seventh avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., the largest and one of the finest playhouses in the city, has opened with the Lyman H. Howe Travel Festival and will continue with this attraction until the regular opening date. The festival is proving quite popular, as usual, with a large attendance twice daily. An iced air system has been installed in the Nixon.

C. F. Krisel Takes Over the Mona.

Millvale, Pa.—The Mona theater, Millvale, a suburb of Pittsburgh, formerly conducted by George Breutendach and H. O. Papencerdt, has been taken over by Charles K. Krisel. The name of the house has been changed to the Olympic theater. Mr. Kreisel formerly operated the Crescent theater, in Butler street, which he sold recently.

Fred Bluell to Manage the Luna.

Monessen, Pa.—Preparations are being made to reopen the Luna theater, at Monessen, Pa., which has been dark for some time. The house has been taken over recently by Fred Bluell, who will manage it personally. A number of changes and improvements are contemplated.

Sidney Lust Buys New Film Corp.

Washington, D. C., Film Man Makes Deal Whereby He Gets Excellent Distributing Facilities in South—An Interview on Aspects of Present and Future Business—A Brilliant Record.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth St., N. E., Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—An announcement of no little importance in the film business of the south comes from Sidney B. Lust, who operates the United Film Service, at 903 E street, northwest, for he has just informed the Washington correspondent of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD of the consummation of a deal whereby he becomes the proprietor also of the business of the New Film Corporation, located at 146 Marietta street, Atlanta, Ga.

The new office will serve exhibitors in a territory comprising Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma, and merged with the Washington office, these are added to Maryland, Virginia Delaware, North and South Carolina, and the District of Columbia. This gives Mr. Lust a very large field in which to carry on his business, for he can now swing to any point in the south and is basing his future activities upon his new acquisition.

Sidney B. Lust.

Pins Faith Solely to Big Features.

The policy of the business is to undergo a very radical change, although this is to be brought about gradually, as may be seen from the following interview. "I have come to the conclusion," said Mr. Lust, when asked about his venture, "that in the course of time the film business will be based entirely upon the big features and the best features obtainable, and, seeing the handwriting upon the wall, I am going in very largely for these. I realize that the house that can show these is the one that will make the money. Such a house usually has every advantage, beginning with seating capacity and including lighting effects, ventilation, orchestral music, and all of the other 'ingredients' that assure comfort and amusement. Thus it is the day of the large house and naturally of the big features which they must run.

"This is futher evidenced," continued Mr. Lust, "by the fact that the five-cent house is gradually becoming a thing of the past; the small stuff does not bring in the box office receipts, and all of the things I have mentioned mean a great money outlay.

"It is on this basis that I am shaping my future campaign. I feel positive that within a year or two there will be but a very limited market for small pictures. There will, of course, be a demand for educational films, for scenics and comedies to fill in, but it will be the big stuff for long runs. 'The Birth of a Nation' played to record audiences for six weeks; 'The Battle Cry of Peace' had a long run and made money for the exhibitors who booked it, and now 'Civilization,' I understand, is booked indefinitely. Following out this fact, I have just secured States rights on 'Purity' for Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia and have made a number of bookings thereon. I am going to follow this up with other surprises and will have a further announcement to make shortly."

A Record One May Be Proud of.

Mr. Lust is rated as one of the live-wire exchangemen of this section. In the game but three years, he has made a record that one may be proud of. He started in with Warner's Features in 1913 as a roadman and after six weks in that position he was made manager to succeed Lieut. Jim P. Anderson, who had accepted a similar position with the Fox Film Corporation and is now the special Australian representative of that company. After being with the concern for about two years he purchased the Washington interests from the receivers of the company which then controlled them. Later he bought the business of the Famous Players' Exchange, merging the two, and from time to time he has added features, comedies, Chaplin reels, etc. He has offices in Baltimore, Md.; Charlotte, N. C., and in West Virginia, and the end is not yet. Despite the fact that he has just passed his thirty-first milestone, Mr. Lust is closely approaching the right to assume the title of film magnate. He is a hard worker, energetic, and is making friends all along the line; why shouldn't he be a success?

Earl W. Holt, who has been managing the Atlanta office for the New Film Corporation, resigns his position upon the taking over of the office by Mr. Lust. He is to be succeeded by one of the men now in the latter's employ. It is understood also that several new traveling representatives will be secured to work the southernmost states.

Strand Books "Civilization."

Washington, D. C.—"Tom" Moore is making arrangements for the exhibition of "Civilization" at his Strand. He plans to have special stage settings and the orchestra of eight pieces will be enlarged to eighteen pieces. In addition to the special scenic features there will be a prologue carrying out the ideas of the picture. The girl ushers will wear costumes fashioned upon those worn by the players in the photoplay. In fact, when the doors open on October 1 for an indefinite run of this film, the Strand will present a very attractive and unique appearance.

Harry Crandall Raises Prices.

Washington, D. C.—Harry Crandall has announced to his patrons that beginning with September 1 the general admission to his theater at Ninth and E streets will be fifteen cents at all evening shows, commencing with the 6.45 show, while ten cents will be continued as the afternoon charge. There is a tendency all along the line to increase the prices of admission and with Mr. Crandall charging fifteen cents for the evening shows there will follow a number of uptown houses which will demand ten cents where heretofore they have been satisfied with five cents.

George B. Hunt Back.

Washington, D. C.—George B. Hunt, assistant to Manager Arthur Robb at the Garden theater, is back on the job, having been honorably discharged by reason of the expiration of his enlistment from the National Guard of the District of Columbia. Mr. Hunt, since the mobilization of the citizen soldiers some few weeks ago, has been stationed at Camp Ordway, Va.

A. Brylawski Will Manage Meader's.

Washingon, D. C.—Hary S. Wolf has resigned from the active management of Meader's theater, at 535-537 Eighth street, southeast, although retaining his financial interest in the house. The management devolves upon A. Brylawski, also a member of the company operating the theater. Mr. Wolf is the owner of a large shoe store on F street and this, with his other interests, demands so much of his time as to make it impossible for him to give proper attention to the motion picture business.

Casino Reopens Labor Day.

Washington, D. C.—Labor Day will see the reopening of the Casino theater on F street, near Seventh street, northwest, as a motion picture theater, this time strictly as a V-L-S-E first-run house, with Murray Herman in charge. Mr. Herman was assistant manager of the Casino when Alan Bachrach was at the helm and later, when the lease of the Brylawski's ran out and the theater darkened, he went to the Strand and since leaving there he has been booking state rights propositions.

The A. C. Mayer Amusement Company, owners of the building, and some outside interests, so it is said, are back of a plan to put over something big in spite of the fact that the theater is not considered a great success because of its location. There is a feeling, however, that this can be made popular if properly conducted and Mr. Herman and those back of him believe they have the password that will open the doors of success.

While the plans of the company have not been announced, it is said that they contemplate a number of novelties, elaborate stage scttings, a large orchestra and "redheaded and uniformed" girl ushers. There is to be a uniformed flunkey at the door after the fashion of the legitimate houses. Two new projection machines are being installed in the booth and the motto of the house is to be "perfect projection, courtesy, service, comfort."

Another Day Brings Joy.

Washington, D. C.—L. M. Day, president of the local Metro exchange, is wearing a smile that won't disappear, for there is a new arrival at his house. This is his fourth son, and strange as it may seem, each of these, as well as the proud papa, lay claim to August as the birth month. A fifth child is a girl.

C. W. Buck Takes Vacation.

Washington, D. C.—C. W. Buck, who travels out of the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation, is enjoying a much needed rest with relatives and friends in Baltimore and Washington. Before migrating to the middle west city Mr. Buck was a native of Baltimore.

Marcus Notes on Sixth and F Streets.

Washington, D. C.—Marcus Notes, who operates the Imperial Film Exchange, has taken quarters in the building at Sixth and F streets, northwest, where he will handle "The Unborn," "Pavlowa" and "Where Are My Children," as well as other state rights propositions. His son, William Notes, is doing road work for him. Mr. Notes also controls the Empress theater, on Ninth street.

E. T. Wright to Have Pretty Theater.

Washington, D. C.—Among the recent visitors in Washington was E. T. Wright, the popular young manager of the Colonial theater, in Hagerstown, Md. Mr. Wright told the Moving Picture World correspondent that he was planning big things for his house, including the installation of an illuminated garden setting on the stage and the hanging of a velvet curtain in front of the gold fiber screen. At the conclusion of each show the curtain will cover the screen and the lights in the garden and in the theater will be turned on. This is being accomplished by an expenditure of more than a thousand dollars. The setting is to be very elaborate and Mr. Wright is confident that it will be as good as any decoration in any southern house. The work will be completed in time for an initial appearance on Labor Day.

C. L. Worthington in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—C. L. Worthington, district manager of the Fox corporation, is making one of his periodic trips to Washington, his former home, and expresses himself as well pleased with the way in which the motion picture business in this territory has held its own despite the intense heat of the past few weeks. To him the outlook for the fall is especially bright and, with others he is predicting big things for the cool-weather period.

Tennessee News Letter

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville, Tenn.

Southern Metro Men Confer.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN.—K. A. Bugbee, New Orleans manager of the Southern Metro, spent a day with the home office last week, going over plans with the officials in anticipation of a heavy fall business. Mr. Bugbee declares that by October first Metro pictures will be in every theater in the territory.

Princess Back to Former Policy.

Nashville, Tenn.—Manager Harry Sudekum spent last week in New York on business incident to the opening of the Princess theater on August 28th as a vaudeville house. During the summer months the Princess was remodeled, and used exclusively for photoplays. However the coming season will again find this house as it was last year, with moving pictures being shown between performances.

Orpheum's Travel Weekly.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Orpheum theater, vaudeville house, opened its season on August 21st. This house will feature a series known as the "Orpheum Travel Weekly," the first exhibitions being pictures of The Netherlands and British India. These travel scenes will be offered each week in addition to the regular program.

Tennessee Topics.

Memphis.—J. B. B. Loomer, in charge of General's poster department, made a trip through Texas, and reports business rather slow during the hot months.

Chattanooga.—E. G. Watkins, booking agent for the local office of Southern Metro, is back at his desk after undergoing an operation for appendicitis.

Chattanooga.—Manager H. C. Jackson of the Strand, Morristown, Tenn., is known to Chattanooga exchange men as one of the finest fellows in the business, and always has a glad hand for the film men.

Chattanooga.—N. W. Remond of the Arcade theater, Jacksonville, Fla., spent several days in the city.

Chattanooga.—Among the recent visitors at the Chattanooga office of Southern Metro were Messrs. Geo. N. Shorey, Gay & Queen theaters, Knoxville; Harry Horner of the Bohemia, Cleveland, and F. O. Buchanan, manager of the new Colpet theater, Cedartown, Ga.

Theater Notes.

Memphis, Tenn.—The Bellevue and Popular airdomes have been closed by Nathan & Frank, due to inclement weather conditions.

Nashville.—The Victoria, operated by J. H. Neil, has been closed, and the building offered for lease.

Memphis.—Mrs. A. Gerni, owner of the Beauty and Queen theaters, Main street houses, will open a new house in Memphis about September 1st.

Athens.—The old Palace theater has been remodeled, and is now known as the Strand. This house runs Metro pictures, and is owned by Manning & Wink, who operate several houses in Georgia and Tennessee.

Chattanooga.—The Crescent theater has changed from pictures to vaudeville.

Summer Resort Theaters Prosper

Buffalo Film Man, Back from the Adirondack Mountains, Reports That Business There Is Booming—Picture Theaters Have Many Patrons and Are Getting Good Prices—Notes from the District.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—According to reports that have just reached Buffalo, thousands of visitors in the Adirondack Mountains have helped the summer business at the moving picture theaters in that territory. The European war has made tourist travel to the mountains very heavy. The prosperous times have put plenty of money in circulation and the exhibitors there are reaping a harvest. Several of the managers are charging 20 and 25 cents admission and are playing to crowded houses. Seven thousand rookies at Plattsburg furnish fine patronage to the moving picture theaters there. The houses in Plattsburg are the Clinton, Star, Colonial and Plattsburg. C. J. Roe, manager of the last-named house, plays a feature daily and vaudeville three days each week. W. A. Donovan of the Palace theater, Tupper Lake, has had no let-up of trade during the hot spell, and similar reports come from the Palace and Colonial moving picture theaters of Saranac Lake. Tupper Lake and Chateaugay theaters do an extra good business on Sundays.

Adirondack Notes.

Tobin & Quinlan, proprietors of the Ideal moving picture theater, Chateaugay, N. Y., have turned their house over to the Roman Catholic congregation of that village whose church was recently burned, and services will be held in the theater until another church is built. Tobin & Quinlan have moved their moving picture equipment to the Chateaugay opera house, where their shows will be given for some time. J. M. Sitterly of the Popular Film, Buffalo, recently played "Neptune's Daughter" at Chateaugay. After a matinee, he drove to Geraldine Farrar's camp near that village and had a pleasant visit with Miss Farrar's father. Mr. Farrar furnished some talking machine records of his daughter's songs and these were played by Mr. Sitterly at the Chateaugay theater. Mr. Sitterly also showed his film at the Dannemora theater of Dannemora, N. Y. W. F. McNaught is manager of this house.

"I visited the Dannemora prison," said Mr. Sitterly, "and hoped to attend a performance at the moving picture theater in the institution, but regret that the shows had been suspended on account of the hot weather."

Harry Somerville Makes a Change.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Somerville has resigned as manager of the Happy Hour moving picture theater, Buffalo, to take over a prominent Canadian theater. Details of his new position will be announced later.

Harry Marsey, Exhibitor Once More.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Harry Marsey of the Popular Film, Buffalo, and formerly owner of the Happy Hour theater, this city, has returned to the exhibiting end of the business. It is reported that he has bought an interest in the Elmwood, Allendale, Columbia, Colonial and Keith's moving picture theaters in this city and will devote considerable attention to these houses.

The Popular Buys Poem Films.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Popular Film Exchange, this city, has bought the Ella Wheeler Wilcox production of her poems and after September 15 will release one poem a week in two reels. To stimulate interest in the series some of her verses will be run in the leading newspapers here. Instead of heralds, the exhibitors will give out leaflets of her poems, in advance of each showing. Each patron will receive a neat cover resembling a book in which the leaflets may be kept. At the end of the series the patron may have a complete collection of the poems.

Majestic Theater to Reopen.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Majestic theater, Buffalo, formerly in charge of John Laughlin, will open under new management on September 4. Dr. P. C. Corneli of the Star, this city, will have personal supervision of the Majestic and he will be assisted by C. F. Lawrence of New York. For years Dr. Corneli has been a house manager for Klaw & Erlanger in this city. The Majestic is generally devoted to traveling attractions, although many moving picture productions have played. "Courtesy, comfort and entertainment at popular prices" is Dr. Corneli's slogan for the Majestic.

The largest staff of experts in all departments makes the MOVING PICTURE WORLD the one paper in the trade that fully fills the requirements of every reader.

Film Concern Incorporates.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Arctic Film Corporation, capitalized at $5,000, has filed a certificate of incorporation with the County Clerk, Buffalo. The directors are Dr. Peter C. Cornell, Clarence S. Williams, Stephen Dawes and John R. Oishei, all of Buffalo. Dr. Cornell manages the Star and the Majestic theaters, Buffalo, and Mr. Oishei manages the Teck, this city.

Becker Company Moves Offices.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Becker Film & Supply Co. has moved its headquarters from 29 Franklin street to 47 West Swan street. Al Becker, proprietor of this concern, is a pioneer in the film business here. He has been an expert moving picture operator at Shea's theater, Buffalo, since the Pan-American exposition in 1901. At his exchange he has a complete projection room for the accommodation of exhibitors and exchange men. He also carries a full line of supplies pertaining to a moving picture theater. His former quarters in Franklin street have been taken over by the Lady Mackenzie Film Company.

Buffalo Personal Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Morris Slotkin, proprietor of the Olympic theater, Buffalo, is enjoying an extended motor trip with his family through the East. Bruce Fowler, manager of the Olympic, is playing to good houses, despite the hot weather.

I. S. Shearer, cashier at the Pathe exchange, Buffalo, was recently visited by his brother-in-law, A. S. Luttrell of Houston, Tex.

C. R. King of Wertsner & King, poster mounters, recently called on the Buffalo exchanges. He was on his way to Cleveland. He was jubilant because, in face of the advance in the price of paper, his company has a six months' supply.

Among the recent callers at the Paramount offices, Buffalo, were Mr. and Mrs. Herzberger of the Auditorium theater, Perry, N. Y.; Mr. Dennison, representing the Lasky Corporation, and Mr. Brooks, Detroit branch manager of the Paramount.

I. Cobe, representing the Unity Film Company of New York City, recently visited Buffalo to show the exhibitors the serial "The Yellow Menace."

News Letter From Baltimore

Local Operators' Union to Hold Annual Ball Earlier—Changes in Local Distributing Offices—Theaters Prepare for Winter Business—Business Items and Interesting Personal Notes.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE, MD.—The seventh annual ball to be given in Baltimore by the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local 181, is to be held on November 15th of this year and not in January, as heretofore, owing to the fact that the convention of the American Federation of Labor will be in session in this city at that time. The committee of arrangements is busily forming its plans and every detail is being prearranged with the utmost care. Among those on the committee are: G. Kingston Howard, N. C. Haeffle, N. B. Morgan, Carroll Bayne, Frank Holmes, Sam Isaacson, Fred Kirby, Wm. George, N. Ropke, W. Whitmore and Thomas Finn.

Changes in Local Mutual Forces.

Baltimore, Md.—B. C. Cunningham, for some time manager of the Mutual Washington exchange, has resigned to become associated with the Artcraft Pictures Corporation, which will distribute the releases of the newly organized Mary Pickford Film Corporation. Rumor has it that he will have charge of the Philadelphia exchange.

It is understood that E. G. Evans, who for some months past has had charge of the Baltimore Mutual exchange, has been appointed to the position of manager of the Washington exchange, and that O. D. Weems will succeed Mr. Evans as manager of the Baltimore office. Mr. Evans is well liked by the Baltimore exhibitors and while here he has handled the business promptly, speedily and well. All regret to see him go, but congratulate him on his promotion. At the same time, Mr. Weems has had a great deal of experience which makes him well fitted for the work he is about to take in hand.

J. H. Buttner and E. R. Price with Triangle.

Baltimore, Md.—J. H. Buttner, who was formerly connected with the Philadelphia office, has been appointed manager of the Washington exchange of the Triangle. E. R. Price, formerly associated with the Mutual, has been appointed as his assistant. His territory will eventually cover Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland. Mr. Price will be particularly valuable to the Triangle Company owing to the fact that he is very familiar with the ground and is well liked both here and all through the South. His cordial handshake, genial smile and straightforward manner have won him many friends.

Dixie Theater Again.

Baltimore, Md.—Latest reports have it that the Dixie theater, 312 West Baltimore street, which was formerly owned by Wm. Fait, who has left Baltimore, has been bought by Nat Keene, manager of the Victoria theater, from A. H. Levine. It is stated that improvements will be made.

Weniz Extends Business.

Baltimore, Md.—It is announced through Isador Weniz, proprietor of the Isador Weniz Film Company, that the motion picture supply department of this company is to be greatly enlarged and improved so as to make it one of the largest in the South. The film rental department and the booking of feature pictures, however, will be continued as heretofore.

A Benefit at the Pastime.

Baltimore, Md.—The management of the Pastime theater, 2026 Greenmount avenue, gave a benefit performance on Monday, August 14. The proceeds of this affair were turned over to the St. Vincent de Paul Society.

New Manager for the Walbrook.

Baltimore, Md.—Solon L. Wonders, who for many years has been associated with the moving picture business in Baltimore and elsewhere, has been appointed manager of the Walbrook theater, located at Rosedale street and North avenue. Until two weeks ago, Mr. Wonders was manager of the Goldberg theater, 3117-19 West North avenue. Before locating in Baltimore he ran vaudeville houses in Lancaster, Pa., and New York City, and later a moving picture house in the former city. He assumed charge of the Walbrook on Monday, August 14.

Songs Again at New Pickwick.

Baltimore, Md.—G. Hortin Gaffney, manager and owner of the New Pickwick theater, 115 North Howard street, has just reviewed the old custom of interspersing his program of moving pictures with the singing of popular songs. Three singers of local fame, H. Dick, J. Morrison and B. Peterson, have been engaged.

Hunter Bennett in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—Hunter Bennett, general sales manager of the Mutual, visited the local exchange of that company on Saturday, August 12. Following an inspection of the Washington and Baltibore branches of the Mutual, Mr. Bennett went over to Philadelphia. On Sunday B. C. Cunningham, manager of the Washington exchange; W. Pope, Jr., manager of the Philadelphia exchange; E. G. Evans, manager of the Baltimore exchange, and Mr. Bennett, met at Atlantic City. This meeting really developed into an enthusiastic managerial convention before adjournment.

J. A. Cunningham in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—J. A. Cunningham, who formerly managed the Mutual exchange in this city, and who is now associated with Henry Schwarbe, who has the Philadelphia franchise for the Triangle, and is one of the largest powers in that territory, is now spending two weeks in Baltimore for the purpose of introducing and laying the foundation for "The Yellow Menace."

Lubin's Renovating.

Baltimore, Md.—Lubin's theater, 404-6 East Baltimore street, has been closed for about ten days, owing to the fact that a complete renovation of the interior and exterior of this house is now taking place. A new Kimball $10,000 human voiced pipe organ is being installed also. Wm. Tyler, the manager of this house, states that when this theater is reopened the features of the Triangle and the Mutual Star Series will be used.

"Ramona" Helps Fresh Air Fund.

Baltimore, Md.—Not only did the W. H. Clune production of "Romona" help the Milk and Ice Fund by a benefit performance, but through the generosity of Carlisle E. and John T. Ford, of Ford's Opera House, and W. H. Clune, owner of the film, another benefit performance for the Fresh-Air Fund was given on Tuesday, August 15th, and as a result the fund was increased by $113.25. This amount was enough to send 37 poor tots out to the Fresh Air Farm at Fallston for a week.

New Moving Picture Company.

Baltimore, Md.—On Wednesday, August 16, a certificate of incorporation for the Paramount Company, a moving picture enterprise, was filed with the State Tax Commission. The papers were approved by the commission and it is the intention of the new company to deal in moving picture machines and attend to the booking of films. The incorporators are: Lyttleton B. Purnell, Owen H. Jones, H. Ralph Cover, Hugh L. Bond, 3d, H. Webster Smith and George Schneider, all of Baltimore City, and George H. Mann, of Washington, D. C. The company is to have a capital stock of $250,000, divided into 5,600 shares of the par value of $50 each. Half of the stock is to be accumulate preferred, paying in quarterly installments an annual dividend of 8 per cent. and redeemable at $55 a share, with the quarterly dividend deducted. The remaining shares are in common stock.

Maryland Theaters Reopen.

Snow Hill, Md.—F. P. Bratton, owner of the Empire theater in Pocomoke City, opened up the Opera House in this city last week, after a complete renovation and refitting. Paramount pictures will be used. Mr. Bratton states that he will open the Empire in Pocomoke in September, three nights a week and use a program of Paramount and Mutual pictures.

Federalsburg, Md.—F. M. Breeding, manager of the Opera House here, has made arrangements to reopen on September 15th.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

NOTES FROM NORTH CAROLINA.

By C. L. Linz.

New Theaters and Reopenings.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C.—S. J. Brockwell will reopen the Pickwick motion picture theater here about the middle of September, following the commencement of the new college term.

Goldsboro, N. C.—H. R. Mason, who was formerly manager of the Atlanta, Ga., office of the World Film, has completed all arrangements for the opening of his theater here, the Acme, on Labor Day. This is a very attractive playhouse and was erected at a cost of $15,000.

Hamlet, N. C.—The Strand theater, located in this place, has closed its doors.

Rocky Mount, N. C.—The Alamo theater, operated by Arrington Brothers, which has been closed by them during the heated period, will reopen the first of the month.

Statesville, N. C.—R. V. Barkley, who has been operating the Lyric theater here, has also secured control of the Crescent theater, formerly operated by R. L. Flanagan, thus absorbing his opposition.

Greensboro, N. C.—A. B. Huff and Leonard Henderson have secured a lease on the motion picture theater now undergoing construction on the site of the McAdoo Hotel, which was destroyed by fire last fall. Mr. Huff is well known in this section as a picture man by reason of his connection with the Iris theater, in Salisbury, of which he is the treasurer.

Albemarle, N. C.—Work has been commenced on the removal of the J. A. Ross dwelling to furnish a site for the erection of the Almeda theater. This marks the passing of Albemarle's best known landmark. M. F. Little is the owner of the property, and it is his intention to construct a modern motion picture show structure. The location is considered to be one of the best in town, as it is on one of the most important business streets. The Ross residence is known as one of the oldest business buildings here.

Doings in Cincinnati

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Announcement of Winter Bookings.

CINCINNATI, O.—With the coming of some cool weather, succeeding the recent torridity, and helping business at the picture houses materially, another sign of fall has appeared, in the announcement of winter bookings at the Grand and the Lyric, whose road attractions will shortly begin to appear. At the Lyric the summer photoplay season under the auspices of Manager I. Libson, which has been remarkably successful, will terminate on September 3, the traditional engagement of the Lyman H. Howe Travel Festival, with two weeks of new travel pictures, serving as the usual connecting link between the picture and the dramatic season. At the Grand a return engagement of "Where Are My Children?" has been filling the house for three performances daily, at the price of 25 cents.

A Feature That Still Is Popular.

Cincinnati, O.—When figures are compiled showing the attendance recorded at the latest return engagement of "Tillie's Punctured Romance," at the Alhambra, during the week of August 20, Manager Charles Weigel ought to be able to show some remarkable totals, as he has run that celebrated film on several ocasions, and each time with signal success. The famous Keystone feature, with Charles Chaplin and Marie Dressler, seems to have a never-diminishing drawing power, and the new prints recently distributed for release here and elsewhere show the picture in all its pristine freshness. Mr. Weigel was delighted at the opportunity of getting the picture again, as it has been a regular winner with his house.

G. A. Cramer, Voluntary Bankrupt.

Middletown, O.—George A. Cramer, an exhibitor of Middletown, O., has filed in the United States District Court here a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, assets and liabilities both concerning virtually nothing but the moving picture business. The principal creditors hold chattel mortgages covering the projecting machines, screen, seats, and other equipment in the house, which is valued at about the amount of the incumbrance. Liabilities amount to $1,599, and assets are estimated at $1,903, including $500 for the good-will of the house, which will probably be continued in operation under some plan to be determined.

Operator Dies in Booth.

Hamilton, O.—A mysterious accident resulted in the electrocution of Frank Rochelle, operator at the Star moving picture theater, on Court street, on the afternoon of August 19. He was running a picture when he received the shock and fell dead. Robert Sachs, proprietor of the Star, went up to the booth to investigate when the picture stopped running, and discovered the dead operator. As Rochelle was alone in the booth at the time, no one knows just how the accident occurred, and investigation failed to disclose anything wrong with the apparatus or connections.

Fire in Sandusky Theater.

Sandusky, O.—The Schade theater, one of the best in this vicinity, suffered a fire loss of about $4,000, when a blaze broke out in the operating booth, but the house proper was undamaged on account of the fireproof construction of the booth, to which the blaze was readily confined. Four operating machines were badly damaged, and these, with several feature films destroyed, made up the bulk of the loss, thirteen films causing the fire to burn fiercely while it lasted. The operators fought the fire with chemical extinguishers, and got the flames under control before the fire department arrived.

Want Arbitration in Cleveland

League Sends Notices to 164 Local Exhibitors Requesting Them to Sign No Agreement with Unions—Will Settle the Question of Wage Increase by Neutral Board of Arbitration.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland, Ohio.

CLEVELAND, O.—Arbitration of differences between the moving picture operators and Cleveland exhibitors over increased wage demands of the operators has been asked by the exhibitors.

The exhibitors have taken the position that business conditions do not warrant the granting of any wage increase, but they have expressed a willingness to abide by the finding of a board of arbitration. The method of arbitration has not been determined as yet, however, nor have the operators given a final answer as to their attitude toward arbitration.

The following notice has been sent to 164 Cleveland exhibitors from the headquarters of the Northeastern Ohio Moving Picture Exhibitors' League:

"In regard to the demand of the operators' union, we wish to inform you that a committee appointed by the League has taken charge of the matter and that said committee has demanded arbitration of the demand on account of business conditions.

"You are therefore requested to sign no agreement or make any promises to your operator or agent of operators' union, being assured that no strike can be called and none will be, because arbitration has been demanded. Under labor union laws they themselves concede this fact.

"Your compliance with this request will greatly aid the committee in their work in your behalf. Your committee feels that the base of the scale should not be raised."

Blanks to be filled out by the exhibitors were enclosed with each of these letters. The special committee of eight exhibitors in charge of the negotiations with the operators is seeking to determine the status of each house and make a record of those now paying more than the union wage scale.

Ernest Schwartz is chairman of this committee, which held a five-hour session with the operators, beginning at midnight on August 18. The committee members told the operators that a wage increase was improper at this time because of general business conditions, the war tax against picture shows, increased cost of equipment and growing cost of operation. In demanding arbitration, the exhibitors' committee pointed out that the operators' union has already recognized the union and the operators in turn have treated with the exhibitors as an organization.

Members of the committee said that 75 per cent. of the operators have admitted having wages outside of their moving picture work. The exhibitors have made it plain that if any wage increase is granted the operators will be required to accept the sale and not one cent more.

The operators have demanded an increase of approximately $3.50 a week over their present scale, which sets $17.50 as a minimum.

The committees on both sides are holding daily meetings.

To Inspect Church Film Equipment.

Cleveland, O.—Moving picture equipment in churches must be inspected by the city building department and a permit granted to operate before pictures can be shown in churches, according to a recent ruling of C. S. Baxter of the building department. This action is the result of a fire and near panic in the Dunham Avenue Christian Church, August 20, when a projection machine clogged and the film ignited. Stanley Taylor, the operator, was burned about the arms and face. Firemen extinguished the flames with a loss of $25 after the congregation fled from the church.

Baxter said the city would make no charge for inspection or issuing the permits to churches.

Opens "Fall of Nation" Office.

Cleveland, O.—Ohio bookings for "The Fall of a Nation" will be made in Cleveland, according to the announcement of J. Frank Hatch, owner of the Ohio rights to the picture. He has just opened an office in the Columbia building.

V-L-S-E Salesmen to Meet.

Cleveland, O.—C. A. Meade, new Cleveland manager of the V-L-S-E exchange in the Sincere building, plans to hold a series of meetings for V-L-S-E salesmen. The first of these meetings was held Sunday, August 13, with J. M. Duncan, J. E. Surrell, George F. Rowell and others of the selling force as speakers.

C. A. Meade.

Mr. Meade came to Cleveland from Dallas, Texas, where he opened the Southern headquarters of the organization. He was there fifteen months. Before going to Dallas, Mr. Meade was with the Mutual exchange in Omaha, and the General Film Company in Kansas City, Mo.

New Company Buys Three Theaters.

Cleveland, O.—The Freer Theater Company, just organized, has announced the purchase of three picture theaters here. The theaters are the Haltnorth, Globe and Fountain, all in the vicinity of Woodland avenue and E. 55th street. M. B. Horowitz and Louis Israel head the company.

New Stillman Soon to Open.

Cleveland, O.—Emil Mandelbaum, owner of the new Stillman theater, soon to open, is considering booking productions of the Clara Kimball Young Company, in addition to the pictures made by the Mary Pickford Film Corporation. The Stillman is declared to be one of the finest picture houses outside of New York. It is located on Euclid avenue, next to the Hotel Statler.

Grace Clark Goes to Vitagraph.

Cleveland, O.—Miss Grace Clark, Cleveland girl who has appeared in many amateur theatrical productions here for the past three years, has just closed a contract with the Vitagraph Company. She will go to the New York studio in a few weeks.

Screen Club's Corn Roast.

Cleveland, O.—Members of the Cleveland Screen Club with their families held their second outing of the summer August 24 at Willoughbeach Park. A baseball game, swimming races and a corn roast were features of the affair. There were also a number of freak athletic contests.

Cleveland, O.—David Adler, manager of the Strand moving picture theater, has just acquired an interest in the lease of the Regent theater in Elmira, N. Y. Adler is interested with T. H. Tooker and Nathan Friedman of Pittsburgh.

Toronto's Film Office Problem

Local Exchange Managers Perplexed by High Rates Asked for Fire Insurance—Premiums Often Have to Cover Whole Building and Amount to More Than the Rent of the Space Occupied.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street, East, Toronto, Can.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—Not content with iridescent and flamingly hot spells, the discussion among managers of moving picture exchanges in Toronto has gone to blazes. This is literally true. Your correspondent perspired on several occasions recently while local film magnates talked of fires that never happen, all-fired high insurance rates and hot searches after buildings suitable for exchange purposes. It develops that a number of Toronto exchange managers are not satisfied with present premises, but they practically find themselves in the predicament of not being able to move so much as a hand when it comes to picking out new offices. The different quarters are available, but the underwriters' regulations and rates are so prohibitory that removal is impossible. Several film men declare that the question needs immediate airing. One example is cited:

W. C. Gookin, Canadian manager for the V-L-S-E, was authorized to proceed with the removal of his present Toronto facilities and stock to more commodious premises. He was also granted full liberty in the matter of arranging for the establishment of a private projection room or trade theater. He sought new premises and found several that might have proved suitable, but the question of insurance entirely prohibited a move. Mr. Gookin found that, in one or two cases, insurance premiums would exceed the rental charge. The private theater feature meant no less than $400 per year for insurance alone. He has been forced to give up the idea temporarily and has been content to take an extra room in the same building at 15 Wilton avenue, in which his main Canadian office is situated.

The local insurance problem works out something like this: The moment a film exchange enters an office building, the insurance rate on the whole building goes up with a leap and the exchange is compelled to bear the cost of the extra premiums for all other concerns located on the premises whether the structure stands two or twenty stories high. The chief stock in trade of the exchange, the films, are non-insurable; and sometimes, though the office fittings of an exchange are not worth a fortune, yet the underwriters require next to impossible rates on this furniture and on the whole premises.

Manager J. Travis of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Pathe distributors, was unable to move his headquarters recently when he so desired. The same applies to the Canadian head office here of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd.

Several Toronto exchange managers have expressed the opinion that the insurance subject should receive immediate attention, and the matter is now officially before the recently organized exchange managers' association. One or two suggestions about a centrally located building for the local film interests have been made, and this feature is engaging the attention of several managers.

The way the problem is solved in Toronto will be interesting to exchange men in many other places. The financing of big, central exchange buildings and devoted exclusively to this trade is claiming just now a good deal of close attention.

MONARCH FILM INCORPORATED.

Will Distribute Clara Kimball Young Pictures Throughout Canada.

Toronto, Ont.—The Monarch Film Company, Ltd., has been incorporated, with headquarters at 12 Queen street East, Toronto, for the purpose of distributing Clara Kimball Young photoplays in all Canada, the first of which to be released in the Dominion will be "The Common Law," which will appear in October. The service of this company, which is closely related to the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., it is stated, will be one photodrama each month, and exhibitors in all parts of the country have been invited to wire or mail bids for the exclusive showing of the Young pictures in their respective communities. Successful exhibitors will be provided with advertising literature and posters for each of these pictures without charge, it is announced.

New Faces and Changes in the Trade.

Toronto, Ont.—The moving picture people in and around Toronto are on the hop, so to speak. Here are the changes among the exchanges and theaters during the past week or so:

Ross Willis, formerly of the Boston branch of the V-L-S-E, has joined the staff at the Canadian headquarters for the "Big Four."

M. S. Bernstein, New York, has joined the road force of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Toronto. He is handling "Britain Prepared" at present, but he will be sent West shortly, it is stated.

Manager J. Jenks, late of the Photodrome, Queen street West, Toronto, is now in charge of the Empress theater, Yonge street. Manager Coulson of the Red Mill has assumed control of the Photodrome.

A. Pullen, Detroit, has become manager of the Family theater, Walkerville, Ont., which formerly bore the name of the "Walkerville Theater."

J. A. Tucker, owner of the Princess theater, Orillia, has taken over his only opposition, the Crystal theater, and now has complete control of the picture business in his town.

Bill Dineen, manager of the Strand theater, Camp Borden, for R. S. Marvin, Strand theater, Toronto, has been placed in charge of the Palace theater, Angus, Ont., which is also controlled by Mr. Marvin.

The only moving picture theater destroyed in the great fire which swept a portion of northern Ontario was the Star theater at Cochrane, Ont., owned by W. H. Warke. The whole village of Cochrane was wiped out.

A new Canadian corporation is that of the United Film, Ltd., with headquarters at Galt, Ont. The capitalization is $49,000. The purpose of the company is to produce moving pictures, according to the official announcement regarding the issue of the charter.

Minneapolis News Letter

By John L. Johnson, 814 Produce Exchange, Minneapolis, Minn.

Fall Season Begins Bright.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The fall season of Mill City moving picture theaters was started under way last week with the return of cool weather and from the reports of an increased business by theaters and exchanges alike it seems that it will be a big one.

"Civilization" opened an unlimited run at the Shubert and did a big business during the first week of presentation. Messrs. Rathner and Conhaim of the Supreme Features exchange, controllers of the "Civilization" rights for this territory, put on the mammoth Ince spectacle in the same big way it has been presented at New York and Chicago, and the elaborate scale on which the production is being run has won some very favorable comment from the press. Victor L. Schertzinger, who composed the musical score and lyrics for the big feature, conducted the orchestra during the first week and Frank Pallma took charge of the directing after his departure. H. Apperson Jones is technical stage director. J. E. Rosen is manager of the "A" company.

The Misses Eugenia Young, Ruth Kelton, Jean Selkirk, Dot Martin and Dorrit Kelton and Messrs. Roy West, Andrew Henning and Nic Safro played the leading parts in the prologues. The chorus was made up of 45 people and Mary Gouckler and Jack Salisbury were the soloists. The stage and lighting effects used by the company are positively remarkable.

With "Civilization" now running J. E. Brehany of the Elliott & Sherman Film Corporation comes to the front that "Ramona" will be brought to Minneapolis for State Fair Week. The Elliott-Sherman firm has four "Birth of a Nation" troupes now on the road and by the end of a two-weeks' run will have three "Ramona" shows out. "The Birth" (Coast show), opened a two weeks' run at the Tacoma theater, Tacoma, Wash., August 20, and the other three companies are working in Iowa, the Dakotas and Minnesota. One "Ramona" company is playing in Denver, the second opened in Sioux City, Iowa, August 20, and will come to Minneapolis the first week in September, while the third will open its season at the Brandeis theater, Omaha, Neb. Harry A. Sherman, president of the E. & S. firm, has returned from Chicago and New York, where he has deals pending for several new features and hopes to be able to announce them shortly.

"Liberty" Seems Popular.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"Liberty," the Universal series, has opened at the New Garden theater and at this writing each showing has attracted a good sized audience. Manager F. S. Meyer of the local Universal exchange reports a record number of bookings for the serial and demand for dates will be brisk.

New Policy at St. Paul Strand.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Strand, controlled by the Friedman interests, has gone over to open booking and last week "God's Country and the Woman," and "The Daring of Diana" were the features played. J. G. Gilosky, manager of the Alhambra, has taken over the Triangle program and reports a big increase in business as a result. The Strand has arranged to show the "Beatrice Fairfax" series put out by the International Film Service.

New Minneapolis Road Men.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Several new roadmen were started out by Minneapolis exchanges during the last week. C. M. Mast and J. Coen were added to the staff of the Independent Film corporation, and will talk up "The Yellow Menace." Manager S. N. Robinson of the Fox exchange added William Beckenstein and S. MacIntyre, and Manager C. R. Gilmour has put out Mr. Leeds, formerly of New York.

J. E. Moor Busy.

Minneapolis, Minn.—J. E. Moor, manager of the Independent Film corporation, Produce Exchange building, is keeping an operator busy from nine o'clock in the morning until five every afternoon, running off "The Yellow Meace" for the benefit of visiting exhibitors.

Minneapolis Brevities.

H. C. Andrees, manager of the International Film Service exchange, Produce Exchange building, went to Chicago recently for a conference with John F. Bowman.

A. R. Nelson, Independent Film corporation, is traveling through Iowa in his automobile, talking up "The Yellow Menace."

Harry Rowe is working overtime every day, making bookings for "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and handling Unicorn office matters.

M. R. Dick and Sam Dworsky went to Chicago last week to look after business interests. Mr. Pick is purchasing equipment for his "End of the World" road show in the Windy City, and Mr. Dworsky is visiting his Progressive Film Renovating Co.

A. A. Hixon, of the Minnesota Metro exchange, had several healthy looking contracts for "The Crimson Stain Mystery" on O. N. Davies' desk when the latter returned from his New York monthly meeting last Wednesday.

C. W. Sawin of the V-L-S-E exchange is going around the territory with J. McVey. Mr. Sawin has visited every theater booked by the V-L-S-E in its territory except the portion covered by Mr. McVey and will take two weeks in making that circuit.

Harry Leonhardt, special Western representative of Fox, Chicago, visited Manager S. N. Robinson last week in the Minneapolis office. Mr. Leonhardt is now in St. Louis.

Manager Harry Graham of the Kleine Edison exchange has been visiting exhibitors in La Crosse, Wis., and Dubuque, Iowa.

C. J. Verhalen, new Paramount publicity man, is on the job, and despite the fact that he is up to his neck in work, has not been too busy to make a large number of new acquaintances and friends.

Paul Bliss has taken over the moving picture page of the Daily News.

The new territorial trade magazine, which made its appearance last week, has been called "Reel News" instead of "Reel Facts," as first decided upon.

Manager F. S. Meyer of the Universal exchange held a special meeting of "Liberty" bookers at the Bijou theater last Tuesday for the purpose of discussing the plans for advertising the production.

Among the visitors at the various exchanges during the week were: L. J. Roesner, Colonial, Winona, Minn.; V. B. Valleau, Broadway, Albert Lea, Minn.; W. G. Hyde, Liberty, Miles City, Mont.; A. A. Thomas, Auditorium, Owatonna, Minn.; H. C. Gieble, Star theater, St. James, Minn.; Frank Nemac, St. Cloud, Minn., and Herman Miller, who is opening a house at Crookston, Minn.

New Theaters and Changes.

Elmwood, Ill.—The Winget Land Company of Peoria has sold the Palace theater to John McCorkle.

Elmwood, Ill.—Ernest Wooten has leased the photoplay theater from J. A. Vance.

Perry, Ill.—J. Will Stone, of Pittsfield, has been planning to open a moving picture theater here, as soon as the new electric light plant is completed.

Moline, Ill.—The Family theater here has been leased by J. Harry Blanchard, owner of the Columbia theater in Davenport, Iowa. He will add vaudeville to the program. Blanchard's name has been connected with a report of the erection of a new vaudeville house on the site on Fifth avenue now occupied by the Bio theater. Blanchard knows nothing of this project. E. C. Woodyatt, owner of the Bio, still has a year and one-half lease.

Ottawa, Ill.—Manager Harry Lewis reopened the Gayety theater, August 24, with "Ramona."

Peoria, Ill.—Although the "Hippodrome" plans to run vaudeville this fall and winter it was announced the opening on September 3 would be with a big feature film production.

Watseka, Ill.—The Star theater was closed while a new steel ceiling was installed, and the place was redecorated.

Crystal Lake, Ill.—The Star theater was closed in August because of the excessive heat.

Rockford, Ill.—Nelson Brothers have opened the Star theater for the season with moving pictures and vaudeville.

Lincoln, Ill.—Earl Halberg of McLean has purchased for use in his theater there the equipment of the moving picture house here, which at various times was known as the Princess, Vogue and the Gem.

Kankakee, Ill.—The New Princes theater, with its seating capacity increased to 400, new decorations of salmon, gray, gold and russet, has been reopened by Manager J. B. Riley.

Brookport, Ill.—A moving picture theater has been opened here.

Romeo, Mich.—The remodeled Palace theater has been opened.

Bi-Lingual Titles in Quebec?

Legislature May Compel Titles in Two Languages for All Pictures in the Province—Fear Things Misunderstood May Carry Immoral Suggestions—Will Greatly Increase the Cost of Imported Film.

By Lane McLean, 7 Phillips Square, Montreal, Quebec.

QUEBEC, Canada.—Severe pressure has been brought to bear on the Legislature of the province of Quebec to enact a law providing that all titles and subtitles appearing in motion picture plays shall be shown in both the French and English language, and, while this matter has been under discussion for some time, it now seems that the same will be brought to a final issue through the efforts of Sheriff Lemieux, chairman of the Board of Censors for the province of Quebec, and who is being supported by the other members of this board.

Contending that the French speaking population of this province is unable to follow the thread of the story as it is outlined in the English sub-titles, the censors reason that in many instances immoral impressions are unintentionally imparted.

The Legislature is now forming a bill to introduce the bi-lingual feature in all films exhibited in Quebec, which, if passed, would increase the cost of film by about $35 per thousand feet. The expense now contingent upon the importation of film into the Dominion of Canada is extremely heavy, amounting to a duty of 25 per cent. and a war tax of 7½ per cent. based on a valuation of 8 cents per foot, which amounts to $26 per thousand feet. Under the new law the total overhead expense would be approximately $61 for each thousand feet. The reader will realize that such a charge is almost prohibitive under present conditions.

The writer has gone to some little trouble to figure out the result of the enactment of such a measure, and after "getting a line" on the general profit and loss statements of exchanges operating in Quebec province has come to the conclusion that such a law would simply result in the elimination of this province in so far as motion picture productions imported from the States are concerned. Under the additional expense it would be impractical to exhibit such film, thereby entailing a loss to the Dominion in revenues and the retirement of practically every importing film exchange from Quebec.

Exchange men are exerting their every effort to forestall any action in this connection by the Legislature. Mr. Arthur H. Sawyer, president of the Standard Film Service, Ltd., and Metro distributor for Canada, in his speech before Montreal exchange managers brought out the point that unless the province of Quebec was eliminated from all circuits it would be necessary that every film entering Canada from the States have all titles and sub-titles screened in both English and French in order that the film might comply with the requirements of the province of Quebec while passing through that territory.

The matter is in abeyance for the immediate present but early action is anticipated, and in the meantime every film man concerned is doing his level best to "save the day" for the motion picture business in the province of Quebec.

Live Notes from Quebec Exchanges.

T. C. Malcolm, formerly in charge of the General offices in Los Angeles, has accepted the managership of the Montreal branch of the Mutual. Mr. Malcolm has had wide experience in the "film game" throughout the West and is heartily welcomed in the motion picture fraternity of this city.

A. H. Sawyer, president and general manager of the Standard Film Service, Ltd., and Canadian distributor of Metros, has recently returned from the Metro convention held in Atlantic City. Mr. Sawyer is devoting his every energy to the perfection of his organization which consists of branches in six of the largest cities of the Dominion, extending over the territory from St. Johns, N. B., in the East to Vancouver, B. C., in the West.

Herbert Lubin (Metro) has completed a trip of inspection of all the Metro distributors in the Dominion and is at present in Vancouver, B. C., where he will perfect the organization of the branch in that city.

R. S. Bell, former manager of the World Film in Montreal, has severed his connection with the company in order to devote his entire energies as the managing director of the Belimanworth Theater Company, Ltd., controlling the Connaught and Victoria theaters of Montreal.

M. R. Lubin, formerly in charge of the Toronto office of the Standard Film Service, Ltd., has been transferred to the head offices in Montreal, where he assumed his duties on August 15.

Sam Whitehead of Broye & Whitehead, owners of the Dominion rights on "The Spoilers," has removed his offices from Montreal to Winnipeg.

Jos. A. Block, who for the past few years has been connected with the Famous Players Film Service, has resigned his position with that company and accepted the city managership of the Standard Film Service, Ltd.

Illinois Jottings.

Bushnell, Ill.—The Airdome was used for a performance under the auspices of the Civic League. Films showing the work in the blind, feeble-minded and insane institutions in Illinois were shown. An accompanying lecture was by Dr. George A. Zelier, of the Illinois state board of administration.

Monmouth, Ill.—Manager George Howard of the Bijou theater has reduced his prices to 5 and 10 cents with the exception of big features.

Waukegan, Ill.—The Waukegan Sun put on a big auto ride for 400 children of the city. Upon their return the children were invited by Mr. and Mrs. Carl Muller, proprietors of the Elite theater, to attend a special matinee of Paramount pictures.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Manager Scott Luttrell, of the Majestic theater, used 200 pairs of shoes in decorating the lobby when he was running "Shoes," the Bluebird feature. George Hopper, chief operator at the Majestic, was responsible for the idea.

Detroit Film Men Face Problem

Meeting of Exhibitors Called to Discuss Objectionable Film Question With City Officials—Commissions Put It Up to the Film Men—A Committee of Exhibitors and Exchange Men Formed.

By Jacob Smith, 504 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, Mich.—One of the most important meetings that ever took place in Detroit attended by exhibitors and exchange managers was that at the Crystal Room, Hotel Griswold, on Friday evening, August 18, at eleven o'clock. Approximately seventy-five representatives of the moving picture industry were present. The purpose of the special meeting—which, by the way, was called by A. J. Gilligham, president of the Detroit Screen Club—was to discuss certain proposed city ordinances as well as the subject of censorship. First came a real Dutch lunch; then followed the business session presided over by Mr. Gilligham. Sitting at the speakers' table were G. Spencer Trask (Mutual), Ira W. Jayne (chairman of the Detroit Recreation Commission), Hon. John Gillespie (Detroit police commissioner), A. J. Gilligham (president Detroit Screen Club), Frank Drew (managing director Drury Lane theater) and Samuel Dembow, Jr. (World Film).

Mr. Gilligham in his opening remarks explained the purpose of the get-together and read a proposed ordinance on sanitation and ventilation as prepared by the Detroit Board of Health which will shortly be introduced into the Common Council and on which there will be a hearing before the Council Committee on Sept. 5. He made a strong plea for co-operation among exhibitors and all branches of the moving picture industry for the purpose of combating adverse legislation and for self-protection. He then introduced as guest of the evening Hon. John Gillespie, police commissioner of Detroit, who it was certainly a great honor to have present. The commissioner said in part:

Self-Criticism Needed.

"I am partly interested in your business because we are called upon to handle moving picture matters. There are over 150 photoplay houses in Detroit, representing an investment exceeding a million dollars. You know that no merchant who expects to stay in business will put on his counter shoddy goods. The Police Department does not go to his store to see if he has shoddy goods. Your business is just as legitimate as the merchant's, and you should not carry shoddy goods in the form of undesirable film. You should be the censor of your own business. When we get a complaint that you are not giving healthy shows, we are called in, but not until you have failed to look after your own busines. You should conduct things on the same business-like principles as the bar associations and the real estate boards in every city. When an attorney does something unethical, the police department is not asked to rectify it, but the association sees that the matter is rectified or that the attorney has his license revoked. If the real estate boards find a man doing crooked business, they see that he is put out of business; it isn't necessary to pass laws. These lines of trade are big enough to handle their own grievances and troubles. Why can't the moving picture owners and managers do likewise? You have larger investments than any of bar associations or real estate boards.

"We have a lot of people who want common decency in moving pictures. Adverse criticism of one theater reflects on everybody in the same business. We have several hundred complaints weekly against shows in moving picture houses. We find often that certain pictures could be eleminated with benefit to the business. The houses which show sensational or undesirable film are not over three per cent. I am sure that so-called sensational film could be eliminated and that the same houses could make just as much money in the long run by showing decent pictures.

No Good Censors to Be Found.

"As for Censorship, I don't believe any three, five or fifty set of men are capable of properly censoring motion pictures. I am NOT IN FAVOR OF CENSORSHIP The man who shows them should be the censor. You gentlemen in the film business control the situation—at least you should. My suggestion is to judge your own film and when you find an improper film—one that you would be ashamed to have seen by your mother, wife, children and sisters—cut it out. A lot of things that go in a comedy film would not go in dramatic films. So-called reform films are in most cases undesirable.

"The Recreation Commission is supposed to judge all film, but it has no money with which to carry on this work. I do believe, sincerely and conscientiously, that something should be done to censor pictures, but that the censoring should be done by YOU people in the busines.

"I am here for suggestions. Tell me how the Police Department can improve your business and we will gladly co-operate. We want to really assist and help you as public officials and we will do it if you show us the way."

Picture Men Speak.

A. J. Gilligham suggested greater co-operation with the Police Department, a strong local organization comprising exhibitors and exchanges, and suggested that the police revoke the license of a theater for 30 days that puts on objectional film. This met with great applause, indicating that it was the general sentiment of those present.

Neil Kingsley, exchange manager for Fox, said he believed censorship of any kind would be a bad thing in Michigan, and illustrated conditions existing in Ohio as the result of state censorship. He said that the manner in which some exhibitors advertised their pictures was offtimes misleading and made the pictures appear immoral when in reality they were clean.

C. A. Hoffman, of the Palace theater, said: "The nearest way to get to a realization of the foundation of your business is to believe in safety first and preparedness. Objectionable film antagonizes these two basic principles. In catering to the public, whether fastidious or not, we must be careful what we give. I agree fully with the sentiments as expressed by our police commissioner."

Sam Ackerman, of the East Side Theater; George W. Weeks, district manager of the Universal; Frederick Ingersoll, of the Knickerbocker theater; Frank Drew of the Drury Lane; William Sheik, of the Sheridan, and Tom Lynch, a pioneer Detroit exhibitor, were others who spoke briefly.

Censorship Is Your Problem.

Then came a few pertinent remarks by Ira W. Jayne, head of the Detroit Recreation Commission, who supported the contentions of the police commissioner, and said, in part: "CENSORSHIP, GENTLEMEN, IS RIGHT UP TO YOU. As a toy, it has been used and misused. I believe in the absolute freedom of thought and the absolute freedom of every individual. I am opposed to the free censorship of anything. It must be admitted, however, that there is a difference between clean film and so-called sensational film; also in the way these pictures are advertised. Women and children are among your patrons by the thousands and you must remember this in picking your programs. You must furnish them recreation that is clean and healthy. This censorship problem is YOUR PROBLEM. You gentlemen must get together for your own protection and work out a way that will solve this problem. If you are not big enough to solve your problems, that means outside help is necessary. You must organize—every line of trade is organized. You don't need city ordinances and legislation—you just need organization. Set your own standards—but set them high enough that they will reflect credit upon your industry."

Entertainment during the evening was provided by the Hotel Griswold cabaret, Henry Santrey, of the Majestic theater, and Eddie McGrath of the Broadway-Strand theater.

A vote of thanks was tendered Messrs. Gillespie and Jayne for their presence and for their friendly attitude toward the motion picture business.

May Form New Organization.

The suggestion was made that steps be taken at once for the formation of an organization comprising exhibitors and exchanges. Mr. Gilligham appointed twelve exhibitors and twelve exchange managers as members of a special committee to meet Tuesday, Sept. 12, at the Hotel Griswold, 2 P. M., to discuss the matter.

Be at City Hall September 5.

Detroit, Mich.—This is a reminder that every Detroit exhibitor is expected to be present at the special hearing in the City Hall on September 5, to express his views upon the proposed Sanitation and Ventilation Ordinance. Also a proposed ruling that no film can be carried upon street cars. It is understood that certain motion picture operaters and expressing companies are behind this new ruling The corporation counsel believes that film cannot be legally prohibited from street cars. Investigation shows that there has never been a single accident of any kind from film on street cars, so why prohibit same unless there is a good reason.

George Nathan at Local Kleine Helm.

Detroit, Mich.—George Nathan, of Chicago, succeeds Frank Rutledge as manager of the Detroit exchange of George Kleine in the Broadway Market building. As noted elsewhere in this issue, Mr. Rutledge has been appointed manager of the new Artcraft Film exchange to be established in Detroit for handling the new Mary Pickford productions.

New License Fees Now Effective.

Detroit, Mich.—A new city ordinance which became effective August 1 requires owners of theaters under 600 capacity to pay a license fee of $25, while those operating houses with 600 seats and over must pay a yearly license fee of $50.

C. W. Porter Heads New Regent.

Detroit, Mich.—Charles W. Porter, resigned as manager of the Duplex theater, Detroit, taking effect August 27, and has been appointed manager of the new Regent theater, at Woodward and Horton avenues, owned by William Klatt, and which opens early in September. The Regent, seating close to 2,500 people, will be one of the most beautiful playhouses in the state. It will open with first-run Metro films, changing twice weekly.

City Film Notes.

D. Leo Dennison and J. O. Brooks, of the Detroit exchange of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, returned August 21 from a ten-day motor trip to New York.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, has changed the time of its weekday matinee from 2:30 to 2:15. A Keystone comedy has been added to the weekday matinees to stimulate the attendance.

Tom Lynch, proprietor of the Catherine theater, is a candidate for alderman in his ward. Good luck, Tom.

Hoffman Bros., of Detroit, announce that motion pictures will continue as the permanent policy of the new Palace theater in Saginaw.

Kansas and Missouri Letter

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Building Kansas City, Mo.

"Two Bits! Two Bits!"

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—"Two bits! Two bits!" This is the cry adopted by the masculine members of the Kansas City Universal office. For according to a new ruling in that office any person found smoking anywhere in the building except in the main office is forced to give up twenty-five cents to the first person who tells him about it. The rule is gradually becoming an effective one. At first, "Marty" Williams got a dollar in a couple of hours, while George Bowles, the publicity manager, was close on his heels. Manager Cropper, on stepping out of his private office, caught "Marty" sauntering in from the supply room. "Two bits!" And Marty gave up part of his dollar. The women of the office are in on the game, too. If they see a masculine employee puffing away either on a cigarette or a cigar, "two bits!" and the offender has to come across. Besides being a good ruling it is providing a bit of humor and fun for the office force.

Invites Two Screen Clubs.

Kansas City, Mo.—M. L. Beeson, manager of the Chalk Beeson theater, at Dodge City, Kan., one of the most beautiful and picturesque moving picture theaters in the West, was in Kansas City recently. And evidently he had come for the express purpose of getting acquainted with the Kansas City Screen Club. He expressed to the officers his appreciation, and that of the exhibitors in the Kansas towns, of the good that these clubs can do for them. Mr. Beeson suggested a way to make the screen club broader, and offered the means of doing it. This was to hold a session in a Kansas town—Dodge City preferably. He gave a formal invitation to the Kansas City Screen Club to meet at Dodge; and announced that the same invitation would be extended to the Denver Screen Club, the hope being that the two Screen Clubs would meet at Dodge simultaneously. Dodge City is one of the most famous towns in Kansas, being the old stamping ground of many noted frontier characters, a terminal of the older trails to which cattlemen drove their herds northward for marketing, and later for distribution for grazing. The invitation was cordially received by the officers of the Kansas City Screen Club.

"Nation" Film in Tent.

Kansas City, Mo.—Frank Powell, an exhibitor of Ponca City, Oklahoma, was a visitor in the city recently. Mr. Powell purchased a "big top" to show the picture, "The Birth of a Nation." Mr. Powell expected a healthy business on the picture from the towns near and far, and is making preparations. He has secured the running of special trains from the more distant cities he hopes to draw from, and is thus giving everyone a chance to see the feature.

M. S. White Will Assist F. L. Kilts.

Kansas City, Mo.—M. S. White, formerly of the Mutual Film exchange at Oklahoma City, arrived August 21 to take the place vacated by E. C. Mills, as assistant to F. L. Kilts.

Empress Joins Pantages Circuit.

Kansas City, Mo.—John C. Donnelly, formerly of Tacoma, Wash., and William J. Timmons, for many years associated with Alexander Pantages, have leased the Empress theater at Kansas City, and it will be made a part of the Pantages circuit. They are redecorating the theater. It is said that they will also extend the Pantages circuit to other cities, probably to St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines, Joplin, and Tulsa. Mr. Donnelly retired from the hotel business a year ago. The Empress has been variously an exclusively picture theater, vaudeville, and other combinations in the past two years.

Telling Time by the Klock.

Pittsburg, Kan.—To the person or persons guessing the date or nearest date of the opening of the Klock theater here, a prize of ten dollars will be awarded. This contest is an unusual one. Most theaters on opening offer a prize for the best name suggested. The advertisements in the Pittsburg newspapers say: "Look the building over and make your guess." The managers, Messrs. Klock and Klock, are uncertain as to the opening date. The contest closed August 19, so it is presumed that the theater will open shortly.

St. Louis Airdomes Prospering

World Representative Finds Good Audiences in South St. Louis's Cool Pleasant Open-Air Shows—Visits the Knickerbocker, the Russell, the McKinley, the California and the Pestalozzi.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—No section of the city has profited to any greater extent by the fine airdome weather we have been having this season than South St. Louis. On account of the great number of al fresco shows on the south side we were only able to hit the high places here and there, and the night was cool—the coolest of the season, in fact—but we found good crowds everywhere, and many signs and much talk of previous prosperity.

The Knickerbocker Airdome.

The first stop was at the Knickerbocker at 3145 Park avenue. The Knickerbocker airdome is at the side of the theater, and the crowd is received through the lobby and box office of the house. This is one of the first neighborhood houses of the better type to be built in South St. Louis, and it is modern and up to date in every respect. It was erected by Meyer Brothers & Pracht, who disposed of the property when they opened the Shaw theater at Shaw and 39th streets. The Knickerbocker is now under the management of James J. Barrett, who also controls the Chippewa and the Cass theaters. Mr. Barrett conducts a high class entertainment, using big features only, Paramount, Metro, World and Fox pictures being used. Ten cents admission is charged. The Knickerbocker issues a very neat and attractive program, which gives the week's offering, and carries a coupon which allows the patrons to express their choice in pictures and stars.

The Nebraska Airdome.

A few blocks east of the Knickerbocker is the Nebraska airdome, a fine big place that seats a small multitude of people. The Nebraska is controlled by Lorimer & Dubach, both veterans in the amusement world. The Nebraska has a number of trainmen and railroad men among its patrons. These conductors and engineers are, of course, subject to a call at any hour, and Manager Lorimer has instituted a system of notifying them of their calls by flashing their names and the time they are expected to report for work on the screen. Sometimes as many as five and six calls are made in an evening. The trainmen appreciate this service and make good use of it.

Spyros Skouras's Airdome.

After the Nebraska we stopped at the Russell, on Russell and South Jefferson avenues. This place is one of the finest out-door places on the south side. Spyros Skouras, proprietor of the Lafayette theater, two blocks east on Jefferson, manages the place. The Russell has been in operation several years, but under the new management has been greatly improved and beautified. The strip of ground between the pavement and the wall of the airdome has been made into a beautiful lawn, bordered by a close cropped privet hedge. Flowers are growing at intervals in this plot, which stretches the whole length in front of the airdome. Three heroic sized statues with out stretched arms, bearing big electric globes, adds further to the beauty and attractiveness of the place. Inside of the airdome the same scheme of flower and plant decoration has been carried out. Large vases with overflowing greenery and flowers are everywhere, and the projection booth is decorated with vines and flowering plants. Taking it all in all the Russell is most attractive.

The McKinley on a Roof.

We stopped next at the McKinley, the most unique theater in the city from the fact that the airdome is on the roof. The McKinley is on South Jefferson and Accomac, and is one of the best known places in that section, and the roof garden is a popular resort for the people in the neighborhood. The McKinley has been closed for a couple of weeks undergoing repairs, and just opened on August 21st under new management. McCutchen & Wittmann are the new proprietors, but it is like coming back home for them to take charge of the place, as they formerly managed the theater for three years. Mr. Wittmann is one of the oldest exhibitors in the city—in point of experience, not years—and as John Billmeyer, who is turning the crank of the projecting machine, is one of the oldest operations—also in point of experience—the people of the neighborhood will get their money's worth of entertainment from this pair of veterans at the McKinley, and we expect to use our nice new season pass enclosed with the announcement of the McKinley's opening real often. Thanks.

The California Garden.

We went over to the California Garden from the McKinley. This place is under the management of Sam Koplar, and an all picture program has been instituted in place of the mixed films and vaudeville that has been the rule at the Garden in previous seasons. The California is a smashing big place with a promenade at the back and flowers and fountains and all the trimmings that go to make St. Louis airdomes the talk of the country.

The New and Modern Pestalozzi.

After the California we stopped at the Pestalozzi, on the corner of Pestalozzi and Oregon avenues. The Pestalozzi is alongside of the theater of the same name, and the audience can be transferred to the house in case of rain in a few minutes. Fred Freise is the owner and manager of the Pestalozzi, which is a new place and has all the new and modern equipment of an up-to-date theater. The place seats a thousand, and five cents admission is charged.

New Notes of Local Theaters.

Baxter Springs, Kans.—August Rehm, manager of the Majestic theater of this city, has added a new front to the building, giving it a very modern appearance. On the innovations of Mr. Rehm himself, is the placing of fans over boxes of ice, thus securing cool breezes.

Kingman, Kans.—Harris & White have opened the Star theater, which has been closed for some time.

Kansas City, Mo.—D. Donicci, proprietor of the Broadmoor theater for some time, has sold that picture house to Schrapper & Sons.

Fort Scott, Kans.—C. R. Bluball has sold his theater, "Pictureland," to Mr. Schmidt of Springfield, Mo.

Denver Has Film Board of Trade

Picture Men of the Mile High City Organize to Promote the Good of the Industry—H. H. Buckwalter Chosen President; C. Y. Young, Vice President, and Frank Harris, Treasurer.

By E. C. Day, Denver Times, Denver, Colorado.

DENVER, Colo.—A Moving Picture Board of Trade is the latest addition to film organizations in Denver. It was organized last week by the managers of the various film exchanges as individuals, and has been duly incorporated under the Laws of Colorado. This now gives the city a Board of Trade, composed of exchange managers, an Exhibitors League, composed of the theater owners, and a Screen Club, which numbers among its members, both exchange men and exhibitors as well as those who are associated with the industry in other ways.

The Board of Trade was organized with H. H. Buckwalter, Western Manager for Kleine, as president, C. Y. Henry, manager of the General Film Exchange, as vice-president, and Frank Harris, manager of the V-L-S-E Exchange, as treasurer. Judge H. A. Hicks, a prominent local attorney who looked after the legal features of the organization is temporary secretary and will act in this capacity until the body is well under way.

The object of the Board of Trade is to promote the moving picture industry the protection of the public, the exhibitor, and the exchanges against the unscrupulous person who seeks self gain at the expense of the film business.

Film Men Give Show to Soldiers.

Denver, Col.—A unique moving picture show was staged at the mobilization camp of the Colorado National Guard, between Denver and Golden, recently. Ward E. Scott, manager of the Denver Mutual, arranged it as a treat to the boys who are in training for Uncle Sam's service.

The show was given in honor of four Colorado exhibitors who left their theaters when the call to arms was sounded recently in connection with the Mexican troubles.

Manager Scott transported a brand new Powers machine to the camp for the occasion, and S. B. Sturtevant of Fruita, one of Colorado's best known exhibitors who is a member of the soldier-body did the operating. The other theater owner members of the guard who assisted in the arrangements, are E. W. Field of Paonia, and E. R. Chappell and Billy Harris of Canon City. The latter two are partners in the moving picture business.

Cameraman Lockwood Comes Here.

Denver, Colo.—A new addition to Denver's moving picture family has been made in the person of E. B. Lockwood, camera man for the Selig-Tribune News Weekly. He arrived this week, and plans to make his permanent headquarters here. He will cover the Rocky Mountain territory for the News Weekly.

Harry Lustig Visits.

Denver, Colo.—Harry Lustig, former manager of the Mutual exchange in Denver, but now manager for the Metro in Los Angeles, is visiting old friends in this city. He returned here last week on a vacation trip.

Many New Faces on Dallas Film Row

George Kleine Office to Be Managed by Charles H. Wuerz—Several Other Changes Include H. F. Botto's Going to Consolidated.

By E. C. Belcia, 902 West Second Street, Fort Worth, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—Among the numerous new faces seen on film row in Dallas is the smiling countenance of Charles H. Wuerz, recently of New York City, and now manager of the Geo. Kleine office in Dallas, succeeding C. B. Condell, resigned. Mr. Wuerz, a well-met fellow, is extremely cordial and we predict for him a pleasant relationship with the trade and one that will be profitable for his employers. L. F. Gilbert is his assistant in the office, and Mr. Ed. A. Kennedy, a well known road man, is pushing "Gloria's Romance" and other Kleine productions in the Southwest territory under Mr. Wuerz's supervision. Mr. Condell has returned to New York City.

Another recent change is that of H. F. Botto, who has been until recently one of L. B. Remy's (Triangle) right-hand men. Mr. Botto has accepted a position with the Consolidated Film & Supply Company (Universal).

Among the "boys," other changes this week took place as follows: Alfred Raymond leaves World Film and will in future devote his time to big feature productions. C. E. Momand, formerly with World Film, is going back to the exhibiting end of the game. C. E. Tandy, formerly of Atlanta, has taken the managership of the Paramount office, relieving Mr. Lynch, who has gone on an extended vacation. J. E. Smith will be Mr. Tandy's assistant and handle the details of the office. C. D. Touchon, one of the best known booking clerks in Texas, has resigned from the Triangle and will in future sell automobile trucks. G. B. Walker, formerly bookkeeper of the Triangle office, has also resigned. C. B. Galloway has been appointed booker to fill Touchon's place and will also be Mr. Remy's assistant in the future. Jess Worden, formerly manager of the Strand theater in Forth Worth, has gone to New Orleans to open an office handling Ivan productions.

Segals Building in Quanah.

Quanah, Tex.—Mrs. and Mr. Mike Segal, prominent exhibitors of Northwest Texas, were in Dallas for several days recently. The Segals have been located at Quanah, Texas, for several years. They are now erecting a large theater in that city to seat 1,040. It will be directly in front of their old place, which they expect to continue to run. The Segals are also figuring on opening theaters in two nearby cities at a very early date. While in Dallas they bought their entire equipment for the new theater with the exception of an organ.

Buddie Stewart Promises to Visit Us.

Dallas, Tex.—Buddie Stewart, manager of "Texas' Greatest Show," the Old Mill theater of Dallas, is going to take a vacation at an early date. Mr. Stewart is going to New York and other Eastern cities and is making the trip one of business as well as pleasure, for he will pay particular attention to the detail management of the eastern theaters, and also anything else of interest in his line. Mr. Stewart promises to call at the World office while in New York. We'll be glad to see you, Mr. Stewart.

About People Film Men Know.

J. M. Robb and Son, of San Angelo and Big Springs, were in town last week making their fall bookings. While there they purchased a $7,500 American Photoplayer, which they will use in their San Angelo house.

T. C. (Tommy) Clauson of Longview was a Dallas visitor last week. Mr. Clauson is looking fine and said business was great. He is using big features in his theater and expects to use two days of Interstate vaudeville, commencing at an early date.

A. G. Leaves, the modest roadman of the serial department of the Mutual, was in town last week and while here separated himself from some dough, receiving in lieu thereof one Buick roadster, which he expects to use in making his territory.

A. W. Lillie, an old timer from North Texas, was in town. He said his two theaters were doing good business and he was merely here mapping out his fall bookings and getting ready his campaign for the winter.

When Al Raymond returned recently from a two weeks' trip for the World Film, he brought thirteen contracts accompanied by deposits. This is some record for two weeks' work, however. Mr. Raymond says he believes this is an unlucky number.

Mr. Hervery, an exhibitor from El Paso, was a visitor.

D. L. Cornelius, the assistant general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company of Louisiana, with headquarters at Shreveport and shows at Monroe, Alexandria, Texarkana, etc., was in Dallas for a few days renewing acquaintances and looking over the situation.

J. C. Cox, recently sales manager of the Marquette Piano Company of Chicago, is now the field manager of the American Photoplayer, with headquarters in San Francisco. Mr. Cox will be in the Dallas territory for some weeks, and Lou Abrams, president of the Sales Company of this firm, is also a Dallas visitor.

Louie Morris, of Jacksonville, Tex., who runs the Park and Johns theaters there, was a Dallas visitor this week, having driven the 200 miles in his Oakland roadster.

C. B. Peterson, cashier of the Consolidated Film, left Saturday for a two weeks' vacation. "Pete" says he thinks he would have had a better time staying in Dallas loafing and watching the other fellows work these hot days.

P. C. Crown of the Crown theater of Houston, Tex., passed through Dallas recently on his way to the Panhandle, where he will visit his Childress theater. Mr. Crown reports all his theaters are doing good business, notwithstanding the hot weather.

SPOKANE NEWS ITEMS.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane Correspondent.

Film Man Runs for Congress.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Word reached the city several days ago that William Cutts, formerly general manager of the Liberty Amusement company of this city, and both previous to that and afterwards manager of the American theater, Butte, Mont., is now running for Congressman-at-large on the Democratic ticket. He severed his connections with the Montana Amusement company some weeks ago and became associated with the Wilson Park Land Company of Butte. Mr. Cutts built the Liberty theater in Spokane.

Among Spokane Exchanges.

E. L. Hawk of Garfield, Wash., purchased of R. B. Smith of Deer Park, Wash., the Arcadia theater.

Fred Somner, representing the New York office of the Pathe exchange, spent a few days in this city on a business trip.

San Francisco Briefs.

Claude Langley, directing manager and treasurer of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, is back from a vacation spent at Capitola. The fish supply there is said to have suffered heavily.

A splendid marquee and electric sign has been placed in front of the Market Street theater by the new owners.

Contracts have been awarded for the interior decoration of the Haight Street theater at Haight and Cole streets, and this house will shortly be reopened.

Edward H. Kemp, who handles the Motiograph machine in this territory, has returned from a picture-taking trip into the cliff-dwelling country of New Mexico and Colorado.

California News.

Mill Valley, Cal.—The Hub theater has been sold by A. C. Papst to George H. Cook, and arrangements have been made to show a Paramount program four days a week.

Berkeley, Cal.—Miss Hazel Mehrten, daughter of C. L. Mehrten of the Varsity theater and treasurer of the California State Exhibitors' League, was married recently to Mr. Charles Anthony.

Grass Valley, Cal.—A. L. Stoutenburg has purchased the equipment of the Pavilion theater recently closed by Perronet & Tremewan.

Napa, Cal.—The Empire theater has been purchased from Dave Solari by Alois Fischer.

San Bruno, Cal.—An interest has been purchased in the Novelty theater by M. J. Pedros, and he is now conducting the house in partnership with G. Ricci.

Redding, Cal.—Anderson & Wood, who conduct the Broadway and Majestic theaters at Chico, have leased the new house being erected at Redding, and will open it as soon as it can be completed. The new theater will seat about 900.

Can Sacramento Censor Ban Film?

Turner & Dahnken Circuit Throws Down Gauntlet to City Censor Who Put Ban on "Twilight Sleep" Before Seeing It—Has Engaged Services of Competent Lawyer and Will Attempt to Show Picture Whether or No.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, California.

SACRAMENTO, Cal.—The fight against the censorship of moving pictures, which has been waged spasmodically for some time in the leading cities of the state, and which promised to be given a rest following the substantial victory won at San Francisco by exhibitors, has broken out at Sacramento and has reached a stage where the courts will be asked to decide just what authority the City Censor has under the charter to regulate the showing of films. The Turner & Dahnken Circuit recently booked the educational attraction "Twilight Sleep" for its house in that city, after having shown it at various of its other theaters, but, following the first public announcement of the fact, Commissioner of Education E. J. Carraghar, who is also censor of moving pictures, advised that he would not permit it to be shown, claiming that it was immoral. When asked if he had seen the picture, he acknowledged that he had not, and that furthermore he did not wish to view it.

The management of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit then decided to make a legal test of the commissioner's power and engaged the services of Judge Charles E. McLaughlin, an able attorney of that city. The censor was again invited to view the film, but refused, taking the stand that if he viewed one film he condemned he would be called upon to inspect dozens of others. However, when the fact was impressed upon him that the matter was to be taken into court, he listened to the advice of Judge McLaughlin and reviewed the production, but refused to allow it to be shown at the T. & D. theater.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has the production booked for presentation on August 27 and announces that it will positively be shown, the attorney having advised that there is no ordinance in effect at Sacramento giving Commissioner of Education Carraghar authority to censor pictures. The censor, however, claims that he is given authority under section 51 of article 3 of the city charter. This provides that the city of Sacramento shall have power "to license, regulate, restrain or prohibit all exhibitions, public shows, games and amusements." In order to make his position more secure, Commissioner of Education Carraghar has had the City Commission pass a resolution calling upon the Chief of Police to see that "Twilight Sleep" is not displayed in Sacramento.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit is having no assistance from the other exhibitors in Sacramento in making this fight, but is having the active co-operation of H. J. Gosliner and associates of San Francisco, who hold the California rights to this production. The local T. & D. theater is in charge of M. Naify, formerly of Atlantic City, N. J., but at the time the trouble over the showing of the film broke out was under the management of A. E. Northey, since transferred to Berkeley.

Metro Stars Visit San Francisco.

San Francisco, Cal.—May Allison and Harold Lockwood, well-known Metro stars, were recently here in company with Director Henry Otto and took part in some interesting work around San Francisco Bay. This was their first visit here and they were delighted with their trip. They have also been working in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe on a production that is to be released in September.

Film Concern Incorporated.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Consolidated Film Corporation has been incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000 by J. F. McCarthy, B. Coleman and G. A. Ragan.

Pastime Theater Closed.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Pastime theater on Market street, near Fourth, has been closed, and the work of tearing down the building in which it was located has commenced in earnest. This is the site that is to be occupied by the magnificent new house to be conducted under the management of Eugene Roth.

Klopot Spends Week in Hospital.

San Francisco, Cal.—Charles Klopot, who recently opened a film exchange on Golden Gate avenue, has been an unwilling patient at a local hospital on account of an injury to his knee contracted some time ago. Shortly after his arrival in this city from Los Angeles, his knee began to swell and the doctor called in to see him promptly prescribed a week's stay in a hospital. Now that he is out again, plans are being made for the opening of a branch film exchange at Dallas, Tex.

New Musical Concern Enters Field.

San Francisco, Cal.—A new manufacturing concern which plans to furnish moving picture theaters with musical programs has opened headquarters at 585 Mission street under the name of the Magnavox Phono-Player Co. The instrument is phonographic with a sound-intensifying device. George C. Borneman is manager.

Exhibitors Warned to Mind Safety Rules

Some Picture Men Around San Francisco Bay Have Been Carrying Film Without Observing Rules of Bureau of Explosives.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.—The Film Exchange Board of Trade of San Francisco has been notified by H. B. Eyde of the Bureau of Explosives that some of the exhibitors carrying films across the bay on ferry boats have not been observing the safety rules laid down last spring when a compromise was reached on the film transportation question. It is pointed out that some are carrying films in cases that do not bear the yellow caution label and that others have cases with insecure fastenings. The Board of Trade is advising its members to insist upon the proper labeling and fastening of all cases leaving their places of business. It is pointed out that if the rules agreed to last spring are not strictly lived up to there is every reason to expect that the present privilege of carrying films as hand baggage will be revoked.

Exchange Men Get New Ideas.

San Francisco, Cal.—Herman Wobber, manager of the Progressive Film Exchange, and his assistant, J. W. Allen, returned recently from the meeting of Paramount managers and publicity men at Chicago and are commencing already to place into effect some of the new ideas secured there. One of the immediate results of this trip has been the forming of a publicity department and it is the intention to co-operate with exhibitors even more closely than in the past. E. T. Lowman of this office is spending a vacation in the southern part of the state, and will visit many of the studios while there.

Large Outdoor Installation.

San Francisco, Cal.—A Motiograph projection machine was furnished recently by Edward H. Kemp to the interests fighting the Prohibition amendments to the state constitution, and has been installed on an upper floor of the Pacific Building at Fourth and Market streets. From here a picture 50 by 60 feet in size is projected on the wall of the Humboldt Bank building 200 feet away, and this is visible for a long distance on Market street. A 150-ampere arc is used and the picture is very clear, considering the amount of reflected light from the street.

Globe Film Exchange Closed.

San Francisco, Cal.—I. H. Lichtenstein, who has conducted the Globe Film Exchange in the Pantages theater building for the past two years, has closed this and is now devoting his attention to the Western Poster Company, formerly conducted by Davis Bros. and recently taken over by him. He has just returned from a three weeks' trip to Oregon.

Peerless Exchange Expands.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Peerless Film Service, Inc., 100 Golden Gate avenue, of which E. H. Emmick is head, has taken over all of the interests of the Sun Photoplay Company, which recently opened headquarters at this address, and has taken a place in the front rank among the independent buyers of film. A branch office has just been opened at El Paso, Tex., and one is to be opened at an early date at Seattle, Wash. The E. & R. comedies, controlled by this concern, are increasing in popularity, and Manager Emmick shows a waiting list fully five weeks in advance. Harry McIntyre, in charge of the Los Angeles office of the Peerless, reports that the same condition prevails in that territory. A. E. Beck, formerly of the Southern office, has been transferred to San Francisco to fill a position on the road.

Ask Support Against Sunday Law

Portland, Oregon, Independent Retailers' Association Wants Film Men's Co-operation to Repeal Sunday Closing Law—Present Law Exempts Theaters—Is a Motion Picture Show a Theater Under Law of 1890?

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Oregon.

PORTLAND, Ore.—At the regular meeting of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association at the Oregon Hotel August 17, Dan Kelleher, former member of the legislature was one of the guests of honor and spoke on the present status of Sunday closing in Oregon. He said the Tufts bill, providing for Sunday closing of nearly everything, including theaters would not appear on the ballot in November. It seems that this measure failed to take with the people, and when the time came for filing the initiative petitions with the secretary of state, Rev. Tuft's measure did not have sufficient signers to entitle it to a place on the ballot.

Mr. Kelleher stated that the Independent Retailers were now directing their efforts toward repealing the Sunday closing law now on the statute books, and since the failure of the Tufts measure to meet with public approval, the Sunday closing faction is combatting the retailers in their fight for Sunday freedom.

Theaters are specifically exempted from the operation of the Sunday closing law. It effects "any store, shop, grocery, bowling alley, or tippling house, for the purpose of labor or traffic, or any place of amusement," the law being afterwards amended to except theaters, drug stores, et cetera. Mr. Kelleher pointed out, however, that the Supreme Court of Oregon had not as yet construed the word "theater" to embrace a picture show, and said there was not certainty that such a construction would be placed upon it. In some states there is a legal difference between a picture show and a theater.

Mr. Kelleher stated that it was therefore the duty of the picture men to get in line with his organization to fight for the repeal of the present Sunday closing law, showing that it would be a dangerous weapon against the entire motion picture industry if radical reformers came into power.

Other prominent guests at the luncheon were Robert Montgomery and E. S. Coates, of the Fox Film Corporation, Seattle.

Film Supply Co. of Oregon.

Portland, Ore.—The new Universal exchange at Portland, Ore., is without doubt the most pretentious exchange in the city and General Manager G. A. Metzger does not hesitate to say that he considers it the swellest exchange on the Pacific Coast. The building was constructed especially for film exchange purposes and complies with all of the many municipal regulations affecting film exchanges.

New Universal Exchange.

There is a large, airy main office set with posters and pictures. Well finished fixtures and a broad counter separate this room from the poster department. Back of the counter, off to one side, are two large film vaults equipped with automatic lights, large vents and all modern safety appliances. Light and airy inspection and shipping rooms adjoin the vaults. The different rooms are separated by heavy fireproof walls as required by city ordinance. The shipping is all handled from the rear. Manager Metzger has a spacious office just inside the main entrance.

The Film Supply Company's Portland office is a full-fledged exchange, the other Universal exchanges in the Pacific Northwest being branches.

TO EXHIBITORS.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.

Helpfully yours,

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Baker House Enlarges.

Baker, Ore.—J. P. Cotter, of Haish & Cotter, who operate the Orpheum, Grand and Empire theaters, at Baker, Ore., and who control the theatrical situation there, was in Portland recently buying new equipment for the Orpheum, which is being enlarged. The house is being completely overhauled, the roof raised and a new gallery put in. The stage will also be remodeled. The Orpheum is the largest house in Baker.

Exhibitor in Wreck.

Corvallis, Ore.—C. C. Small who has operated two theaters here for several years, was painfully injured reeently when an automobile in which he was riding ran off a high bank. He received a dislocated shoulder and several broken ribs. He was returning from a vacation trip.

Vaudeville and Pictures.

Astoria, Ore.—The four theaters here are all combining vaudeville and pictures, and there is not a straight picture show in town. This condition is due to competition and not to the lessening in popularity of pictures. The managers added pictures to their programs till they could add no more, then commenced with vaudeville. The Star shows Hippodrome acts, the Crystal, Fisher's, and the Sunset and Jewel book their's independently. The average show includes five or six reels of pictures.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Portland, Ore.—The Woodstock theater has been opened by Ingle Bros.

Emmett, Ida.—F. M. Buckman has opened a new theater here, the equipment being furnished by the Service Film Company, of Portland.

Portland, Ore.—Albert Hay Malotte, the organist at the T. & D. theater, has received much favorable mention on his way of handling the theater's new Wurlitzer instrument. Mr. Malotte, who is organist for the T. & D. corporation in San Francisco, is only temporarily in Portland.

Portland, Ore.—O. Wogg is back as road man for the Standard Feature Film Company. Mr. Wogg worked for the Standard people a year ago, and has since been with the Sutton Feature Film Company in Seattle.

Portland, Ore.—The Richmond theater closed after trying it five days.

Portland, Ore.—E. E. Goehler, road man for Pathe, recently returned from his first trip for that company and reports fine success. He covered the eastern part of the territory where he says good crops of wheat insure a successful year for all lines of business.

Portland, Ore.—Among the callers on Film Row were C. A. Metcalf, of San Francisco, Alex Pantages, of the Western Civilization Corp., John Wesely, Scio, Oregon, M. G. Cooley, Silverton, Ore., and A. Singelow, of the Morgan Film Company, Seattle, en route to San Francisco.

Club Women Help in Censorship Fight

Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association Gets Unsolicited Aid in Its Campaign for Fairer Censorship.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association is receiving the unsolicited support of many of the prominent club women of the city, and, the clubs to which they belong, in the campaign for fairer censorship. Mrs. George McMath, president of the Oregon Congress of Mothers, is the latest to come out against Portland's present censorship. She went to Seattle and by authority of her association, investigated the conditions there, and after comparing them with the local situation, stated that the present conditions in Portland were not good for the people nor the picture men, and that the feud was bad for Portland. If the city commissioners hold over the final consideration of the proposed new ordinance for another week, some of the women's clubs are contemplating holding a meeting to discuss the subject.

"Civilization" Opens Well.

Portland, Ore.—The Heilig, Portland's legitimate theater, was comfortably filled on the evening of August 18 by the members of the press and the guests of the management, for the advance showing of "Civilization." The production was put over with a hitch and all present declared it a most wonderful picture. The photoplay was preceeded with a prologue by living actors, who afterwards interpreted the mob scenes back of the curtain, and furnished the chorus essembles at the close of the show. The prologue, the effects and the music were thrilling. A large orchestra directed by Prof. W. R. Boone, furnished the music.

Old Timer Back.

Portland, Ore.—Thomas Maguire, now associated with the Breck Photoplay Supply Company of San Francisco, coast distributors for Simplex machines, was in Portland for a few days and discussed the good old times when he was in the show business here. Mr. Maguire used to shift scenes with George Baker, now one of the city commissioners. The two of them opened the Bakeronian theater in Oregonian building, Mr. Baker soon selling out to Mr. Maguire. The house was a genuine success, and although, but a small store show, the attendance sometimes ran up to 40,000 a month.

"Them was the happy days," says Mr. Maguire.

Local Film Attracts.

Portland, Ore.—Edwin James, manager of the Majestic, turned his house over to "sweet charity" recently, when he showed "Veda the Vampire," a four-reel local production, for the benefit of the Peoples Institute. It was strictly an amateur photoplay, enacted by people whose names appear frequently in the society columns of Portland's papers. Barbara Bartlett was credited with the most clever acting in the piece. The photography by W. A. Van Scoy, local cameraman for Pathe, was excellent.

Wisconsin Film Notes

Changes Among Theaters and Managers.

WASHBURN, Wis.—Competition has been ended by the consolidation of the two local shows. Mrs. N. E. LaForce, owner of the Happy Hour theater, has purchased the Star theater from Murphy Bros. She will close the Happy Hour, as the Star is better equipped for handling the consolidated photoplay business. Mrs. LaForce will use what brands of films are favored by a voting contest. The various services will be tried before patrons are asked to cast a ballot.

Eau Claire, Wis.—W. R. and B. L. Hiller, who sold their interest in the Unique and Lyric theaters to the Eau Claire Theater Company, plan to engage in the states right business, with headquarters probably at Minneapolis.

Sheboygan, Wis.—Under the name of the Aurora theater, the old Pastime theater at 1012 Michigan avenue has been opened by Jac. O. Schmidt.

Fond du Lac, Wis.—Henry Boyle has secured full control of the Henry Boyle theater.

Madison, Wis.—The Varsity and Pastime theaters are now under the management of the Fuller theater. The Varsity will use Paramount repeaters Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday; Triangle service Monday and Saturday, and a mixed program on Sunday.

Balsam Lake, Wis.—G. W. Thompson has sold his moving picture theater to William J. Strehl and R. O. Pepper.

Iola, Wis.—E. H. Parks has opened a moving picture theater here.

Waukesha, Wis.—Higgie Washnawski of Milwaukee has opened the Park theater on Broadway and will operate it as a moving picture theater. A policy of co-operation with the Juneau theater at Milwaukee is planned.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The new moving picture theater which Mrs. F. Russell is erecting at Thirty-eighth and Vliet streets is expected to open about October 1. It will be 40 by 120 feet and will seat 750.

Milwaukee, Wis.—O. L. Meister's new moving picture theater on Third street near Grand avenue will be known as the Whitehouse. No piles will be used in the foundation, as the site is slightly marshy; a concrete bed will cover the whole site, 50 by 150. The structure will be six stories, of brick and steel.

Mineral Point, Wis.—The World theater has been enlarged and remodeled.

Green Bay, Wis.—Burke & Christensen of this city are the proprietors of the Open Air Dome Company which has been showing pictures here for several weeks. They have put the show on the road starting with West De Pere and Kaukauna. Shows are given free, film advertising being mixed with the features.

Menomonie, Wis.—That the Menomonie boys down on the border might have smokes and other luxuries, the Grand theater gave up one-half of its gross receipts one night.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Camp Hughes Theater Burns.

Winnipeg, Man.—Camp Hughes, the great military camp of the Manitoba military battalions, situated a few miles from Winnipeg, was on the evening of August 10 the scene of a theater fire which narrowly missed having very serious results.

At 8:15 p. m., when the great barn-like Strand theater, seating 1,700, was filled to capacity, a ragged piece of film buckled in the projection machine and caught fire. The puff of flame which immediately filled the operating room severely burned the operator (a soldier) about the hands and body and literally burned the coat off his back.

The loss on the theater, which is owned by L. F. Allardt, of Chicago, is covered by insurance.

Poor Outlook for Admission Raise

Vancouver Picture Exhibitors See Little Hope of Increase in Prices with Big Time Vaudeville at Ten Cents in Competition.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver, B. C.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—Although there have been persistent rumors that the Orpheum theater, the local house owned by the Meyerfeld & Beck interests, would soon switch from its picture policy to the regular Orpheum Circuit big-time vaudeville, it was not until August 12 that Manager James Pilling was able to make this definite. The return to the vaudeville policy takes place on September 18, and between the present time and that date local picture men will probably spend considerable time in trying to figure out the possible effect that this move will have on their business.

There has beeen a feeling for some time that if the Orpheum gave up its picture policy the way would be open for a raise to 25 cents in the film theaters, and that a concerted move would be made in that direction by the remaining first-class houses. Mr. Pilling has consistently refused to join in such a movement, as he has thought that under present conditions a raise in price would simply mean cutting down attendance. However, an unofficial statement that the Orpheum's vaudeville prices would range from 75 cents down to 10 cents has given the picture men an entirely different idea of the situation, and the opinion has even been expressed that the exclusively picture houses might even have to reduce their admission price to 10 cents in some cases, to meet the new competition.

Wants V-L-S-E Back.

Vancouver, B. C.—The World man has lately been receiving each week a copy of Tom North's "V-L-S-E Pals," and has gotten a great deal of enjoyment and information out of this live little magazine. If V-L-S-E would only return to western Canada, now——

John Hazza Back from Long Trip.

Edmonton, Alberta.—John Hazza, general manager of the Empress theater, running Triangle and Fox features, and of the Bijou, using pictures and musical comedy stock, has returned to Edmonton after his recent trip through the Pacific Northwest, and has a force of painters and decorators at work on the interior of the Bijou, preparatory to reopening on August 21.

F. S. Howard's Sheet Liked.

Vancouver, B. C.—The new, and as yet unnamed, house organ of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Canadian distributors of the Paramount program, has made its appearance in this city, and has attracted a great deal of favorable comment. F. S. Howard, in charge of the publication, has produced an interesting little paper, containing not only publicity matter dealing with the subjects handled by the Famous Players, but also giving a great many local items from all over the Dominion. That's the stuff to keep up the interest. Our best wishes to the new enterprise.

Daylight Law a Nuisance.

Winnipeg, Man.—A deputation of moving picture theater managers here recently petitioned the council to repeal the "daylight saving by-law" lately put in force in this city, as they stated that the measure was causing them serious loss.

Charles D. Morgan, president of the Manitoba Theater Association, informed the council that the receipts of all the theaters in Winnipeg had been going down hill at a great rate since May 1. The association felt, he said, that this condition was to a great extent due to the daylight saving law, and that if it was to be put to a vote at the present time it would be repealed immediately. Mr. Morgan pointed out that the public greatly objects to going into theaters while it is still broad daylight and warm, not seeming to realize that neither condition existed inside the theaters.

After a short discussion by the council, the matter was allowed to drop, without any action being taken.

Darwin Wood Goes to the Front.

Vancouver, B. C.—Darwin Wood, organist and pianist at the Colonial theater, has just received a commission as Sergeant-Major with the Canadian Engineers recruiting at North Vancouver, and has departed for Ottawa with a detachment en route to the front. Mr. Wood will be chief electrician of the battalion, as well as despatch rider, and the World man has noticed him on several occasions recently tuning up his motorcycle, which now bears the magic letters, "O. H. M. S."

Good luck, Professor.

Francis Holley in Alberta.

Edmonton, Alberta.—Francis Holley, director of the Bureau of Economics, Washington, D. C., has reached this city in the course of a tour of Canada, in search of further subjects to be added to the great collection of educational films owned by the bureau and dealing with conditions in various sections of the globe, manufacturing processes and commercial activities, and a vast number of other branches of human endeavor. Mr. Holley hopes to be able to secure in this province a collection of films showing the raising of sheep and hogs, their further adventures in local packing houses, and so on until they finally make their appearance as gloves, shoes and other articles of commerce.

Mr. Holley states that his department now has twelve million feet of film to loan, and that the stock is being added to continually.

Sickly Censorship Has Ruled.

Winnipeg, Man.—Phenomenal business was done at the Starland theater on two recent days when Universal's "The Campbells Are Coming" was put on. The Starland, which has stuck to the old 10 cent price, raised to 15 cents for this attraction, and "cleaned up."

Vancouver, B. C.—While reports such as this continue to come from cities all over Canada, British Columbia sits outside the charmed circle and wishes for a sensible censorship. "The Campbells Are Coming" was rejected in this province, in the face of the assertion of the Canadian Minister of Militia that "every man, woman and child in Canada should see this picture."

Vancouver, B. C.—I. Soskin, special representative of the Famous Players Film Service, took a trip recently through the Crow's Nest country and on to Calgary, later returning again to Vancouver. He brought with him a copy of the official British pictures called "With the Forces in Flanders," and these were run off one evening after the regular performance at the Globe theater.

Vancouver, B. C.—W. P. Nichols, managing director of the National Amusement Company, announces that he has signed with Manager Meagher of the General's local office for first run on "The Strange Case of Mary Page" in four cities in British Columbia. This production will be run at the Columbia in Vancouver, the Columbia in Victoria, the Empire in North Vancouver and the Bijou in Nanaimo, starting about the end of September.

Indianapolis' Circle to Open

August 31 Set for Opening of Hoosier Metropolis' Big Theater Facing Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument—Some Interesting Details of Its Decoration—Mark Gates Has Been Chosen to Manage It.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—All eyes in local motion picturedom will be focused August 31 on the opening of the Circle theater, that magnificent structure facing the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument that has been built at a cost of approximately $225,000. It will be the largest motion picture theater in the Middle West, its seating capacity being 3,100. Only one performance will be given on the opening date, the first audience to be given an hour or more to inspect the house. The illumination is in three colors, any one of which can be used independent of the other, and the color effects can be operated from the stage or from the operator's booth in the front of the building.

A large organ has been set up in a cozy little niche to the left of the balcony. The stage will be arrayed in Italian pergola style, the screen for the pictures rising from underneath the floor.

Eighteen hundred yards of carpet will be spread on the main floors, in the foyers and on the stairways. The seats are roomy and well spaced. A large aisle divides the three main aisles on the lower floor, thus making it possible for a large crowd to leave the theater quickly. One of the chief features is the lounging room, an apartment intended to serve as a public clubroom, where people of the city may meet their friends by appointment.

Mark Gates, who last season was treasurer of the Murat theater, will be the manager of the new house. Mr. Gates says the Circle will operate its own billboard system, the stands of which will be on a highly decorative order. Instead of the customary posters, hand-painted inscriptions will be placed on the boards, the announcements changing each week. H. P. Stothart, of New York, musical director for Hammerstein's "High Jinks" and "Katinka" companies last season, will be the director of the orchestra in the new theater.

Handsome Decorative Design.

Clifton A. Wheeler, an instructor in the John Herron Art Institute and a leader among the younger Indiana artists, is painting a handsome decorative design on cement plaster on the front of the building. Mr. Wheeler says the design when completed will withstand the effects of full sunshine, the rain, the frosts and the city's smoke.

The space for the large design is oblong, seventeen feet wide and ten feet high. In bas-relief above is a frieze of figures in Grecian style, showing dancers, players of the pipe and others. Similar figures in small size and low relief are a feature of the beautifully and harmoniously decorated interior of the theater. In his large decorative painting, the artist, Mr. Wheeler, has drawn figures like these in general character and action. The design, as a whole, is in broad and simple effects. There is a background of hill with temple and sky, with somewhat conventionalized masses of trees, presumably poplars, at either side. From the left one dancer approaches two dancers who come from the right. Behind the dancers from the right is the player of a classic pipe, and there are two classically garbed onlookers in the right background. The figures of the girl dancers are about life size.

The tints of the cement coating used by Wheeler in his painting are white, gray and tan, and to increase the range of effects he has used powdered colors. Grays, greens and blues predominate throughout the color scheme.

Mr. Wheeler almost had the work completed when members of the local union of the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paper Hangers of America called on the owners of the building and demanded that if Wheeler did not join the organization or did not stop his work at once they would immediately order all union men in the building to stop work. Wheeler said he told the men that he was a mural decorator and heretofore had never been asked to join a union. He added that he was not in competition with any other mural decorator when he was asked to paint the design. Mr. A. L. Block, president of the Circle Theater Company, said he did not wish to have any trouble with any of the union men and deemed it advisable that Wheeler cease his work until the case can be decided.

New Theater in Richmond.

Richmond, Ind.—A new theater, to be known as the Washington, will be opened in Richmond within the next few weeks. The men who are back of the project are Dr. Charles E. Duffin, H. H. Englebert and Clarence Finney. Roy Parks, who recently severed his connections with the Arcade theater, probably will manage the new house.

N. W. Bryant Buys Yale Theater.

Princeton, Ind.—William Lightner, who for several years has operated the Yale moving picture theater on the north side of the public square, has sold it to N. W. Bryant, of this city. Mr. Bryant, who has had ten years' experience in the motion picture theater business, came to Princeton a few months ago from Rockport, Ind., where he had operated a theater. He expects to make several improvements in the new house.

C. E. Hoffman Heads Arcade.

Richmond, Ind.—C. E. Hoffman, manager of the Theatorium, has assumed charge of the Arcade theater, succeeding Roy Parks, the former manager. A full-sized orchestra under the direction of Claud Miller will be added to the usual evening attractions. Since taking over the Theatorium, Mr. Hoffman has greatly improved that motion picture house, and he announces that he intends to continue his progressive policies at the Arcade.

Strand Opens Labor Day.

Indianapolis, Ind.—The Strand theater, formerly known as the Park theater, at Capitol avenue and West Washington street, will open Labor Day, September 4, with International Circuit attractions, including high-class vaudeville and motion pictures. The theater will be managed by Phillip Brown, now manager of the Lyric, and the name will be changed again to the Park theater. The theater is now controlled by Schaeffer Ziegler.

Indianapolis, Ind.—A new ventilating system has been installed in the Regent theater, and the place is now known as one of the coolest photoplay houses in the city. The management has received many compliments as a result of the cooling effects of the new system.

Every Row of Seats Flanked by Aisle

Sioux City, Iowa, Exhibitor Plans New House to Cost About $50,000—Will Have Well Planned Seat Arrangement.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

SIOUX CITY, Ia.—Every row of seats will be flanked by an aisle, if plans of Leon Weil for a new theater here are carried out. This plan of having two seats together so that patrons could arrive and depart without disturbing others would be an innovation in Middle West seating arrangement. The owners of the Royal and Strand theaters are making an effort to secure a third house in Sioux City. Tentative plans call for a structure costing between $50,000 and $75,000. It will use pictures and vaudeville at an admission of 5 and 10 cents. The name of Nate Block of St. Joseph, Mo., who is associated with Louis Weil in the local houses, is connected with the project.

New Houses and Managerial Changes.

Clarence, Ia.—Mayor Bittner contemplates the erection of a building on Front street a part of which will be leased by Manager Collins for a moving picture theater.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—Paul Schroeder, former manager of the Nicholas theater in this city, is now manager of the Crystal vaudeville and moving picture theater in St. Joseph, Mo.

Waterloo, Ia.—The Plaza theater, which was closed for a week for redecoration, reopened with "The Captive God."

Burlington, Ia.—The Garrick theater planned to reopen September 11 under the management of J. Henri Fisher, using four acts of vaudeville and two reels of pictures.

Armstrong, Ia.—E. J. Daries is now manager of the Armstrong Opera House, having severed connections with the Gem theater.

Earlville, Ia.—A. H. Bennett has purchased the interest in the Nemo Theater Company.

Shannon City, Ia.—Willis Oakes is now proprietor of the Star theater.

Keswick, Ia.—Bruce Jones has been making arrangements to open a moving picture theater here.

Wellman, Ia.—L. L. Shroder has sold his interest in the Majestic theater to his brother, F. C. Shroder.

Maquoketa, Ia.—The Pastime theater, replacing the structure which was destroyed by fire December 4, was opened by Manager Weber with the Paramount feature "Still Waters."

Mason City, Ia.—The Cecil theater opened its season of road shows and big feature pictures with the Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle film "The Whirl of Life."

Dubuque, Ia.—A motion picture projector is a part of the equipment of the new Y. M. C. A. building which will be opened in October.

Items Caught in Passing.

Manchester, Ia.—The projection of the famous Vitagraph film "The Battle Cry of Peace" onto a screen in front of the grand stand will be a night feature at the three-day jubilee held here September 6, 7 and 8 at the Delaware County Fair Grounds.

Eddyville, Ia.—Sunday moving picture shows have been started here.

Grinnell, Ia.—Crutchfield & Sears of the Colonial theater have booked "The Birth of a Nation" for a return engagement for the week of the County Fair to be held here.

Nebraska Notes.

Omaha, Neb.—"Ramona" begins a two weeks' run at the Brandeis theater September 24.

Bartley, Neb.—The Opera House is now under the management of Peter N. Ledou of Yuma, Colo.

Edgar, Neb.—The Opera House here has been leased to M. Johnson.

BIOGRAPH.

IOLA'S PROMISE (Relssue—Sept. 4).—The cast: The Indian girl (Mary Pickford); the white girl (Dorothy Bernard); her sweetheart (Alfred Paget); her father (Charles H. Mailes).

Iola, the little Indian girl, is held captive by a gang of cutthroats, from whose clutches and abuse she is rescued by Jack Harker, a prospector. She is truly grateful to Jack, for she regards him as something different from the white people she has seen. Jack's sweetheart and her father are parties of a wagon-train headed for his place, and, as luck has been against him, he is somewhat gloomy.

Iola learns the reason, and promises to help him find gold. He is amused at this, and says "Will you?" "Yes," "Cross your heart?" This cross-your-heart action mystifies the little Indian. She thinks it is a sort of a tribe insignia and tells her people that "Cross-heart" people are all right. Ioln surely pays her debt of gratitude, not only in finding gold, but in giving her life to protect Jack's sweetheart from her own people, who are embittered against all whites.

KALEM.

HAM'S STRATEGY (Aug. 15).—The cast: —Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); The town flirt (Ethel Teare); Sambo (A. Edmondson).

Ham and Bud fall victims to the shy glances of the village flirt, but as Ham is six feet two, and Bud scarcely four feet, the victor may be readily seen. Ham makes a mistake, however, when he listens to Ethel's pleading to buy Sambo's donkey and cart and take her for a ride. For neither dynamite, fire nor gasolene will move the donkey. Ham's efforts bring one mishap after another, but by the use of strategy he finally gets started.

Bud, jealous, has donned a mask and out on the country road stages a hold-up. "The money isn't mine," says Ham, "shoot a few holes in the coat so the boss will think I fought." Bud shoots. "Shoot some more," says Ham. "I haven't any bullets left," Bud replies, and a second later finds himself in a heap by the wayside. A hypodermic needle is needed to start Mr. Donkey this time, but when he starts he goes a mile a minute. His energy gives out as he arrives at the railroad tracks, but Ham and Ethel, blissfully embraced, care little. And along comes the Frisco Limited bearing down on the cart at sixty miles an hour——.

THE TURQUOISE MINE CONSPIRACY (Episode No. 2 of "The Girl From Frisco"—Two Parts—Aug. 16).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); Congressman John Wallace (True Boardman); "Sidewinder Steve" (Jack MacDonald); "Dry Wash" Sexton (Ronald Bradbury); Ace Brent (Frank Jonassou); "Lonney" Smith (B. Furey); Meyers (William Parsons). Directed by James W. Horne.

"Sidewinder Steve" returns to civilization to find that his ore specimens show he has discovered a turquoise mine. He wires his friend, Ace Brent, the capitalist, who has a half interest in his discoveries, to furnish him with money to make the trip back across the desert to officially stake his claim. But "Lonney" Smith, telegraph operator at the town and secret spy for The Syndicate, Brent's rivals, informs his employers of the new "strike," and they dispatch their agent Meyers to thwart Brent.

The latter, recovering from injuries received in a previous encounter with sheep herders, consents to allow Barbara to handle the affair. Her admirer, John Wallace, follows her to the desert town, fearing for her safety. The action then develops into a thrilling three-cornered race across the desert between Barbara and John, Lonney and Meyers, and a gang of local adventurers headed by "Dry Wash" Sexton, proprietor of the "saloon and hotel." Against the vivid background of the desert events happen that try men's souls and furnish many a gripping, heart-quickening moment before Barbara and Wallace finally emerge victorious.

HE WROTE POETRY? (Aug. 18).—The cast: Marion Martin (Ivy Close); Ned Billings (Robert Ellis); the poet (Henry Murdoch); Pop Martin (William McKey); Jed Billings (C. D. Peruchi); the poet's landlady (Mary Taylor-Ross). Directed by Robert Ellis.

Concobville has two newspapers. Jed and Pop, the two owners, are deadly rivals, but Marion and Jack, the respective star reporters, are lively lovers. A would-be poet enters the plot and brings on the train of laughable incidents that are used by the lovers to reconcile their parents.

WITH THE AID OF THE WRECKER (No. 13 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Aug. 19).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Greggs, diamond dealer (G. W. Williams); Gentleman Joe (P. S. Pembroke); his accomplice (George Routh). Written by E. W. Matlack; directed by James Davis.

Greggs, returning from abroad with a large consignment of precious stones, thwarts the first attempt of Gentleman Joe and his accomplice to rob him at his hotel, but they follow him aboard the train the next day. When he is alone on the observation platform they attack him, and a struggle ensues in which Greggs is finally thrown to the ground from the speeding train. Helen, riding through the hills in an auto, comes upon him before Joe and his pal can alight from the train. Greggs gives her the diamonds and tells her to speed away and rush help back to take care of his injuries. The thwarted conspirators hold up a following auto and speed after Helen. Rounding a dangerous curve, Helen momentarily glances back, and the next moment her auto is dashed to splinters over an embankment, while she jumps in the nick of time. Apparently at bay, a wrecking train approaching on the bridge above offers a means of eluding her pursuers. She climbs a telegraph pole, and the trainmen, seeing her fanatic signals, swing out the huge derrick and she whirls through the air to the train. Joe and his accomplice, facing capture, jump into their auto and start to flee, but the chain from the derrick descends and hooks under the hood of the auto, swinging it into the air. The trainmen soon descend and make the pair captives.

STAR BOARDERS (Aug. 22).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Mrs. Nubride (Ethel Teare); her hubby (A. Edmondson); the landlady (Myrta Sterling).

Ham, by the use of clever strategy, talks himself into becoming the star boarder at Mrs. Grub's house. Their experiences are a continuous lively succession, but the climax comes when they make arrangements with a second-hand dealer to call at midnight and they will sell him every stick of furniture in the house. Ham and Bud then shoot sleeping gas through the keyholes of all the rooms, after which they deposit the sleepers on the floor and cart away the furniture. Their scheme is thwarted by a sleep walker who had gone up to the roof for his nap. Awakening, his surprise at his plight sends him rolling down the side of the roof and over the edge to the ground. He sees Ham's load of furniture and gives the alarm. A chase starts that is a succession of swift happenings.

THE OIL FIELD PLOT (Episode No. 3 of "The Girl From Frisco"—Two Parts—Aug. 23).—The cast: Barbara Brent (Marin Sais); Congressman John Wallace (True Boardman); Ace Brent (Frank Jonasson); Joyce (Ronald Bradbury); Gus (Edward Clisbee); Bob, the foreman (Hart Oxie). Directed by James W. Horne.

Barbara has taken charge of the work of boring the newest well on her father's oil lands. The Syndicate, thwarted in its plan to control the oil field by Brent's refusal to sell, sends Joyce, its agent, to use underground means. When oil sand shows the successful completion of her work, Barbara joyously sets out for the city to make arrangements with the railroad company for tank cars. Joyce, after bribing a discharged employe to plug the well, hurries to the city and succeeds in having the railroad postpone its answer to Barbara until after the conference with The Syndicate. Barbara learns of the conference, and, by a clever ruse, succeeds in having it overheard by a stenographer and a witness.

Threatened with exposure of their conspiracy, the railroad officers agree to provide the tank cars. At the moment of her triumph Barbara receives a telegram telling of the plugging of the well by Gus, Joyce's henchman. She wires to prepare to use dynamite in "shooting" the well, pending her coming. Meanwhile Wallace, investigating at the mine, has been set upon by Joyce's henchmen and made a prisoner. Barbara, hurrying on horseback to the well, is waylaid by Joyce, but the timely arrival of Wallace, who has succeeded in escaping from his guard, saves her. Joyce's tools have gained in bravado and, as the trio stand in the road a deafening explosion is heard and they turn to see the giant tower above the well crash to the ground. But a second later there is a whirling rush of oil as a gusher shoots in the air—for the conspirators had overreached themselves and by their explosion put the final touch to the preparations made by Barbara's men for "shooting" the well.

THE STOLEN JAIL (Aug. 25).—The cast: Nell (Ivy Close); Jack (Arthur Albertson); Constable Gooseneck (Henry Murdoch); Josh (William McKey); Aunt Mathilda (Mary Taylor-Ross). Written by F. H. Clark and Robert Ellis; directed by Robert Ellis.

As with all true lovers, life with Nell and Jack is just one quarrel after another. Nell, as a half-serious joke, succeeds in having Jack arrested by Constable Gooseneck, and then, womanlike, turns repentant and seeks a means of getting him out. All ordinary methods failing to bring his release from the little country jail, Nell is struck with a sudden scheme. She boards a monster movable derrick, races alongside the jail and picks up the entire structure.

As the jail is tossed about in mid-air with Jack and Gooseneck tumbling helter-skelter, the former succeeds in climbing up the chimney and making his escape. At the water's edge Nell and Jack give the jail a few extra whirls in the air and then drop it plump into the water. The final scene of the whirlwind finish finds Constable Gooseneck crawling to safety through the chimney, while Nell and Jack rush off for the minister to settle their quarrels for all time.

AT DANGER'S CALL (No. 91 of "The Hazards of Helen"—Aug. 26).—The cast: The operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Superintendent Waller (G. A. Williams); Bob, the foreman (P. S. Pembroke); the camp bully (George Routh); Waller's son (Billy Boy). Written by Frank Howard Clark; directed by James Davis.

Helen, discharged by the superintendent without justification, comes to the rescue when a flat car, loaded with dynamite, is tearing to certain destruction down the grade, bearing the mischievous son of the superintendent. She boards her motorcycle and races down the track. The drawbridge is being raised as she reaches it, but without a second's hesitation she speeds across, the motorcycle whirling through the space separating the bridge and tracks. Helen then boards an engine and reaches a railroad trestle before the runaway flat car. Hanging head downward from the trestle by means of a painter's rope, she succeeds in grasping the superintendent's son and swinging him to safety. A second later the flat car, sent on a siding by the railroad men, has struck a box car and exploded with a deafening roar.

VIM.

SIDE-TRACKED (Sept. 7).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Mrs. Runt (Melba Andrews); negro porter (Robin Williamson).

The newlyweds, Mr. and Mrs. Runt, start out on their honeymoon, and through the extreme affability of Plump, a drummer, trouble commences. Longing for a smoke, the bridegroom strolls to the smoker. Here he falls asleep, and the switching during the night of his end of the train leaves him miles away from his little wife. Meantime Plump does all he can to allay her anxiety, eventually escorting her to a hotel and promising to find her missing spouse. Runt manages to start on his return journey. He gets into trouble again with the minions of the law.

Arriving at the hotel, he rushes to his wife's room in time to meet Plump leaving. Jealousy, rage and murder fly through the air, and the innocent drummer makes a hurried exit to the accompaniment of a fusilade of pistol shots. Through the street, up and down fire-escapes they go while the hotel is in an uproar. Fortunately, or otherwise, the pursued one finds his way unseen, as he thinks, into one of the rooms and proceeds to hide himself. Runt, exhausted with his murderous chase, returns to his room and, seeing his loved one in tears, relents and takes wifey in his arms. Plump, cramped in his hiding place and thinking the coast clear, emerges and disturbs the little scene. Once more the dogs are let loose and Runt gets up on his hind legs. Oil is poured on the troubled waters by a double explanation and instead of being carried out in bits Plump is admitted into the bosom of the Runt family.

A BAG OF TROUBLE (Sept. 8).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Mrs. Pokes (Helen Gilmore); Mrs. Jabbs (Mabel Best); Maid (Edna Reynolds).

Even if he were certain that the act would cost him his life, Pokes would take a chance and flirt if a pretty girl happened to pass him. Therefore, it is nothing unusual when Pokes finds a beautiful handbag lying on the street that he should give it to the maid living next door and with whom he carried on a flirtation. Pokes little realized that this bag is one which his wife just purchased but lost on her return home.

Later, however, when he meets Melba in the park, he regrets his hasty action in giving the bag to the maid and returns to gain possession of it. After securing the bag, Pokes meets Jabbs, the pride of the local police force, and terrified Pokes drops the bag and makes a hasty exit. Jabbs decides that the bag is just the thing he needs as a present for his wife in honor of her birthday. When the maid a few hours afterward espies Mrs. Jabbs displaying the bag, she recognizes it as the one which Pokes gave her, and sends him after Mrs. Jabbs to demand an explanation.

Mrs. Pokes, in the meantime, having missed her bag, begins a frantic search for it and forces Jabbs to assist her. Coming upon Pokes and Jabbs struggling for possession of the bag, Mrs. Pokes proves her ownership to it and marches away in triumph, leading the unfortunate Pokes with her. Arriving home, she discovers that by mistake she has taken two bags, and sends Pokes back to the jeweler's with one of them. Pokes really intends to return it safely, but meeting Melba once more, he succumbs to her wiles and gives her the bag. But this time Mrs. Pokes catches him, and the result is anything but favorable to Pokes.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

THE CHALK LINE (Sept. 6).—Mr. and Mrs. Love (Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby), with their young son, are so happy that hubby is usually late for work. The stenographer in Mr. Love's office who is in love with the bookkeeper places a note and handkerchief in Mr. Love's pocket by mistake. Hubby spills some of baby's milk on his coat and when wifey is cleaning it she discovers the note and demands an explanation from hubby, who knows nothing about it. Wifey decides that she must live in the same house with hubby on account of the baby, but apart. She puts a chalk line on everything in the house, even the maid, and tells hubby that the line is to be considered a six foot wall.

A friend of hubby's calls and is much embarrassed when Mrs. Love ignores him when he speaks to her. It is then up to Mr. Love to explain that the chalk line is a six foot wall. The stenographer, in the meantime, is angry because the bookkeeper failed to answer her note and asks for an explanation. She is informed that the note was not in his pocket that it must have been placed in Mr. Love's pocket by mistake. They decide to explain the situation to Mr. Love, and upon calling at the house are confronted by Mrs. Love to whom they explain everything.

Mr. Love is holding baby and feeling a damp chill on his arm he places baby on the floor. Baby gets busy with its little body and rubs out the chalk line. Wifey returns to the room and is pleased to see the chalk line removed. She awakens hubby, who informs her that he did not remove the line. They miss baby and find him looking at them from under a chair and of course, due to the explanation from the stenographer and bookkeeper Mrs. Love apologizes to hubby, who forgives her.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

A DELUDED WIFE (Three Parts—Sept. 8).—Mrs. Ness has championed the cause of Hubert Ranston, a social favorite who has come to her with a letter of commendation from her friends in Paris, the Fraemes. Acting as hostess at a function which she is giving, Mrs. Ness takes pains to introduce Hubert to Mrs. Carroll and her daughter, Edith, and suggests to the mother that if it is not too late Edith had better disregard her engagement with Joe Brooks, a wealthy contractor, who has but little time for society. Edith dances with Hubert and notes how pleasing he is. While the festivity is at its height and while Mrs. Ness is adding some jewels to those she already has on to make her more attractive, she is robbed by an unseen thief. When she realizes the theft, she calls for assistance, and we find Hubert doing everything to assist her and suggests the aid of the police.

Hubert and Edith later see much of each other. Even after her marriage she meets the social favorite clandestinely, much to her mother's annoyance. When Mrs. Carroll finds that Edith will not listen to her argument, she tells Joe and cautions him about his wife's indiscretions. Business calls Joe from town one day and he does not return home until midnight. That day Hubert wrote Edith asking her to accompany him to an evening concert. Home from the affair, Hubert shows the bride his love and asks her to leave her husband for him. She cannot bring herself to this point and asks him to leave her as she is tired. Hubert leaves. After the butler has locked the house, an unknown intruder appears in the bedroom of Edith and picks up her valuable necklace from the dressing table. As Joe enters the house the unseen burglar escapes in the limousine Edith and Hubert are known to have ridden in when they returned from the concert.

Joe finds the car there, demands to know to whom it belongs and, questioning the butler, learns that Hubert and Edith had been out that evening together. Joe awakens his wife to learn if Hubert had been there, and Edith confesses that she had only been to the concert and that Hubert had left the house some time since. Joe is hurt at his wife's indiscretion, but trusts her honor and tells her to wait until morning when he wishes to discuss the matter with her. Next morning Edith finds her necklace has been stolen. She raises the alarm and Joe sends for a detective, who finds finger prints, and a note from Hubert to Edith, asking her to accompany him to the concert. After his inspection of the house the detective interrogates the butler, and from him learns that Hubert was the last person in the house before he locked up for the night.

The detective is suspicious of Hubert. Returning to headquarters he inspects the identification cards, and finds that the finger prints he secured at the Brook's home match those of a noted social gangster whose picture resembles that of Hubert Ranston. After Joe has gone to business Edith, herself suspicious, goes to Hubert's home and questions him as to why he remained there so long and why his car was outside the house when her husband returned home. Hubert tells her his auto was out of order and it took some time to repair it. Then Hubert, making love to Edith, tells her now that she is there in his home that he intends to keep her.

The detective goes for Joe, and then repairs at once for Hubert's home. They are just in time, for Edith has fainted and Hubert is dragging her to a room. Hubert hears the arrival of the auto. Looking out of his window he sees the detective and Joe entering his house. Rushing to a button, he releases a spring and a sliding mantel draws back. Hubert is about to escape when the detective catches him, and during the struggle a half-witted woman comes from a poorly furnished room on the other side of the mantel. After Hubert is manacled, the detective exposes Hubert as one of the notorious criminals of the day, and tells Edith that the woman is his half-witted wife. After the stolen necklace is recovered Hubert is led away to prison and Joe looks comfortingly at his wife, who embraces him. As the picture fades, Edith offers the demented woman her support and takes her with her to a new and different home.

ESSANAY.

THE PACIFIST (Two Parts—Sept. 5).—The cast: Henry Alswell (Harry Dunkinson); his wife (Camille D'Arcy); His son, Clarence (Tommy Harper); Bill Mars (Frank Hamilton); Percival Footease (Edgar Murray).

Henry Alswell's supine nature makes him merely a servant in his own household, and his wife and son hold him in contempt. He even is compelled to arise and serve breakfast for them. At his office, Bill Mars, his partner, holds the same attitude. Peaceful Henry finds his principal delight in writing letters pleading for peace to the "Voice of the People" columns of the newspapers. Willie Mars, like his father is a bully, and picks on the smaller boys at the old swimming hole. Clarence Alswell is their champion. The elder Mars threatens to thrash his son unless he thrashes Clarence Alswell. Henry Alswell sees the fight and hastens to separate them. Mars attacks him. The blood of the pacifist rises and he takes a few wallops at Mars. To his great surprise he vanquishes him. "You're some scrapper, dad," Clarence yelps in delight, and Alswell, a transformed man, swaggers down the street looking for another fight. When he reaches home Percival Footease, a matinee dancer, is sympathizing with his wife on her possession of a weak-willed spouse. The weak-willed spouse hurls Percival into the street. Now the erstwhile hen-pecked Henry Alswell has his breakfast served in bed. All fear him and his son is proud of his fighting father.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL. NO. 15 (Sept. 6).—Canimated Nooz camera men film the pleasures of being incarcerated at Sing Sing, N. Y. The daily rock-pile golf tournament on the prison course is shown in progress. "Lifer" McNutt's record drive is spoiled when No. 968 gets his head in the way. Pink tea is served after the game by the Young Ladies' Anti-Cruelty to Animals Society. Luther Leatherlungs is caught by the camera as he delivers a speech on "Preparedness." Dreamy Dud tries a trip in a submarine and blocks all the traffic on the ocean. Five hundred feet of scenic share the reel.

A MILLION FOR A BABY (Three Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: Daniel Druce (Bryant Washburn); Edna Gallard (Marguerite Clayton); Hugh Gallard (John Lorenz); Sylvia (Lillian Drew).

Hugh Gallard is angry when his millionaire father-in-law dies and leaves Mrs. Gallard with nothing more than an adequate allowance. Daniel Druce, the business manager of the estate, is in charge of the fortune, which is to be settled on an heir. Gallard finds Sylvia and his gambling expensive, and decides to adopt a baby and call it his own, in the hope of getting the fortune by his natural guardianship of the heir. The wife and Druce are rapidly falling in love with each other and for a settlement Gallard offers to get a divorce. His offer spurned, he persuads his wife to consent to the scheme of adopting a baby. So well arranged is the plan that Druce sees no other way of protecting the woman he loves from herself than by converting the entire estate into cash and disappearing with the amount. With Druce away the wife balks on her husband's plan and by personal property gives him $5,000 and consents to a divorce. Druce, aware of the transaction, returns with the fortune and wins the woman he loves.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER (Three Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Mrs. Vantine, alias Kitty Coombs (Eugenie Besserer); Julia, her daughter (Fritzi Brunette); Dr. Edward McElroy (Leo Pierson); Lieut. Will McElroy (Edw. J. Piel); The Fox (Harry Lonsdale). Written by I. K. Friedman. Directed by Wm. Robert Daly.

It was Lieutenant McElroy's extreme devotion to his younger brother, Dr. Edward McElroy, which really provoked the quarrel between the two. When the doctor fell in love with Julia, the fair daughter of the fashionable Mrs. Vantine, whom the Lieutenant identified as "Slick Kitty," a former shoplifter, he deemed it his duty to warn his brother.

The Doctor's faith in Julia, however, was not to be shaken. It persisted despite the fact that his rival the Fox, a confederate in the double life of Mrs. Vantine, had made Julia appear a party to theft in order to save himself from the lieutenant's clutches.

His love stood a test more terrific. The Fox, frantic by jealousy when Julia rewarded the doctor's faith with her hand, resolved to be avenged on mother and daughter. He turned stool-pigeon for the lieutenant, lured the mother into a robbery that she might be caught "with the goods," and he enticed Julia into the house chosen for their robbery in order that she might be discredited in the doctor's eyes.

Fortunately, Julia took the doctor into her confidence, and he arrived at the scene of the robbery in time to save her from the Fox. The Fox, goaded into fury by defeat, drew his revolver to shoot the doctor, but his bullet going wild, brought down the mother.

When Lieutenant McElroy entered the house to put the Fox under arrest for murder, the doctor easily succeeded in convincing his brother that he had made no greater mistake in his professional career than in presuming that like mother, meant like daughter.

TAMING GROUCHY BILL (Sept. 9).—The cast: Tom Merrill (Tom Mix); Mary Harper (Victoria Forde); Grouchy Bill (Pat Chrismnn); Sid Jenkins (Sid Jordan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom Merrill, a cowpuncher, and his pals, after seeing "Grouchy" Bill upbraid his wife, decide upon a plan to tame Bill. Tom takes Mary, Bill's wife, into his confidence, for the purpose to pose as Bill's mother-in-law.

Bill is grouchy from the moment the mother-in-law arrives. When he refuses to carry the grip and follow the orders of mother-in-law, he is overpowered by the muscular woman, and made to obey her will.

Bill goes to the cowboys, and asks them to saddle up the worst bucking horse on the ranch, and he will take his mother-in-law for a ride. Tom, in the role of mother-in-law, rides the horse with ease, and Bill finally comes to understand that his supposed mother-in-law is really Tom Merrill, cowpuncher, and he is thoroughly tamed.

GOLD SEAL.

THE CODE OF THE MOUNTED (Three Parts—Sept. 5).—The cast: Private Thornton (J. W. Kerrigan); Marie Baptiste (Ethel Phillips); Sergeant O'Rourke (Norbert A. Myles); Jean McPherson (Wilma Wilkie); Jacques Baptiste (George E. Marshall); Private Kelly (Buck Connor); Donald McPherson (T. D. Crittenden). Written and produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Thornton was in love with Marie, as was his superior officer, Sergeant O'Rourke. Thornton was the favored one, and O'Rourke, jealous, made his life hard for him. Marie had a brother, Jacques, who, while a good fellow, had a bad habit of gambling. One night while at the saloon on one of his gambling parties, he quarreled with a half-breed. The outcome of the quarrel was that he stabbed the Indian in the back and was forced to flee for his life. But he was seen by Northwest Mounted Police, of which O'Rourke and Thornton were members. O'Rourke thought that if he put Thornton on the case he would not take it on account of his love for Marie, and so would be court-martialed for disobeying orders. He figured rightly, as Thornton was about to refuse to go on the case, when he was argued into it by old Kelly, who said that he had been in the service twenty years, and had yet to refuse to go on a mission.

Thornton captured Jacques, who submitted without a struggle. Marie was bitter against Thornton when she found that he had taken her brother. She went to O'Rourke to see if she could not plead her brother's cause with him. He said that if she would come to the headquarters that night he would see what he could do. That night O'Rourke sent Kelly and Thornton out on line duty to get them out of the way. And late that night when Marie arrived he was all alone in the cabin except for Jacques, who was in the cell adjacent.

When Marie asked what he had decided to do, he said that he would let her brother go if she would pay the price. When she refused he attacked her. In the meanwhile, Jacques' sweetheart had brought him a gun so that he could escape. Thornton, thinking that there was something wrong, had hurried back to the cabin. When he arrived he saw what was happening, and at once attacked the seargeant. Jacques heard the noise, and broke in the door. Perceiving instantly the situation, he fired and killed O'Rourke. He then escaped over the border, and Marie and Thornton were married.

RED FEATHER.

THE NARROW PATH (Five Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Bessie (Violet Mersereau); Her Father (Lenora Von Ottinger); Helen Bentley (Nellie Slattery); Joseph Abrams (Anthony Merlo); Mrs. Latham (Clara Beyers); Shirley Martin (Niles Welch); John Martin (Joseph W. Girard). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Francis J. Grandon.

Bessie, a girl of the slums, is left an orphan. Her father was a drunkard and during one of his periods of intoxication he killed his wife and then, in trying to escape, was himself killed. Bessie is left destitute, so she is invited by a couple of youngsters to come and keep house for them. The two boys earn enough money, selling papers, to keep up the little establishment and Bessie does the housework.

One day as she is playing in the street she is run over by an auto belonging to Mrs. Lathan, a society lady. She is sorry for the girl and comes to see her at the hospital where she is taken. On leaving the hospital Bessie goes to see the wealthy widow, who procures her a position at a modiste's shop.

A couple of months later Bessie goes to a cheap dance hall with a friend and there she is noticed by Abrams, a theatrical agent. He offers her a job as a cabaret dancer and she accepts. While dancing in the cabaret she is noticed by Shirley Martin, a wealthy clubman. He takes an interest in her and says that he will make her a great dancer. He introduces her to a manager and all arrangements are made for the Broadway production. Shirley expects a price for his favors but he is chagrined to find that Bessie is incorruptible.

Bessie's debut as a dancer is a success. Mrs. Latham, who has designs on Shirley's money, is jealous of the attentions he is paying the little dancer. She plans to so compromise her that his love will be cured. Accordingly she invites the two of them on a week-end trip to the country and then, at the last minute, does not go herself. When the two young people arrive at the hotel, they find rooms engaged for Mr. and Mrs. Shirley Martin. When Bessie confesses that she loves him he tries to force his attentions on her, but she repulses him. Then Shirley realizes that he has acted like a cad and when he asks her to marry him the next day she agrees.

Meanwhile Mrs. Latham has written a note to old man Martin saying that Bessie is trying to ruin his son's life and that if he does not want a scandal he had better go at once to the hotel where they are registered as man and wife. Martin hurries down and finds them there the next day.

He accuses Bessie of having designs on Shirley and forbids the marriage. So the girl, thinking that perhaps after all, the marriage would not be for the best, agrees to go away. When Shirley finds out what his father has done he is furious, and says that he will not come home until his father consents to the marriage.

But he cannot find Bessie, as she has left without giving anyone her address except old Martin. But at the Martin house things are going badly. The mother has become ill and the only thing that will save her life, the doctor thinks, is a reunion with her boy. So Mr. Martin hunts up Shirley at the club and persuades him to come home for the sake of his mother, and then he goes to find the girl. Of course the two are reunited and agree to have the long delayed marriage take place at once.

L-KO.

UNHAND ME, VILLAIN (Aug. 9).—The cast: Alice (Alice Howell); Davis Tobasco (Fatty Voss); Joe (Joe Moore).

Alice, a poor, hard-working Newsgirl, has one weakness, and that is her admiration for Joe, the handsome leading man of the Tabasca Stock Company. One day she is abused by a competing newsboy. To escape from him she enters the theater and hides in the leading lady's dressing room. While hiding there she finds that Joe, the leading man, is in love with the leading lady and that they are both planning to rob the manager and make their getaway.

Alice tells the manager of their scheme and so helps him save his money. He is grateful to her and says he will grant her any wish. Her only wish is to be a leading lady. Her wish is granted and she is made a leading lady in a melodramatic show. On the night of her debut one of the stage hands drops a burning match in the snow (on the stage) which starts a fire and incidentally breaks up the show.

CROOKED FROM THE START (Two Parts—Sept. 6).—Through an error a synopsis of this picture was published on page 1146 of the issue for August 12 under the title of "Unhand Me, Villain." A story of "Unhand Me, Villain," is given above and a story of "Crooked from the Start" follows. The cast: Gertie (Gertrude Selby); Bill, the motorcycle cop (Billie Ritchie); Chief Schmalz (Dan Russell).

Bill managed to work his little graft gag quite profitably until he attacked the wrong party. This party was the friend of the commissioner. Commissioner Logan immediately wrote a stinging letter to Chief Schmalz, who, in turn, issued an order forbidding any of his motorcycle cops accepting a bribe under the penalty of being imprisoned in a brewery with a muzzle on for life. Under this category came Bill, and sorely grieved was he to think he would have to work henceforth should he desire any of the luxuries of life. Suddenly an auto shot by him. Here was his chance for revenge, and, giving vent to his feelings, Bill went pell mell after the fair one in the auto. After a long chase he found himself face to face with a most entrancing beauty. Bill almost succumbed to her wiles, but he remembered his duty, so he proceeded to the station with the charming miss.

At the station Bill was informed that the young lady was a friend of the chief's, but Bill had made a hit with her and had no difficulty making an engagement with her for the following evening. The chief stood in with her father, and it was an agreed thing that Gertie must marry Chief Schmalz. Bill, however, was a resourceful sort of fellow, so he and Gertie eloped. Bill, in his haste, had confiscated a flivver and the owner immediately reported its loss to the chief, who ordered an immediate search.

These flivvers are liable to turn one queer trick, and this one succeeded in driving Bill to the robber's lair. They lassoed him and tied him to a railroad track. Gertie succeeded in escaping and managed to get a telephone booth where she sent an "S. O. S." call. Of course, Schmalz was determined to shine and once more win Gertie by exhibiting his bravery, so with lightning speed he was on the scene and rescued poor Bill from a horrible death by only a second's time. When the chief discovered whom he had saved there was blood in his eye, but Bill was too quick for him. He made one dash for one of the police flivvers, and with this good start would have managed to get away if the flivver hadn't started to leak. The chief saw his chance for revenge and set fire to the gasoline line which had leaked. The fire soon gained on Bill and blew up the flivver and Bill to the land of dreams.

SONG OF THE WOODS (Sept. 3).—The cast: Leafy (Vola Smith); Joe (G. Raymond Nye); Old Tim Dorman (Marc Robbins); Rosa (Vola Smith); Ralph Lane (Charles Gunn). Written by Olga Printzlau. Produced by Clifford Elfelt.

Leafy is a woodland girl, who lives with her father, Old Jim Dorman. Joe, a young woodsman, is her sweetheart, and old Jim sanctions their love. Then Ralph Lane comes fishing on a vacation, and sets his tent up the stream. One day he spies Leafy splashing in the deep little pool with only her long hair about her and is startled at the sight. He follows her and makes her acquaintance. The attraction between them is mutual, and many secret meetings follow. It finally reaches the stage where she promises to elope with him.

Joe, in the meanwhile, is filled with bitterness. On the night of the elopement he starts out to kill Lane. But this is not necessary, as she realizes what she is doing and comes home before any harm has been done. But Jim is offended and will not see her. Then Old Jim Dorman makes him sit down, and tells him of how, years ago, he once loved and married a young woodland girl. She jilted him, but he still loved and waited for her patiently. One stormy night, a year later, he was startled at a noise and opened the door to find a little bundle on the step. It was a baby.

The following day, after he had crooned the babe to rest, he found his sweetheart in the pool—dead. A rudely constructed little cross on a mound is all that is left, and Jim Dorman takes the two young lovers there and shows them the cross. Here he begs them to love each other and benefit by his sorrowful experience. The lovers kiss and leave him standing by the cross.

THE TRIUMPH OF TRUTH (Two Parts—Sept. 7).—The cast: Clara Bordin (Cleo Madison); Albert Conglin (Tom Chatterton); Gene Vasure (Seymour Zeliff); "Old Pete" (J. F. Abbott). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison.

Clara Bordin, a fisher girl, makes her home with Old Pete, her uncle, a rough and uncouth fisherman. They live in a small fishing village on the coast. Gene Vasure, one of the fishermen, has long desired Clara for his own. The girl, not liking his uncouth ways, puts him off from time to time.

Albert Conglin is looking about for a prospective site suitable to the location of a coaling station. In surveying near Clara's home he sees the girl and is struck by her innocence and beauty. Old Pete, one day, attempts to strike her, but she takes refuge in flight. The old man pursues, but she grabs Gene's boat and hurriedly rows out into the bay. In her excitement she breaks an oar and the boat is driven upon the rocks. Albert sees her peril and rescues her from drowning.

Gene, in order to win favor with the girl, returns to the house after jumping into the bay, and pretends that he rescued her from drowning; she believes him and is very grateful. A year passes—Albert again comes to the seashore. Old Pete is still very cruel to the girl, and after another particularly fierce outburst she again takes refuge in flight. Albert again meets her and their acquaintance is renewed.

Gene sees his chances are "getting slim" and determines to get the stranger out of the way. That evening Gene and some of his companions tie Albert up and set him adrift in a boat. But Clara sees the boat adrift and goes to his rescue. Do they marry and live happily ever afterward? The answer is that this is a moving picture.

THE LAUGH OF SCORN (Sept. 9).—The cast: John Harding (Ben Wilson); Beverly Davis (Chas. Ogle); Dixie Davis, his daughter (Edna Hunter); Steve Perkins (Joseph W. Girard). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Dixie lives in a mountain village with her father. They are ignorant people and cannot even read or write. But all is changed when a new school master arrives from the city. John Harding is an author who is tired of urban life and has come to spend a while teaching school in the mountains.

Dixie falls in love with the new teacher, much to the disgust of her old flame, Steve. She even goes to the extent of attending the school, and here the attraction grows. But all the while Steve is jealous, and several fights take place between him and John over the girl.

At last Steve thinks that he has found a way to prejudice the old man against the rival. He says that John's designs are not honorable. But when he finds that he is mistaken he is still more enraged, and, in an attempt to shoot John, wounds Dixie. But Dixie recovers and, as the picture fades out, the lovers are seen in each other's arms.

POWERS.

MAKING A U. S. SOLDIER (Sept. 7).—This is the complete picturization of the training of the men who form the fighting force of the United States army. First, they are measured and weighed and a photo of each man is taken and put on file.

Then they are put through a series of drills intended to harden them to the rigor of military drill. This consists of the setting up exercises and the famous "butts" manual which is guaranteed to exercise every muscle in the body.

Then comes the real training. The rookies are taught how to shoot and ride and then how to shoot from horseback. And then some of the fun is shown. The men have athletic contests which are as fiercely contested as are any college games. The finished product is the epitome of efficiency and fine condition, the Army of the U. S. A.

JOKER.

THE DEACON STOPS THE SHOW (Sept. 9).—The cast: Miss Crobar (Gale Henry); the Deacon (Wm. Franey); Mazie (Lillian Peacock); manager (Milburn Morantl); sheriff (Chas. Conklin). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Allen Curtis.

The members of the Anti-Sin League are in conference and are being addressed by Miss Crobar, who exhibits posters advertising a burlesque show. It is decided that the members will view the matinee performance and decide whether the show can be presented to the general public or not.

Accordingly they engage a box and view the show with varied emotions; the manager is tipped off that their fate rests with the committee and Maizie, the dancer, directs her efforts in the direction of the box—and much to the elation of the Deacon. He, however, is dragged off by the others to get the sheriff, but manages to elude them and return to the box, where, a few minutes later, he receives a note from Maizie to call at her dressing room.

To show that he is a sport, the deacon sallies forth to procure something cool and refreshing and is seen with the tell-tale evidence returning to the stage entrance. The Sheriff finally decides that he will go on and rescue the deacon and close the show—and so he departs.

But he is gone so long that the committee decide to investigate for themselves—and discover the Deacon and the Sheriff enjoying themselves with the chorus girls.

LAEMMLE.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL JUSTICE (July 6).—The cast: District Attorney (T. D. Crittenden); his wife (Jessie Arnold); John Moreland (J. F. Conolly); his wife (Irene Hunt). Scenario by Calder Johnstone. Produced by Fred Kelsey.

The Judge, one evening, was discussing a newspaper article with his wife, relating to the unwritten law. Some little time later this same case is brought before him: Moreland and his wife were not happy and the inevitable has followed—the other man won the love of the neglected wife. When Moreland found out, he killed him.

Mrs. Moreland calls upon the Judge in an endeavor to persuade him to be lenient with her husband, as she feels that she is to blame, but the Judge is adamant and will give her no hope. As she is leaving the house she encounters the Judge's wife, who promises to help.

When the Judge retires he finds a note informing him that his wife has gone to the man she loves. The Judge is stunned and seeks the wrecker of his happiness, and is confronted by his wife as he is upon the point of killing "the other man."

His wife tells him that she has done this in an endeavor to make him realize that Moreland did no more than any other man would have done under similar circumstances. This convinces the judge and he agrees to be lenient.

VICTOR.

HE BECAME A REGULAR FELLOW (Sept. 7).—The cast: Mr. Bean (Ed. Sedgwick); Mrs. Bean (Mrs. Lydia Titus); J. Percival Bean (Pat Rooney); Trixie (Jessie Arnold); Hodgkins (Ed. Clark); Clark ("Kewpie" Morgan). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Roy Clements.

J. Percival Bean was a sissy. But Mr. Bean was so thoroughly disgusted with the effeminate ways of his son that at last in desperation he managed to have him sent to college. Of course, the college boys made life miserable for him. He wrote his grievances home to mother, but father intercepted the letter and answered for mother, advising him to stick it out and Percival did. And then came Trixie, one of the "ponies" in the theater.

One day she asked him for a picture of his mother and, wonderingly, he gave it to her. Then she had a plan—every night dressed like his mother and made up to look like her, she called for Percival, and the principal of course had to let him go; and when he returned home in the wee small hours it was in a somewhat intoxicated condition. At last the principal notified Mr. Bean. Mr. Bean discovered the true situation and was delighted. He arranged to have the pair marry, so Percy at last was made a real man.

LOVE'S BOOMERANG (Sept. 5).—The cast: John Smith (O. C. Jackson); his daughter (Yvette Mitchell); Harry (Harry Depp); Jim (Ernie Shields); Jack (Hal Cooley). Written by Harry Wulze. Produced by P. C. Hartigan.

John Smith's daughter has many admirers, but Harry is the favored one—most likely because he is not in favor with father. He is ordered from the house, but before he can make his departure two other admirers call. He hides upstairs, awaiting their departure, and he is in a quandary when Smith comes in.

Smith is having troubles of his own—his housekeeper would share his name and fortune, but he is not to be so easily ensnared. He dismisses her and is on the lookout for another. His daughter and Harry are aware of this state of affairs and start "framing" up the old man.

Harry, impersonating a sweet and charming young girl, applies for the position and is accepted. Ere long Smith is in love and wants the housemaid for his wife. A note is despatched to the former housekeeper and she, heavily veiled, repairs to the minister, where she is made the wife of Smith—much to his chagrin when he discovers what really has happened. Harry has now married the daughter, and with a feeling of elation they start out on their honeymoon.

NESTOR.

THE BOY FROM THE GILDED EAST (Sept. 9).—The cast: Boy (Eddie Lyons); Betty (Priscilla Dean); Dare (Lee Moran). Written by Jas. Dayton. Produced by L. W. Chaudet.

Following the old advice, "Go West, young man," the boy who was formerly a soda dispenser goes West to seek a gold mine. In the town of Red Dog lives Betty. She owns and runs the Long Horn saloon, and her chief admirer is Dick Dare, the gambling sheriff. About this time Two Gun Harry has escaped jail and is holding up stage coaches all over the county. When the boy first enters the saloon with two big guns protruding from his pocket, the cowboys think he is dangerous.

He leaves the saloon after his lemonade and strolls down the road. He rolls a cigarette and, while searching for a match, the stage coach drives up. The boy says "Stop" as he intends to get a match. The passengers, thinking the boy is Two Gun Harry, shell out, and the stage dashes into the town to report. The Sheriff and posse start out for the bandit.

The boy, meanwhile, takes a short cut, and, coming back to the saloon, he tells the girl of the strange people who gave him all these things. She hides him in her cabin and when the Sheriff and posse trail him there, she conceals the boy in the loft. All would have been well, but the nervous boy tips over a jug of vinegar. The Sheriff, frightened of the record of Two Gun Harry, calls his posse and they are about to deal out justice to the boy when a messenger comes in with the news that Two Gun Harry was captured in another town. All inquire who he is, and he proudly tells them he is the best soda clerk West of Chicago. The girl engages him for a bartender and all ends well.

IMP.

THE PINNACLE (Two Parts—Sept. 8).—The cast: Wilbur Rallston (Richard Stanton); Nella Raymond (Myrtle Gonzalez); Harmon Feldman (Hayward Mack); Paul Schall (Fred Belasco); Calvert Irvine (Edward Brown). Written by F. McGrew Willis. Produced by Richard Stanton.

Wilbur Rallston, a young lawyer who has a fair practice, is in medium circumstanees. He has as friends, Paul Schall, an artist and Calvert Irvine, a doctor. In the same city is Harris Raymond, president of the city's largest bank. Raymond has one daughter, Nella. At the studio where she is to be painted with Feldman, a wealthy suitor, Nella meets Wilbur and later, after a number of sittings at the studio, they fall in love. Paul is also in love with Nella, but keeps this a secret, except from Irvine. Later Wilbur and Nella are married.

Feldman goes to Paul's studio to have his portrait painted. Nella tells Wilbur that Raymond, her father, is retiring from the bank after a most successful career. By talk like this she urges Wilbur on to make a name for himself and to rise to the pinnacle of his profession. He devotes all his time to business, but with little success. Feldman goes to see his finished portrait and, worried over financial troubles and further angered because the painting does not suit him, he attempts to tear it up. Paul tries to stop him, and in the struggle Feldman strikes Paul a blow, which accidentally kills him. Wilbur oversees this and Feldman tells him that if he will clear him of the crime, he will give him entire charge of his affairs and make him famous. For Nella's sake, Wilbur consents. Feldman is freed of all blame, and, true to his promise, he begins to send Wilbur rich clients. Finally Wilbur reaches the pinnacle of success as a lawyer.

In the meantime, Feldman has been paying attention to Nella. Wilbur and Nella are invited to a reception, but at the last moment Wilbur finds that business prevents his attending, and he suggests that Nella go with Feldman. After the two have gone, Wilbur goes to the office. Coming home shortly before the time for the reception to be over, he finds a letter from the hostess saying that on account of her illness, the reception has been called off. He inquires of the servants if Nella has returned and is told she has not. A couple of hours pass. Nella and Feldman return and the latter tells Wilbur that the reception was a great success. Wilbur keeps quiet and asks Feldman to sit down. He then shows him the letter saying that the reception was canceled. A struggle takes place. Nella hears the noise of the struggle and is frightened. Pulling aside the curtains, she sees the finish—Feldman dead on the floor. Husband and wife are reconciled.

AS THE CANDLE BURNED (Sept. 10).—The cast: John Ayres (Jean Hersholt); Ellen, his wife (Irene Hunt); Tom, their son (Billy Mason). Written and produced by Joseph Le Brandt.

John Ayres finds that the officers are coming to take him to the poor house. Ayres gets an old-fashioned cash box, and from it takes a photo of a girl—his sweetheart, and in his memory he sees himself asking Ellen to marry him. Then he takes out the wedding invitation, and his memory paints the ceremony, with the congratulations of their friends.

Next he takes the birth announcement of their only son, Tom, and the picture visualizes Ellen and the tiny baby and their wonderful joy over the gift God has sent them. Then he takes a card written in a childish hand—an invitation to a Christmas party—and wistfully gazes upon the children playing games, lovingly watched by himself and Ellen.

But a newspaper clipping telling of his son's escapade brings sadness to the old man—an escapade in a cafe while in a drunken brawl; but this is not all to be added to the old man's cup of bitterness, for his son is arrested for embezzling funds from the bank in which he is employed. Heartsick, the mother dies. Then the old man takes his savings—his all—to the bank president to make good the shortage.

Then the officers come to take him away, but they find only a corpse. His spirit has gone to join Ellen's in Heaven.

REX.

THE HERITAGE OF VALOR (Sept. 8).—The cast: Pierre (Lee Kohlman); Victor (Millard K. Wilson); the wife (Edith Roberts). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Pierre, a French peasant, is proud of the honors which he received in the war and is anxious to have his son, Victor, follow in his footsteps. Victor is married and he and his wife are very devoted to each other. Then one day comes the summons for Victor to go to war and it is with a gamut of emotions that the news is received in the small household.

Finally the time of his departure arrives and his wife, about to become a mother, is heartbroken. But the father is glad that his son is leaving for the front, and expects that he will return covered with medals. But love comes ahead of patriotism, and that night Pierre and the little wife are astounded when Victor appears. Before long the officers have come in search of him, but Pierre with great dignity reminds the officers of his own valor and they do not search the house, out of consideration of him. Later, Victor realizes his duty to his country and leaves for the front. He returns, minus an arm, to his family and finds that he is a father. Pierre is now proud of his brave boy.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

LIBERTY (Episode No. 4—"Dead or Alive"—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Liberty Horton (Marie Walcamp); Bob Rutledge (Jack Holt); Major Winston (Neal Hart); Manuel (Bertram Grassby); Juan Lopez (G. Raymond Nye); Jose Leou (L. M. Wells); Pedro (Eddie Polo).

Miss Liberty Horton, an American heiress residing on her late father's estate in Mexico, overhears a quarrel between her two guardians, Major Winston, a former U. S. Army officer, and Jose Leon, an old friend of her father's. The two guardians are angrily discussing Jose's demand that his son, Manuel, be allowed to wed Liberty. Jose declares that if the Major does not agree to such a marriage, he, Jose, will make public the fact that the Major has squandered in gambling about $20,000 belonging to Liberty. Liberty decides, that, although she does not care for Manuel, she will marry him to save her American guardian from disgrace. She also decides to be Manuel's wife in name only.

While the forced marriage of Liberty and Manuel is taking place, Colonel Dalton, commanding troops near the border in New Mexico, receives orders from Washington to cross the line and capture the Mexicans who attacked the town of Discovery. Dalton's troopers show joy over the chance to fight and they quickly break camp and begin marching across the border. Captain Rutledge, leader of a troop of Texas Rangers, who is in love with Liberty, sees Liberty being compelled to wed Manuel and he departs in sorrow to lead his rangers to a junction with the oncoming American soldiers. Lopez, chief of the Mexican bandits in that section of the country, is told by a courier that the Yankee troops are coming, and hoping to gain greater power among the insurrectos, he incites the rebels to attack the American troops.

Therese, the discarded sweetheart of Manuel, resolves to aid Liberty in escaping from Manuel's house. Manuel goes to Liberty's room, which he finds locked, and he demands admittance, just as Therese creeps to the window outside to aid Liberty in escaping. Manuel breaks down the door and confronts Liberty, who seizes a knife and defies her unwelcome husband. Col. Dalton and his troops are meanwhile marching into Mexico.

TIMOTHY DOBBS, THAT'S ME (Episode No. 4, "From the Rogue's Gallery"—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Timothy Dobbs (Carter De Haven); Jeff (Robert Milash); director (Geo. Hernandez). Written by Hess Meredyth. Produced by W. Beery.

The story opens in a hotel room. Timothy is broke. Jeff is washing Timothy's handkerchiefs and putting them on the window to dry. Timothy goes forward again determined to succeed. At the studio through a ruse he manages to elude the cerberus at the gate and enters. He watches a set story of the underworld, and etc., and sees a director taking a stupid extra man through a part. He has a brilliant idea; he goes and uses his last dollar to bribe a man. Timothy returns to the scene where the director sits discouraged. Timothy wanders on, and the man he has bribed comes up and says: "Mr. Dobbs! I haven't had the pleasure of seeing your marvelous performance as a crook in that underworld play!" Timothy smiles indifferently, but the director hears, the plan works and Timothy is engaged to play the stupid actor's part. Looking for a location they go to the worst section of the town, where police work in pairs, and proceed to take scenes. It is by accident that Timothy is wearing the makeup that resembles the Eel, notorious safe-breaker and murderer, and is recognized by a crook who spreads the news to all, including Maggie, the Eel's "Moll."

Naturally, when Timothy, on the outside of the Dive, enters, during a scene, he cannot understand why they all fall on his neck and drag him to the back room. His attempts to escape are all in vain. They insist on hiding him in the retreat. Meanwhile, the director, thoroughly disgusted, leaves the scene. Then, in a skirmish, the makeup is rubbed off of Timothy's face and they see that he is not the Eel, but believe that he is a spy or a detective. They fight him and it is only the interference of the police that stops them.

BISON.

THE PRINCELY BANDIT (Two Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: The Mad-Cap Queen (Grace Cunard); Prince Frederick (Francis Ford); the King Regent (Pete Gerald); Count Michael (Jack Holt). Written by Grace Cunard. Produced by Francis Ford.

The "Mad-cap" Queen of Crona has become petulant because the King Regent insists that she marry Prince Frederick within a week. The Queen admires Frederick and insists that she will marry whom she likes. The old King argues with Frederick in favor of the marriage, and Frederick agrees. But when he finds that the Queen is against the match, he writes her a note bidding farewell, and stating that he is leaving to avoid embarrassing her.

After a hard day's travel Frederick arrives at a hut, which is inhabited by a band of bandits, whose leader has just died. Frederick is admitted, and becomes very much interested in the experiences related by the bandits. The romance of their lives appeals to him, and later he joins them. He gains the good will of his companions and they make him chief. Count Michael, next in line for the throne, is in love with the young Queen. With the disappearance of Frederick, the Count tries every possible way to win the Queen's consent to his suit.

An artist is at the palace making a picture of the Queen, and when he leaves one night, the Count offers him his own coat, as the night is cold. The bandits see the artist in the royal coat, and thinking it is the Count, capture him and hold him for ransom. While the artist is in the bandit's den he catches a view of Frederick unmasked, and makes a sketch of him from memory. When he is requested to write the King, stating he is held for ransom, he writes on the reverse side of the paper on which he has made the sketch. The note is delivered to Count Michael, who refuses to do anything to help the artist escape. He throws the note on the floor. The Queen discovers the note, and upon a close examination sees the sketch, which she recognizes as a likeness of Frederick. She determines to get him back.

On the day that the counciliors declare she must marry Count Michael, the Queen captures the bandit chief and brings him before the cardinal, masked. She insists that rather than marry the Count she will marry the bandit, and the cardinal carries out her wishes. The Count in a fury denounces the bandit, and is much surprised when Frederick removes the mask and he recognizes him as the missing Prince.

FALSTAFF.

FARE, LADY (Aug. 22). The cast: Conductor No. 786 (Riley Chamberlin).

Until he fell in love, Conductor No. 786 was quite a model employee. Thereafter, every time he passed a real estate office he stopped the car right in the middle of the block to search the displays for advertised houses for sale. Once he let a whole family ride three miles on one fare. Then he forgot to stop the car so Fatty could get on and Fatty had to chase the car ten blocks before he caught up with it. But one day, the conductor's bride-to-be insisted that he quit ringing up fares and become a lawless desperado in order to satisfy her romantic novel-reading disposition. And the conductor did, with the result that he fell into a nest of adventures, near arrests, narrow escapes from minions of the law and the posses' noose.

contact with the maid of a wealthy family. She has been to market and Jerry relieves her of her burden. He is about to accept her invitation to dine with her when the policeman on the beat, who is also infatuated with the maid, appears. The officer hurls Jerry to the ground and then follows the maid to the kitchen. Jerry determined to gain an entrance to the place, starts for the door again, when Hank, the janitor, appears and another fight starts. Jerry is pounded again and Hank goes inside. A fight starts between the janitor and the blue-coat, the latter using his club freely and throwing the janitor downstairs to the cellar.

Jerry is lost as to what to do when he spies the police captain. He hurries to him and tells his tale of woe and the Captain decides to go after his subordinate. Jerry follows in and while the two officers are fighting Jerry opens the door leading to the cellar and throws them both down to join the janitor.

Jerry is progressing nicely when the master of the house comes in. He is also smitten with the girl, but before he sees Jerry the diminutive one hides under the table and is further shielded from view by the maid's apron. The master is having a love scene with the girl when his wife appears and she loses no time, crashing a bottle over the unfaithful one's head. The maid faints and as the wife rushes out Jerry goes to the girl's assistance. He picks her up just as the three in the cellar appear. Jerry runs to the hall and there he is confronted by the husband.

Jerry throws the girl into the arms of the master and runs upstairs just as the wife appears. Seeing her husband with the maid in his arms the angry wife smashes a big vase over her husband's head, dropping him with the maid in his arms. The police and janitor appear on the scene and there is a general mixup. All decide to get Jerry and a chase leads to the top floor. Jerry climbs out of the window and aided by the drain pipe reaches the ground while the police and janitor climb down behind him. He is caught at the bottom by the husband, who is in waiting and held for the police, then to be severely clubbed and taken away to jail, leaving Hank the janitor in possession of the troublesome maid.

THE JUNGLE FLASHLIGHT (Two Parts—Sept. 9).—The cast: Paul Grainy (William Clifford); Margaret Grainy (Margaret Gibson); Thelma (Thelma Salter); Al. Morse (Al. B. Blake).

Paul Grainy, an expert photographer, receives an assignment from a society of Natural History to go to Africa to gather specimens and photographs of the beasts of the jungle. He is accompanied by his wife, Margaret, and Thelma, their daughter, and Al. Morse, his chemist. Arriving at their destination they make camp at the edge of the jungle.

A band of natives have established a settlement on the other side of the jungle near a stream. Among the number is the water-carrier, the drudge of the tribe, whose only friend is Ena, a big elephant. Because of his love for the beast, the carrier arouses the enmity of the chief and he is ordered thrashed. Ena comes to the rescue of the defenseless man.

Paul engages guides and starts off into the jungle. He leaves his wife and child behind in the care of Al., his chemist. Al. is satisfied with the manner in which events have turned out, for alone with the young wife, his cherished opportunity for love scenes with the little woman has come. The following day the chemist accidentally cuts his finger. He succeeds in arousing the sympathy of the wife, who volunteers to bandage the wound. The two enter the living tent and as Margaret binds the injured finger, Al. embraces her. While she struggles with him Thelma is heard outside the tent. Al. departs, leaving the wife in fear.

Paul, in the thick of the jungle, is successful in his photographic work and with all of his plates and film exhausted he starts for the camp. He is greeted by his wife and baby but notices a change in Margaret. He questions her, but she fears to tell him the truth.

The following day Paul and his party start out again. Some hours after the party has departed, Thelma wanders away from the camp and when nightfall comes she has not returned. Margaret is frantic, and she appeals to Al. to help her find her child. With Thelma out of the way, the chemist believes he can gain his end, and Margaret's wishes fall on deaf ears. Paul comes in contact with the leopards and lions and the guides telling him that they are close to a nest of the beasts, he rigs up his flashlight apparatus, spreading out wires which cause an explosion when coming in contact with anything.

Thelma has wandered into the jungle. Soon she hears the howling of a lion and she runs down a steep embankment, spraining her ankle. She crawls along. The lion is in pursuit. Thelma reaches a water-hole where, not far away, Ena, the elephant, is waiting for the water-carrier. The youngster's screams are heard by Ena and the big beast answers the call. Ena picks Thelma up in her trunk and carries her to safety. The child and beast are found by the water-carrier and guided back to the natives' camp. A runner comes to the Grainy camp with plates which have been used and Al. receives them. Margaret writes a letter to her husband and tells him of the disappearance of Thelma. The letter is delivered by the runner.

Al develops the plates and is astonished when he comes across one showing Thelma and the elephant. He goes to Margaret and displays the plate and tells her that she is probably in the jungle with her father. With no one about, the chemist makes efforts to cause Margaret to be unfaithful to her husband with the result that the wife faints. When Margaret regains herself he proposes that they start out to find the party in the jungle. Margaret agrees.

Paul receives his wife's letter and orders a hurried trip back to the camp. While riding fast he is thrown from his horse and forced to discontinue. The party is close to the native village and Paul is taken there and cared for. There he meets his daughter. While Al. and Margaret are driving in the jungle, the chemist suddenly forces his obnoxious attentions upon her. She manages to get away, and providentially she walks into the native camp where she meets her husband and tells him of her predicament. Al., believing that Margaret is near, accidently approaches the camp, Margaret sees him and informs her husband, who thrashes him. As he is backing away he fires at Paul. The bullet misses its mark. The chemist runs into Ena, who happens to be standing at the back of him. The beast throws the chemist upon the ground and crushes his brains out with his foot.

THE KEY (Two Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Douglas Stallman (Edward Coxen); "Prince" Jamisou (George Field); Cleo Langdon (Lizette Thorne); Father (Frank Thompson). Directed by Alfred Hollingsworth.

Douglas Stallman, U. S. Secret Service Agent, talks over old times with a friend whom he has not seen for years. He tells the story of his big case.

Stallman's aid has been sought by the local chief of the government service in an effort to discover and break up a gang of counterfeiters. The only clew is the suspicion that a girl known as Cleo Langdon is in some way connected with them. The case is placed in Stallman's hands. Cleo Langdon occupies rooms in an exclusive apartment and Stallman takes up his residence there. Having previously seen that the clerk on duty has been warned to watch for counterfeit money Stallman presents some which he has obtained from the secret service bureau and which is supposed to have been made by the counterfeiters, as Cleo stands beside him at the desk. The clerk notes the spurious currency, refuses it and Stallman's actions lead Cleo to suspect that he also is engaged in passing bad money. Consequently, she believes (as Stallman hoped) that he might be of use to the gang. When he attempts to make her acquaintance later she accepts his advances.

Time passes and Stallman has learned to know Cleo. He tells her in a burst of confidence that, through the unjust conviction of himself for a crime of which he was not guilty, he has become an enemy to society. Cleo tells her story, a story which really wins his sympathy. Moreover, believing she has found a kindred spirit, Cleo confides that she is connected with the counterfeiters and offers to introduce Stallman to the gang. He accepts. Stallman meets the gang and is accepted on probation. Upon a later visit to their place he waits in the outer room for connection with them. Jamison, the leader of the gang and in love with Cleo, fears that his hold upon her will be gone once she leaves them and refuses her request. Stallman is more than pleased at Cleo's attempt at reformation. Jamison, anxious to pacify Cleo, tells her that if she will carry their plates through to another location which they have chosen the gang will release her. Cleo accepts. As this decision is reached, Stallman is discovered in anteroom listening.

Jamison orders Stallman to be searched, and Cleo's apartment key which Stallman managed to obtain from the door of the apartment is found on him. Jamison accuses Cleo of being Stallmau's mistress. Cleo resents his accusation and breaks with the gang. Stallman overhears her denunciation of Jamison from the outer room in which he lies bound. He drags himself to the table in the center, braces himself against it from behind and places his bound feet underneath the rugs on a stool standing nearby. This he throws through the window out on the street below where it barely misses a passerby. A moment later a chair follows.

While Cleo and Jamison rage in the inner room the passerby calls the police and notifies them that there is some trouble in the house from which the stool and chair were thrown. As they arrive Cleo leaves Jamison and the others of the gang and passes through the room in which Stallman lies bound. She ignores him. At the door she sees the police and rushes back. To her surprise Stallman advises her that if she wants to escape to hide in the closet. She secretes herself just as the police rush in. The police free Stallman, who immediately slips his secret service badge to Cleo, who is still in the closet. He then goes to help the police.

Jamison and the entire outfit are captured. The police search the room for anyone in hiding and then pass back through the outer room. As they start to enter Stallman stands talking to Cleo. He introduces her to the officer in charge of the squad as a confederate of his and the girl who made it possible for him to break up the gang. On her coat she wears a secret service badge, which Stallman slipped to her.

The scene fades out and back into the library. Stallman finishes telling his story, as Cleo, now his wife, enters the room.

VOGUE.

THE STOLEN BOOKING (Two Parts—Sept. 3).—The cast: Rube (Ruhe Miller); Ben (Ben Turpin); Kelsey (Larry Bowes); Ryan (Ed Laurie). Directed by Rube Miller.

Unknown to Kelsey and Ryan, two prominent actors, the show troupe to which they are sent by their booking agent, was driven from town by the Constable and his deputies. While waiting for their train the two actors stepped into the depot lunch room and are seen by Rube and Ben, both out of employment. Rube and Ben steal the actors' suit cases, their wallet containing two dollars, their railroad transportation and their contract to join the troupe for which they are leaving. The actors finding their suit cases and wallet gone and being unable to pay for the food they have eaten, are detained by two roustabouts of the lunchroom long enough for Rube and Ben to leave on their train, and are then thrown out.

Rube and Ben arrive in a small town. They pose as Kelsey and Ryan and are informed that the troupe has been driven from town, but inasmuch as all of their trunks, wardrobe and scenery have been kept by the manager of the opera house, they suggest that Rube and Ben produce a benefit performance and use the paraphernalia of the show troupe. In need of money, they consent.

The night of the show brings a large audience and the first act begins, finding Ben, the villain of the piece foreclosing the mortgage on the old man's home. Unable to receive payment, Ben offers the mortgage to the old man in return for his daughter's hand. She being in love with Rube, the leading man, refuses his offer. The old man insists and Ben carries her away, leaving Rube broken-hearted. The first act closes with a disinterested and disappointed audience. The lover of the girl, playing the part of the daughter, is sore and sneaks behind the curtain to watch the final act. The manager also comes to the stage to view the final act.

The second act starts. Two years have passed and the daughter having left her husband, returns home with the baby, meeting her father and her former lover Rube. While Rube is acting, Ben substitutes his make-up box for the box of money, but is seen by Rube. Rube leaves the stage and Ben goes on. While he is working, Rube substitutes his make-up box for the money box which Ben has taken. Ben in on the stage demanding that the girl return to him, but the refusal causes Ben to set fire to the house. Rube then returns to the stage and the girl's real lover takes the money from the box which Rube and Ben have stolen, and puts it in his pocket. Rube and Ben start a duel, but are interrupted by the real Kelsey and Ryan, who have finally walked into town. Rube and Ben run off stage and grab the fire torches in an effort to hold the two actors off, but the torches are knocked out of their hands, starting a real fire. Rube and Ben both run to their dressing room, grab their make-up boxes, thinking they still contain the money, and run from the opera house, being chased by the two actors. They run up a ladder to the top of the opera house and jump through a skylight to the stage. The actors find them on the stage and demand the money from them. They discover that their boxes are empty. The lover returns and hands over the money to the manager. Rube and Ben run off, grab the fire hose and play it upon the crowd, chasing them away. The two actors still on the roof, throw down two large boxes, striking Rube and Ben upon the head, and knocking them unconscious. The hose which these two comedians are holding is thrown upward, and the force of the water knocks the other two actors off the roof.

BEAUTY.

TWO OF A KIND (Aug. 30). The cast: Mr. Henpeck (Orral Humphrey); his wife (Jo Taylor); Bilkins (Joe Massey); Tootles (Hazel West). Directed by Orral Humphrey.

Mr. Henpeck was the unfortunate possessor of a bridge-playing wife and a squalling baby. Left at home to take care of the child, his misery multiplied when he received a note from his friend Smith, asking him over for a little game of poker. Desire finally overcomes discretion and he goes to Smith's taking the infant along. There this baby is placed in the hands of Bilkins, the butler, who takes it to the park for an airing with a wry face, as he does not like the job.

At the park, Bilkins flirts with Tootles, a maid in charge of Mrs. Billing's baby. It is at Mrs. Billing's house that Mrs. Henpeck is spending her afternoon at bridge. Bilkins and Tootles finally part, but as they do so they mix the babies. The exchange results in mad confusion for two families, but Mrs. Henpeck at length sees the humor of the situation and much to Henpeck's delight smiles and forgives him.

REEL LIFE NO. 17 (Aug. 27). Boy Scouts at work and play is the chief feature of the seventeenth issue of Reel Life.

At the present time there are approximately 200,000 youths and boys affiliated with the Boy Scouts movement and the work this non-military organization is doing has received the highest endorsements from many quarters.

The pictures contained in this release were taken by Cameraman Walter Pritchard, of the Gaumont-Mutual studios, at the annual encampment at Glen Cove, L. I. The boys are shown on their march to the camp, and their engagement in the various scout activities, which are designed to make better men of them. In order to hold the scenes together an interesting little story was written around the picture. It tells of a boy, a scoffer, who finally was prevailed upon to join the movement. He is taken into the camp, initiated into the mysteries of the scout life and finally becomes one of its most enthusiastic boosters.

On the same reel is another of the popular Gaumont-Mutual tabloid plays, "What Would You Do If ——?" This release also presents many pictures of strange animals and reptiles found along the Rio Grande, where American troopers are now encamped.

SEE AMERICA FIRST (No. 51—Aug. 30). This scenic reel is devoted to a trip along the rugged and picturesque North Shore of Massachusetts, showing the beautiful coast line and historic spots. A trip is taken to Plymouth where the sturdy Puritan fathers landed in 1620. A fine close up of the famous Plymouth Rock and other historic points in this old town are seen. Salem, famed as an early American shipping port, and as the place where witches were burned, and the ducking stool, a regular form of punishment, and Gloucester with its huge wharves and thriving fisheries are among the interesting places shown this week. Magnolia, Manchester-by-the Sea, Beverly, where ex-President Taft had his summer home, Northport, Pigeon Cove, Annisquam and other fashionable summer places are also visited by the Mutual cameraman.

FANTOMAS (Episode No. 1, "The Phantom Crook"—Three Parts—Sept. 7).—The cast: Fantomas, Gurn, the gentleman thief (Victor Navarre); Inspector Juve (James Breon); Fandor (Louis Melchior); Lady Beltham, (Renee Carl); Princess Danidoff (Jean Faber).

All Paris had been upset by a series of mysterious robberies and murders. Since the perpetrators of these crimes could not be found, they were attributed to an elusive criminal called Fantomas. Not two of his victims described him alike; but because of his ingenious methods and calculated daring, it was felt that one man committed all crimes.

One night on returning to her room after a ball, the Princess Sonia Danidoff threw aside her pearl necklace and placed with it a package containing $25,000 in banknotes, which had just been given her at the hotel office. Her astonishment may be imagined when a well-dressed man stepped from behind the heavy curtains at the window.

The Princess demanded what he was doing in her room at that hour. Ordering her to keep silent, he seized the necklace and the bundle of banknotes. The Princess was then forced to walk with him to the door. Once across the threshold he locked the Princess in the room. As she rushed to the phone to give the alarm, she looked again at the card. Upon it now appeared one word: "FANTOMAS."

Police Inspector Juve was put upon the case. About this time Lord Beltham, a wealthy Englishman, disappeared. This case was also assigned to Juve. He had taken into his confidence a young journalist, Fandor, and he said to Fandor that it seemed as if the authorities had turned over the case of the disappearance of Lord Beltham to him because he did not seem to be successful in apprehending Fantomas and should be given easy things.

Thinking that Lord Beltham had merely dropped out of sight to serve some purpose of his own, Juve went to make inquiries at the Englishman's home. Lady Beltham lived in a beautiful villa at Neuilly. Juve's interest was aroused by finding a man's hat in the drawing room in which was the letter G. Going through Lord Beltham's address book, only one name was found under this letter. It was that of a man named Gurn. Unknown to Lady Beltham, Juve dotted down this name and hastened with Fandor to Gurn's apartment.

Little did he know that Gurn had overheard his conversation with Lady Beltham and was much upset at the thought that the detective had discovered his hat. He wrote a note to a steamship company to ship the trunks found in his apartment to South Africa. However, Juve forestalled him. On breaking open one trunk, the body of Lord Beltham was found. Making a careful search, Juve found a number of calling cards similar to that which Fantomas had given Princess Sonia. He was certain that the murderer of Lord Beltham was the mysterious bandit who had terrified Paris so long.

Deciding that Lady Beltham was interested, in some fashion, with Fantomas in his role of Gurn, Juve decided to watch the villa at Neuilly. At last he was successful in arresting the great criminal. Gurns' guilt was easily established. The scandal-mongers were disappointed because Lady Beltham's name was not drawn into the case. Gurn himself testified that he killed the man after they had quarreled violently over money matters.

What Juve did not know was that Lady Beltham interested herself more and more in the condemned man as the day for his execution approached. She managed to bribe a keeper who carried notes between the pair. For a bribe of $20,000 the guard smuggled Gurn out of prison for an interview several hours before he was to be led to the guillotine. The night before Fantomas was to die, Valgrand, one of the famous actors of Paris, appeared in a new play in the charatcer of a criminal. In order to arouse interest, he announced that he would make up like Fantomas, the murderer.

Lady Beltham invited him to call upon her immediately after the theater, still in costume. This he did. The clever woman drugged the actor, and turned him over to the guards in place of Gurn. The man was taken back to prison and later led to the guillotine in a comatose condition. It was only just before he was to be executed that Juve detected the imposition. This time Fantomas had escaped, but Juve swore that he would yet place the elusive criminal behind the bars.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE DIAMOND RUNNERS (Signal—Five Parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: Helen (Helen Holmes); the brains of the I. D. B. (Paul) (Paul C. Hurst); Inspector Hudson (Secret Service) (Leo D. Maloney); Sir Thomas Holstead (Thomas Lingham); Lady Holstead (Katherine Goodrich); Hon. Fortesque Holstead (William G. Brunton); Inspector Harrington (Secret Service) (Charles G. Wells). Written and directed by J. P. McGowan.

Helen, a "diamond runner," reaches South Africa. Among her letters of introduction is one to Sir Thomas Holstead. She visits the "business quarters" of the ring of diamond runners of which Paul Hurst is the head. Hurst informs Helen that she can easily gain access to the diamond mines by attending the Holstead reception and becoming acquainted with the Holsteads, who own large mining properties. Helen attends the reception and is received with great favor by Sir Thomas and his son Forty.

After a dance with Forty, they repair to the conservatory, followed by Inspector Harrington, Paul dispatches one of his henchmen to convey the message to Helen. The messenger finding Helen, writes Hurst's message on the window in chalk. This is seen by Harrington. Helen makes ready to leave. Forty invites her to visit the mines.

Next morning Forty and Helen visit the mines, closely trailed by Harrington. Coming to the place indicated by Hurst's chart, Helen sits down to rest. While Forty busily points out to her different places of interest, she craftily scoops up the diamonds which have been cached under the stone upon which she is sitting. These she puts in her bag, watched all the time by Harrington.

Harrington accuses Helen of stealing a number of diamonds. Helen cleverly imbeds the diamonds in the hearts of rose buds of a bouquet. Before passing into the chamber to be searched, she hands the bouquet to Forty. He gives Inspector Harrington and the mine manager each a rosebud. Returning from the fruitless search, Helen passes out accompanied by Forty, who sees her to the hotel. Shortly after Harrington discovers the presence of the diamond in the rosebud. Meantime, Helen hastily plucks the stones out of the buds. A number of detectives rush to the hotel. She hears them approach and wraps up the stones and attaches them to a toy balloon which she sends out of her window.

After a fruitless search, the detectives leave. Hurst comes in. Harrington follows shortly. In her inner chamber Helen tells Hurst of the balloon. He starts south, locates the balloon and recovers the stones. Hurst arranges for Helen to leave at once for the States, and tells her the package of diamonds will be delivered to her at the dock under the letter "H" in the baggage room.

The Holsteads plan to leave on the same vessel. Their maid's name is Helen also. By chance, the maid Helen is under the letter "H" in the baggage room when the messenger approaches, and forces the package into her hand. Inspector Hudson is detailed to sail and scrutinize Helen's actions. He meets Helen through Sir Thomas. Helen, accidentally discovers the package in the maid's trunk. Hudson protects Helen when she is attacked by Hurst. Upon landing, Helen gets into a taxi pre-arranged by Hurst to carry her to their rendezvous, where she is kidnapped and searched. Hudson follows closely with the police, who rescue Helen and capture the band of smugglers.

THE MAN WHO WOULD NOT DIE (American—Five Parts—Aug. 31).—The cast: Ward Kingsley and Clyde Kingsley (William Russell); Agnes (Charlotte Burton); Steve Mercer (Harry Keenan); Beth Taylor (Leona Hutton). Scenario by J. Edward Hungerford. Directed by William Russell.

Ward and Clyde Kingsley are twin brothers whose resemblance is so much alike that even close friends find it hard to distinguish between them. Ward loved Agnes Pendelton, an heiress, but because he feared the world would say that he married her for her money, he gave her up and went away. His brother, Clyde, not burdened with such fine feelings, but a dissolute character at heart, eventually marries Agnes. As the story opens they are living in California and Agnes' fortune has been squandered by the irresponsible Clyde. With Steve Mercer, a disreputable friend of many years, Clyde plots to insure his life for $100,000 and after he has arranged for a corpse for the occasion, to disappear and have his wife, Agnes, collect the insurance, later dividing the ill-gotten gains with Mercer.

Agnes revolts at the grewsome plan and denounces him as a scoundrel. Later on she pays her respects to Mercer, who has always looked upon her with lustful eyes. Just at this time Agnes receives a letter from Clyde's twin brother Ward, now in a New York hospital, that he is given up to die and informing them that this is his last message and blessing. Clyde imediately goes east, ostensibly to consult a specialist, and requests Agnes to give out the information that his heart is troubling him.

Arriving in New York, he visits Ward, and much against the latter's finer feelings and on the plea that it is for the good of Agnes, he induces Ward to go West to die and he buried as Clyde. Under the ministrations of Agnes, Ward recovers eventually, and the anxious Clyde, waiting in New York, receives word to that effect. Later, Ward writes him that he may now return, as he, Ward, is leaving California. The old attachment between Ward and Agnes has grown up afresh, and they make ready to part, with breaking hearts.

In the meantime, Steve Mereer and a female Nemesis, who has been following Clyde for years, plot to put Ward out of the way. He is to be lured to a lonely spot and thrown over the cliff. Clyde, however, gains seeret entrance to his own home, and witnessing an affectionate scene between Ward and Agnes and misinterpreting their relations, feils Ward with a blow and escapes thinking he has killed him. He rushes to the amhush to tell Steve and Beth that he has killed Ward. They mistake him for Ward and the fate intended for Ward is visited upon Clyde, Mercer shooting him. As he falls over the eliff he clutches Beth and drags her with him.

Ward is slowly recovering when Mercer rushes to the house to tell Agnes that Ward has been killed and that Clyde is his murderer. Thinking that no further harrier can be imposed between him and the accomplishment of his desire, he seizes Agnes and rains kisses upon her unwilling lips. Weak as he is, Ward rises from the couch and attaeks Mercer. The latter seizes the desk phone and is about to hrain Ward when the butler fires, killing Mercer instantly. Agnes faints in the arms of Ward. A later scene shows the happy bride and groom at last.

MUSTANG.

THE FORGOTTEN PRAYER (Three Parts—Aug. '31).—The cast: Mojava Matt (Perry Banks); Dan Page (Frank Borzage); Alice Page (Anna Little); Arthur Sanford (Jack Richardson). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Mojava Matt realizes that he is slipping away from God, when one Sunday morning he cannot even remember the Lord's prayer. He got as far as "give us this day our daily bread," and stopped there in self abasement. Packing his burro, he deserts his camp and starts back toward civilization, to find somebody who can tell him the next words. In the distant camp Dan Page and Alice, his wife, are celebrating the fourth anniversary of their happy union.

To the little camp town comes Arthur Sanford, auditor for the development company, who has known Alice before. Seeing Alice, he speaks slightingly of her in the presence of Dan, whose first impluse is to kill him on the spot. Regaining his control, however, Dan gets Alice to confront the slanderer. To his consternation, she is confused, and begs Dan to save her from Sanford. Dan is greatly astonished. Having made up his mind, he takes Sanford out into the desert, hands him a gun and turns him loose. Then he returns to his wife, drives her home and goes about his work in silence.

In the desert old Mojava Matt meets Sanford, exhausted and dying. Matt asks him what follows after "daily bread." "Forgive us our trespasses" breathes Sanford, as he expires. After asking many others to teach him further, and failing to learn the words, Mojava Matt at length comes to the home of Dan and Alice, still peaceful, but silent with the great silence of unpardonable sin between them.

They entertain the desert rat; they give him food. He tells his story of his pitiful search for the words that have grown to mean so much to him now. He begs Dan to tell him what comes after "trespasses." "As we forgive those who trespass against us," Dan repeats. The desert rat thanks him and departs. The words have struck inward to Dan's soul. He turns to Alice, in tears beside him, and takes her to his heart, forgiven and restored.

THE GAMBLER'S LOST LOVE (Two Parts—Sept. 1).—The cast: Jim (Jack Richardson); Helen (Queenie Rosson); Tom (William Marshall); Tina (Lizette Thorne). Directed by Murdock MacQuarrie.

Married, Helen finds herself most unhappy. Jim, her husband, is a gambler, and almost since the day of their wedding has abused her. She calls to mind the man to whom she was previously engaged—Tom; their petty quarrel; how she had waited for him at the oak tree where they were accustomed to meet, and he had failed to come. There is a hollow in the oak, and in this they had exchanged notes. But, extending her hand into the crevice, her fingers just failed to find the note that he had left, asking forgiveness, and telling her that he had gone up into the hills, to a locality where gold has just been discovered, but that he will return as soon as possible. Then she met Jim, and married him. He began to bully her, as he bullied all with whom he came in contact.

Homeward bound one day, Jim comes across a girl who fascinates him. He learns that she is a widow, and soon Helen hears of her husband's infatuation. Finally she tells him that there is only one thing to do, and that is for her to get a divorce. This he heartily agrees to, and she obtains the divorce. Jim is now free to marry the widow, Tina, and this he does.

Tom returned from the mountains some time previous, and learning of Helen's marriage to Jim, had gone back up into the hills without seeing her. About this time Helen, coming to the trysting place where she and Tom met, through curiosity puts her hand into the hollow of the oak, and this time brings from it the note that Tom left for her. This just as Tom is again coming from the hills; they meet. Her love is apparently revived, and again they plan to marry.

Jim has trouble at the gambling hall, and in an argument he shoots and wounds a fellow gambler. He starts homeward, and arriving there finds that a child has been born to him, and that Tina is dead. Back at the gambling hall, the men determine that Jim has bullied the town long enough, and decide to teach him a lesson. But arriving at his home, and learning conditions, they leave without molesting him.

Helen hears of the situation at Jim's home, and concludes that she must help him. She comes to his home, and, taking the baby from him, brings it to the cabin where she lives. Jim's lesson has hit home, and the gamblers learn to their amazement that he is through with games of chance. Moreover, he seems to have lost his bullying ways. Tom also hears of this, and tells the news to Helen.

Tom is at Helen's cabin one night, and is urging Helen to marry him. Jim comes, and is admitted. He takes in the situation, and crossing over to the baby's home-made cradle, he kneels down by it. Helen answers Tom's

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 1—"The Higher Power"—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—This episode tells of the fanatical ambition of a mysterious Mongolian, Ali Singh, who is a scientist, and a thinker of depth and originality. He develops into a brutal fanatic who stops short of no means to exalt the Yellow Race at the expense of the White. That Ali Singh is recognized as a powerful leader among the Mongolian race is shown in the first episode, when, by the majesty of his presence, he quells a Chinese riot which all but annihilates the White colonists in Hung Kai. Later Ali Singh goes to America to lead his followers in their efforts to overcome the supremacy of the White race. By the sheer determination of his personality, he has a multitude of Mongolian men at his beck and call, who stop at nothing to carry out his commands.

At the time Ali Singh arrives, Mr. Bronson, a banker of international importance, is backing an Anti-Alien law which aims to exclude all yellow men from this country. Determined to leave nothing undone that will further his cause, Ali Singh delivers secretly to Mr. Bronson a mysterious note hurled through a window at the point of a knife threatening Mr. Bronson with death if he does not withdraw his support from the Anti-Alien bill. Mr. Bronson enlists the aid of the police and secret service departments, which immediately take up the fight against Ali Singh. The struggles which ensue between the Government agencies and Ali Singh form the substance of the remaining fifteen episodes.

THE YELLOW MENACE (Episode No. 2—"The Mutilated Hand"—Two Parts—Sept. 11).—Upon arriving in this country Ali Singh took up his abode in a disreputable opium joint in New York run by Ah Chow, and from there he carried on his warfare against the Whites. To show that his threats against Mr. Bronson, the banker, were not to be disregarded, Ali Singh caused an attack to be made on the daughter of the banker, Margaret, and her friend, May Manning, the sister of Errol Manning, the secret service agent and a friend of the Bronson family. While the two girls were strolling in the garden by moonlight, they were pounced upon and rendered insensible. Margaret Bronson was taken in a car to Ah Chow's joint while a note pinned to May Manning's dress, and found when her unconscious body was discovered, announced that Margaret Bronson would be held as hostage. Meanwhile the bodies of two detectives who had been engaged in trying to run Ali Singh down, were washed up in the East River. Errol Manning, the secret service agent, and the banker's son head an attack on the opium joint, burn it out and rescue Margaret Bronson. Ali Singh, however, escapes.

THE ALIBI (Vitagraph—Five parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: Arthur Mansfield (James Morrison); Enid Chamberlain (Betty Howe); Walter Slayton (Paul Scardon); President Chamberlain (Robert Whitworth); Jarboe (Edward Elkas). Written by George Allan England. Produced by Paul Scardon.

To help his father out of serious financial difficulties, Arthur Mansfield, assistant cashier in a bank, makes a false entry in his book, but then, when it comes to taking the money, his nerve fails him and his honest character revolts against the robbery. Tearing the page from his book, he rushes to the desk of Slayton, the cashier, and explains the whole matter to him and begs leniency. Slayton, himself heavily in debt because of indiscreet speculation, sees in Mansfield's confession a chance to get out of his difficulties, and, although promising Mansfield that he will take care of him, plots to use him for the furtherance of his own ends.

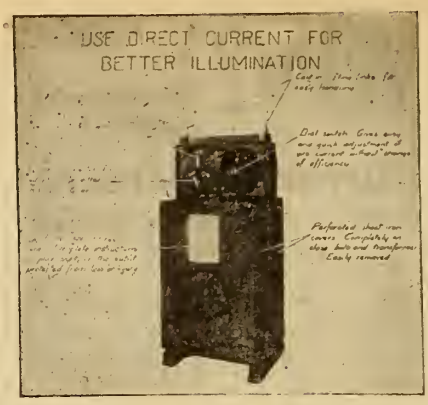
He keeps the page containing the false entry, and that night, disguised, enters the bank. Just as he is removing the money from the vault, he hears the watchman coming. Slayton hides behind the door of the vault but the watchman comes right toward him, and, fearing discovery, Slayton draws his revolver and fires. The watchman topples over, dead, and in insane dread of the consequences of his crime, Slayton works to remove all traces of his own guilt. He replaces the page with the false entry in Mansfield's book, pries open his own desk with Mansfield's letter opener and then throws the opener on the floor. A button which Mansfield tore from his coat that afternoon, Slayton places on the dead body and then he hastens from the building.

Next morning when the employees of the bank begin to arrive, they find the coroner and his jury on hand. Slayton is the first to be examined by the jury, and during his examination he succeeds in casting suspicion on Mansfield. The latter is taken into custody, a verdict of guilty is soon found against him and he is sentenced to life imprisonment. Enid, daughter of the bank president, who is engaged to Mansfield, is forced by her father to sever connections with him, but she still retains her faith in his innocence. When Mansfield has been in prison only a few months, Slayton visits him out of curiosity, but the burst of anger which Mansfield exhibits sends him away in panic, fearing lest the convict escape and seek vengeance. In a short time, Mansfield does escape and goes straight to Slayton's house, where, the next day the latter is found dead.

The papers proclaim Mansfield as the murderer and a large reward is offered for his capture. Mansfield turns up next morning at the District Attorney's office, and presents Slayton's signed confession proving that he was innocent of both crimes. He is reinstated to his former position in the bank and also claims the position he has always held in the heart of faithful Enid.

THE DAWN OF FREEDOM (Vitagraph—Five parts—Aug. 14).—The cast: The Patriot (Chas. Richman); Elizabeth McClean (Arline Pretty); Nancy Cartwright (Billie Billings); Dick Cartwright (James Morrison); Irving (Thomas R. Mills); Count (Templer Saxe); Strike Leader (Edward Elkas). Author, William J. Hubbert. Directors, Paul Scardon and Theodore Marston.

At the time of the Revolution, there lived a man beloved by all his countrymen who had loaned his strong arm to his country when it was needed, and who, when the war was over, distinguished himself once more, in diplomatic service. To this man, Richard Cartwright, Washington gave a tract of land in Pennsylvania, in recognition of his services. While the other officers there assembled laughed in merriment over the grant, for the land was a barren wilderness which they believed would never be worth anything, Cartwright maintained a solemn mien and told them that his expectations for this country were high and that land which had been granted would some day be inhabited by great numbers of people.



Cartwright started off to examine his property, and on the way, he was waylaid by redskins. He killed one of them but before more blood was shed Father Ambrose, a missionary whom the tribe esteemed, sprang between them and halted the battle. In the home of the good Father, while Cartwright slept, the chief of the tribe entered and demanded the life of the patriot in exchange for that of the redskin he had slain. Father Ambrose, seeing that the Indian was in earnest, asked time to shrive the doomed man's soul. This request was granted, and as soon as the chief had gone, the priest woke Cartwright and told him of his fate. After making his will leaving half his property to his sweetheart, Elizabeth, and the balance to his brother, Phillip, Cartwright was ready to die bravely, but Father Ambrose detained him and told of how he had discovered the wonderful secret of suspended animation from the Hindus some time before.

Cartwright readily agreed to submit to being placed in a temporary stupor, buried in this condition, and dug up again that night by Father Ambrose. When the chief returned to claim his hostage, he was told that the hand of God had preceded him and had taken Cartwright to make him pay for killing the redskin. He was shown the body and together they buried it. That night, when Father Ambrose with pick and shovel went out to the grave he was spied upon by the chief, who seeing his intentions, killed him.

The ground in which Cartwright was buried, is now the largest coal mine in Pennsylvania, employing thousands of men, and owned by descendants of the Cartwright family. This Cartwright has shattered all the traditions and ideals which the patriot held sacred; he is a greedy, grasping, selfish man. His employees, becoming disgruntled go out on strike. In a frenzy they plant bombs all over the works and set them off. Great holes are torn in the earth, and from one of these, a coffin shaped box is hurled. The box breaks and the body of Richard Cartwright, buried for over a century, rolls out. The shock has broken the spell of suspended animation and Cartwright returns to life to see his predictions fulfilled to see the great and glorious country which he had done so much to build.

But he gets a shock when he sees that the ideals for which he fought so strenuously have been abandoned and a descendant of his own family is one of the men who has helped crush them. He finally applies the tactics of Revolutionary times and settles the disturbance, although he is shot and loses his life while working among the strikers. Before he dies, he manages to instill his spirit in the body of the present Cartwright's son.

THE FOOTLIGHTS OF FATE (Vitagraph—Five Parts—Aug. 21).—The cast: Joan Thursday (Naomi Childers); John Matthais (Marc MacDermott); George Tankerville (Templer Saxe); Anthony Thursday (William Shea); Edna Thursday (Katherine Lewis). Written by

Stronger Light

The light from an Alternating current arc comes alternating from both carbons while from a Direct Current arc it always comes from the same carbon. The Direct Current arc can therefore be arranged so that the maximum amount of its light always passes through the lens, while it is impossible to do this with an Alternating Current arc. A Direct Current arc also gives off more light for the same current than an Alternating Current.

If your electric service is only alternating current, a

Joan Thursday loses her job because she refuses to fall for the floorwalker and determines to go on the stage. Her father, a drunkard and poolroom fiend, chases her out of the house. The only two friends she has to go to she finds out of town, but finds a friend in John Matthias, a young playwright, a member of the same boarding house. John Matthias, in love with Venetia Tankerville, does not propose to her because of her wealth, and when she leads him to it he declares his love, she acquiesces, and Helena, who enters then is told and congratulates the couple. Marbridge, a silent partner with Arlington in a theatrical enterprise, of which Nella, Marbridge's mistress, is leading lady, accepts a play which Matthias has written, and they decide to put it on, Matthias getting their promise of a small part for Joan.

Matthias, fascinated by Joan's charms, proposes to her and wins a consent. On return of the eloping pair, Marbridge having eloped with Venetia in order to get her money, meets Joan and is struck by her beauty, which he openly admires, much to the embarrassment of Matthias, Tankerville and Venetia. Through his influence her small part is taken away and she is given a bigger part.

The night of the first performance he meets Joan and takes her to his apartment, where he has everything prepared for her. Nella grows suspicious, follows them to the apartment, finds Joan in his arms, and, her jealousy overcoming her, she fires and shoots Marbridge, who falls, unconscious. Realizing what she has done, Nella runs to him and hysterically tries to recall her action. Marbridge's valet takes her away, revives Marbridge, who gets Matthias on the phone, and later, when Matthias and Arlington arrive, gives Joan and Venetia in Matthias's keeping and Nella in Arlington's. He dies.

THE KID (Vitagraph—Five parts—Aug. 28).—The cast: The Kid (Lillian Walker); Dunster (Ned Finley); Marie Peree (Eulalie Jensen); Joe Hazard (Bob Gaillard). Author and director, Wilfrid North.

The Kid, a sprightly young girl of seventeen, is overjoyed at receiving an appointment on the staff of the New York Herald, through the influence of Joe Hazard, the star reporter, who has brought her up as his daughter. To arm her properly for the battle of life, Joe tells her the story of how her mother's downfall was brought about. Her mother, he tells her, was betrayed by a man named Dunster in her home town. Joe had befriended her and when her child (the Kid) was born, and the mother died and Joe had decided to bring the child up himself. With a final warning to beware the pitfalls of the city, Joe takes her to the Herald office to begin her career.

Soon after, when the price of meat shows an alarming rise, the Herald assigns the Kid to unearth the cause. While on the hunt for particulars, the Kid sees Robinson, one of the large cattle owners of the West, who has come to this city for a business trip. She follows him, waits while he has his shoes shined and then, when turning a corner, loses him in the crowd. Hurrying home, she assumes the disguise of a bootblack and obtains a position at the stand where she left Robinson. True to her expectations, Robinson appears that day, and while shining his shoes she obtains a clue.

That day, Robinson's wife, a charity worker, is murdered while riding in her car, and the murderer makes his escape. Sometime later, the Kid manages to obtain a position in the office of Robinson and secures evidence which connects her employer not only with the manipulation of the meat market, but also with the murder of his wife. She arranges to have two detectives hide in the room next day to get further evidence of his connection with the murder, but they overhear a conversation which convinces them that Hildalgo, manager of Robinson's cattle enterprises, is the real murderer and he is taken into custody. The Kid obtains a warrant for Robinson for his connection with the rise in meat, but Joe Hazard, recognizing Robinson, tells the Kid that he is her own father, Dunster, under an assumed name. Dunster also learns that the Kid is his daughter and begs leniency. She finally secures his freedom, but when he comes to claim a daughter's love, she turns to Joe, who has been her "Daddy" for all these years.

THE RETURN OF EVE (Essanay—Five Parts—Sept. 4).—The cast: Eve (Edna Mayo); Adam (Eugene O'Brien); David Winters (Edward Mawson); Seymour Purchwell (Edward Arnold); Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy (Emily Fitzroy); Clarice Bellamy (Leona Hall); John Raymond (John Cossar), Trixie Shevlin (Renee Clemons). Written by Leo Wilson Dodd. Directed by Arthur Berthelot.

Believing that over-civilization was destroying the race, Eli Tupper, an eccentric millionaire, took two unrelated orphan children, a boy and a girl, and placed them in a wilderness—there in the care of an old tutor, David Winters, to grow up as a new Adam and Eve, and become path-breakers of a better race. In delightful simplicity and educated as much as they could be without contact with the world, the children attain the age of nineteen years.

Mrs. Tupper-Bellamy, society leader, lives in costly splendor against the day when she hopes to inherit her brother's millions. She plans to marry her daughter, Clarice, to Seymour Purchwell, society idler of standing and also an attorney. Purchwell makes it plain that the marriage can occur if Eli Tupper's fortune goes to the girl and her mother. When Tupper dies the sister and her set learn for the first time of his odd experiment. His will provides that the sister must take Adam and Eve into civilization in order to win an annuity of $50,000 a year. The orphans are heirs to the rest. Purchwell sets out to find them.

He locates the Eden of the boy and girl and old Winters, and is literally the serpent in the garden. Winters resents leaving, but a clash between Adam and Purchwell decides him. Plunged amidst the whirl of social affairs Eve is delighted, Adam is disgusted with the sham and deceit of society, and pleads with her to return to Eden. She refuses. Winters takes him to Paris to study.

Purchwell, seeking the Tupper fortune, turns his attention to Eve. Clarice is in a frenzy of affection spurned, and after finding the two alone she accuses them before the whole house party. Eve, in her innocence, does not readily grasp the meaning of the charge. When it dawns on her she faces the guests, and in her bitterness denounces them as tools of passion and greed, and announces that she will give up all and return to Eden. With old Winters, she returns. Adam is recalled from Paris, and the girl and the boy, now awake to their love, together with their beloved guardian, give up the world.

THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR (Sept. 4—Paragon—Five Parts).—The cast: Nan Lorimer (June Elvidge); Masie Lorimer (Frances Nelson); Dr. Thornton (George Anderson); John Harwood (E. K. Lincoln). Directed by Robert Thornby.

Maisie and Nan, two young convent-bred girls, are left orphaned and unprotected on the death of their mother. The dying woman begs Nan, the older, to watch over and to protect the younger and gay Maisie. Unused to the ways of the world, Maisie soon falls under the spell of the unscrupulous Dr. Thornton. She believes his protestations of love, and despite Nan's advice, meets him clandestinely at doubtful places. John Harwood, a manly fellow who has struck it rich out West, returns and is wined and feted by his former associates. He rescues Maisie from a subway accident when she was on her way to fill a dinner engagement at Dr. Thornton's apartment, and the friendship thus begun, quickly develops. After a short while Harwood declares his love and the couple are married.

Although devoted to his wife and longing to be with her, Harwood finds it necessary to spend days and evenings at the office. Maisie chafes under the neglect and becomes very unhappy. She condemns Nan as unsympathetic in siding with Harwood and against her. True to her promise to her dying mother to protect Maisie, Nan goes to Harwood and tells him about Maisie's loneliness. He realizes for the first time that in the search for "the almighty dollar" he has neglected his wife and enthusiastically thanks Nan for bringing him to his senses. Maisie, entering the office, sees their affectionate attitude, hears only enough of their conversation to misunderstand, and, already suspicious and jealous of her husband's confidence in Nan, immediately believes the worst. She confides her troubles to Dr. Thornton, and he, basely taking advantage of her upset condition, induces her to come to his apartment. She realizes too late the true character of the man and struggles in vain against his embrace and kisses.

Nan, seeking her sister, arrives just in time to save her from Thornton. Norwood learns from a revengeful nurse—one of Dr. Thornton's jilted sweethearts that his wife is at the doctor's apartments. Infuriated, he forces his way into the apartment and demands that the doctor bring forth the woman who was with him Nan realizes she must save her sister at all costs—that Harwood must never know the truth. Rushing to the back room, she forces Maisie down the fire escape, then steps forward and calmly lies to Harwood—boldly asserts that he is mistaken—that Maisie has not been there and that she came to meet the doctor. Harwood is convinced and goes to beg his wife's forgiveness for his suspicions. Nan's intended, Allen, has listened to her confession of guilt, but he knew that she was nobly telling a lie to save her sister. After beating up the cowardly Thornton, he gathers the crushed, heroic girl into his arms.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter 15, "The Murderer at Bay"—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—Gloria Stafford upon being taken prisoner aboard Gideon Trask's barge, after she has followed the man she believes to be the murderer of Richard Freneau, her fiance, watches and waits for an opportunity to escape. She assists Nell Trask about her household tasks and when the two girls are folding up a table cloth, Gloria suddenly flings the cloth over the head of Nell and later binds her securely to a chair. Gideon, who has been on deck, hears the noise of the struggle below and comes down to investigate.

Gloria attacks him with a red hot poker and finally succeeds in tieing him up also. Jed, a deckhand, comes to the rescue, but Gloria trips him up, hastens on deck, slams down the hatch, and donning an oil skin coat and hat leaps down into a dinghy attached to the barge by a rope, and makes her way to shore. Arriving on shore Gloria commandeers an automobile and speeds away toward her country home. Doctor Royce and Pierpont Stafford, meanwhile, grown nervous over Gloria's absence from home, imagine that she may have gone up to the Stafford home in the country, and motor there to seek her.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Chapter No. 16, "A Modern Pirate"—Two Parts—Sept. 4).—Gloria, after running away with the auto of the young man who sought to flirt with her, drives to her country home, and there first relieves the anxiety of her father, brother and Doctor Royce over her whereabouts, and then frightens them more than ever by telling of the hair-raising adventure through which she has been. She insists that the man who murdered Freneau, her fiance, is even then plowing up the Hudson river aboard the barge from which she has just escaped, and that someone must go with her to capture him.

Doctor Royce and Gloria proceed to a point from which they can overlook the river and there in the distance they behold the barge just disappearing from sight. Gloria, Royce and Pierpont himself board the Stafford private yacht and set off in pursuit of Trask. When the murderer discovers he is being followed he shoots at the pilot in the wheelhouse of the yacht, wounding the man, but failing to stop the pursuit.

Later Doctor Royce wounds Trask and within a few moments the yacht has drawn alongside the barge and Trask, his daughter Nell, and Jed, his mate, all are made prisoners, and taken back to the Stafford country home. There David and Lois, his wife, as well as Judge Freeman are waiting their coming and Judge Freeman in particular fears the consequences, for he has warned Gloria that the capture of Trask will surely result in bringing more sorrow and unhappiness down upon her and those she loves, though he has refused to go farther in his explanation of what he means.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode 1, The Missing Watchman—Two Parts—Aug. 7).—The prologue opens with an interior view of the office of the editor of the New York Evening Journal. Mr. Brisbane is seated at his desk, dictating. His private secretary enters, and receives instructions. "Tad," the cartoonist, comes in with his "comic" for the day and receives an O. K. on it from Mr. Brisbane. As he leaves, the managing editor enters, accompanied by Beatrice Fairfax. The three engage in an animated conversation in which Beatrice Fairfax outlines certain work she has in mind and the prologue ends.

The first episode shows Beatrice Fairfax at her desk, opening her mail. One letter in particular interests her. It is signed by Mary Ryan, who tells the confidante that she believes her fiance, who is a watchman in a bank, is growing cold in his affection. The next scene shows the reportorial rooms of the New York Evening Journal. "Jimmy Barton," the star reporter, hurriedly enters with a story of a bank robbery. As he writes, Beatrice looks over his shoulder and, reading his copy, sees that suspicion points to the watchman of the bank. She recalls Mary Ryan's letter, and tells Jimmy. Beatrice and Jimmy hurry in a taxi to Mary's home. There they learn her story. There is, of course, "another woman." Meantime the bank robbers are seen enmeshing the watchman. He flirts with the "other woman" and she inveigles him into their den. There they bind and gag him and take his uniform. One of them impersonates him as the watchman at the bank. At midnight he admits his confederates. There is a thrilling scene, showing the robbers drilling the door of the vault. They escape with the money.

Mary's home is again shown. Beatrice and Mary start out to find Mary's rival, while Jimmy does some sleuthing. He trails a notorious bank robber to his home and hears him relate the story of the robbery to his mother. They catch Jimmy eavesdropping. A fight follows and the robber and his mother escape from the house. Jimmy hears groans in the cellar, and finds the bank watchman there bound and gagged. He tells Jimmy how the "other woman" led him into a trap at her home. Together they leave to locate the house.

Beatrice and Mary have reached there before them. The robber with whom Jimmy had the fight sees them peeping through the keyhole as the other robbers count their loot. Realizing they have ben trapped the robbers prepare for flight. After a desperate struggle, Beatrice and Mary are forced into a room, where one of the robbers, a doctor, sets fire to a mixture he has prepared which produces a deadly gas.

Beatrice and Mary are fast losing consciousness when Jimmy and the watchman, with a number of detectives arrive. There is a terrific battle with the robbers, all of whom are finally overpowered, the two women restored to consciousness and the funds of the bank recovered. There are explanations and a happy reunion between Mary and the watchman. Then Beatrice and Jimmy hurry to their office, where they write the story of the capture of the bank robbers and the recovery of the plunder for a midnight "extra."

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode 2, The Adventure of the Jealous Wife—Two Parts—Aug. 14).—Arturo Bocetti is the first violin of a theater orchestra. He has been married but a short time and lives most happily. The two are seen together in their music room. A letter comes addressed to Arturo. He is horrified to find it is from a gang of blackhanders, who demand $200. Unless he gives it to them, they write, they will kill his wife.

Arturo takes $200 from their scant horde, and leaves to comply with the blackmailers' demands. Marie, already suspicious, finds the money gone and decides the letter was from a woman and that Arturo took the money to spend upon her. She writes a note to Beatrice Fairfax, asking for advice.

Beatrice receives the letter just as Jimmy Barton, the star reporter on the paper, is given an assignment to hunt down a gang of blackhanders, because he "knows their lingo." She hurries to Marie while Jimmy, disguising himself as an Italian, is soon with the gang. Meantime, Arturo changes his mind and decides to notify the police. At the station house door he is warned that he will be killed, too, unless he complies.

Several days pass. The den of the blackhanders is shown. Two of them are making a bomb with which they intend to blow up Arturo's house, unless the money is paid. Jimmy, in his disguise, is playing poker with other members of the gang. Suddenly his coat sleeve is pulled back. It reveals an arm, white as a woman's, with the hand stained brown.

The gang is upon him, but Jimmy seizes the newly-finished bomb. The gang flees. They decide to act quick. The theatre is about to let out, and they wait for Arturo as he leaves the stage door. Marie, angered by Arturo's evasiveness, has summoned Beatrice, and they, too, wait at the stage door to see what he is doing. As he leaves Arturo is handed another note from the blackhanders, telling him to leave the money in the cup of a blind man on the corner, really one of their gang. Arturo drops the note and hurries away to comply. Marie springs out, picks up the note and she and Beatrice read it. Then Marie realizes how cruelly she has misjudged him. They hurry after Arturo, with the blackhanders following them. Before the two women can prevent it, Arturo places the money in the blind man's cup.

Beatrice and Marie reach the blind man a second before the blackhanders and grab the money. Their cries bring back Arturo. Beatrice, Marie and Arturo dash in the hallway, up a flight of stairs and into a photograph gallery, whose owner has just stepped out. They barricade themselves in. The blackhanders, unable to open the door, rush to the roof and drop down through the skylight. Unnoticed, Jimmy still in his disguise, has joined them. The gang is fast overpowering Beatrice, Marie and Arturo, when Jimmy, with the bomb in his hand appears. The blackhanders are terror-stricken at sight of the deadly tube and gladly surrender, just as the police arrive. Jimmy has a difficult time explaining his identity, but Beatrice finally recognizes him. Marie falls weeping on her husband's breast, declaring that had it not been for the advice of Beatrice Fairfax her whole life would have been wrecked.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode No. 3—"Billie's Romance"—Two Parts—Aug. 21).—Billie is a fourteen-year-old messenger boy. When he is not delivering messages, he is learning telegraphy. He delivers a telegram to Judge Richard Morton, from the warden of Sing Sing. It reads: "Peter Raven escaped. Thought to be headed for New York." Peter Raven is a desperate criminal. A scene shows Judge Morton sentencing him. Raven creates a disturbance in court and declares that his first act when he is free will be to kill the Judge.

While Billie is waiting for an answer to the telegram he encounters Judge Morton's daughter, Jean, aged twelve, in the hallway and falls in love with her. They are having a delightful conversation, when Jean's governess, Mme. Laurette, carries her off. Billie, with his first love sorrow, writes a letter to Beatrice Fairfax, asking for advice. Beatrice receives it just as Jimmy Barton, star reporter, is started out on the story of the escape of Peter Raven.

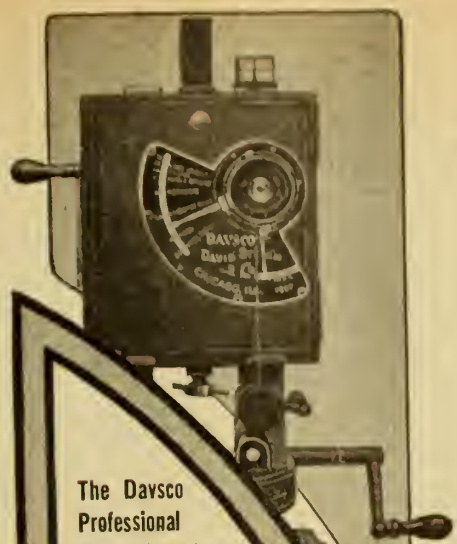
Jean writes a playful note to Billie, calling him her Knight, and asking him to save her from an imaginary ogre, her governess. Little does she know that the woman is a villainess. As Jean dispatches the note, Mme. Laurette receives a check for a trunk. She is the wife of Itaven. She hurries to the Pennsylvania Station, where she receives the trunk and takes it to her home. Inside is Itaven. They plan to kidnap Jean.

Meanthime Jimmy Barton, who has been sleuthing, discovers that Itaven has come to New York. He starts to trace the final destination of the trunk. Billie has received Jean's playful note and hurries to her home. When he arrives he observes suspicious actions between an alleged blind man and the governess. The latter, with a thimble on her finger, begins tapping on the window pane. Billie's quick ear detects the Morse code. She is sending the blind man a message regarding the plans for kidnapping.

Billie notifies Beatrice. The kidnapping plan is to steal Jean while she is taking her automobile ride with the governess. Jean and Mme. Laurette come out of the house and enter the automobile. The kidnappers follow in another car. Billie, desperate at the delay of Beatrice, hangs on the steps of the kidnappers' machine. When a lonely spot in the country is reached, the kidnappers pretend to have a breakdown and they halt the car containing the governess and Jean. When it stops they overpower the chauffeur, drag the child and escape with Billie still clinging to the step.

In the flight Billie is thrown from the car, but Beatrice soon appears and picks him up. They follow the kidnappers to a shack at the river's edge and burst in upon them just as little Jean is recovering consciousness. The kidnappers then throw Jean out of the window and into the stream below, but she is rescued by Billie.

Jimmy and two detectives row across the river to the kidnappers' house. With the detectives following, Jimmy burst into the room. Beatrice is rescued and Raven, Mme. Laurette and the other kidnappers overpowered. Beatrice, Jimmy, and Billie take Jean home. When the Judge and his wife learn of Billie's bravery, they promise that some day when the children are older, and Billie is earning more money, they will entertain the proposition that they wed. Jimmy and Beatrice hurry back to their office with another good story.



BEATRICE FAIRFAX (Episode No. 4—"The Stone God"—Two Parts—Aug. 28).—Jimmy Barton's city editor handed him a newspaper clipping with the heading, "Indian Prince at Biltmore; Rajo Jaibel arrives from Calcutta." Jimmy was told to interview the man, but the Prince refused to see him. While he was talking to the clerk, another Indian arrived and was escorted to the Prince's room. A bell-boy got Jimmy into the adjoining room, where he heard the Prince, his caller, and several other Indians discussing a plot to secure possession of a stolen idol and to "avenge Buddha." The only definite information Jimmy got was the address "220 Pelham Road," and the fact that something was to develop that night.

Jimmy returns to his office, defeated. While he is pondering, Beatrice Fairfax enters. She has just received a letter from a girl who tells her that her fiance has quarreled with her father, and asks if it would be right for her to elope. She signs the letter "Dorothy McRay, 220 Pelham Road." Jimmy and Beatrice note the address and start off to investigate.

The scene shifts to the McRay home and shows the quarel between Don Jordan and Dorothy's father, Christopher McRay. Jordan threatens the older man and is ejected from the house. Dorothy goes weeping to her room. McRay, alone, opens the door of a vault and brings forth the Stone God. He alone knows the combination of the vault. The inner door of the vault connects with an automatic revolver, so that if any other person, without the proper precaution, enters the vault, he will be greeted with a storm of bullets.

McRay's memories take him back to his bridal trip. The scene shows him with Dorothy's mother in India. In a jungle temple, his bride sees an image of Buddha, and longs to possess it. McRay offers to buy the god from the priest, who ejects him from the temple. A fight follows. That night McRay returns to the temple, overpowers the priest and steals the stone god. The priest, Ali Rajo Jaibel, takes an oath that Buddha will be avenged. The scene again shows McRay in his library, haunted by his memories. With a sigh he returns the stolen god to the vault. He closes the door but does not lock it. As he emerges, Rajo Jaibel, who has gained access to the house, slips from behind a curtain and stabs him. He leans over the prostrate form and tells him he is the priest from whom the god was stolen.

Ali opens the door of the vault. There is a fussilade of bullets and Ali drops dead inside the vault. With his last strength McRay staggers over and closes the door. Then he drops dead on a couch. While this tragedy is ending, Don gains entrance to the rear of the house to meet Dorothy, who agreed to elope with him. Hearing the shots in the library, he hurries there. The only thing that meets his gaze is McRay lying dead, and on the floor a knife. A maid hurries in, rushes screaming from the room and summons help. Don picks up the knife and is gazing at it in horror, when the police arrive. With them come Beatrice and Jimmy, who have just reached the house. Don is arrested for the murder, despite the protests of Jimmy and Beatrice.

Jimmy learns of the rendezvous of the East Indians and hurries there with Beatrice, satisfied that through them the mystery can be solved. The plotters are assembled and are listening to a recital of the tragedy by one of Ali's aides who accompanied him to the McRay residence and has returned. As they stand at the door, a look-out traps them. They are hurried into the adjoining room. One of the Indians is left to guard them while the others decide how they are to be killed.

Jimmy overpowers the guard, takes his turban and mantle, and, passing their excited companions, unlocks the door. Then he and Beatrice make a dash for liberty. They escape after a fight. Jimmy and Beatrice again reach the McRay home just as Don is being taken away to jail. Jimmy halts the police with the announcement that the real murderer can be found in the vault. When the door is opened, Ali is lying on the floor dead. Don and Dorothy are reunited.

THE LITTLE LIAR (Fine Arts—Five Parts—Sept. 10).—The cast: Maggie (Mae Marsh); Bobby (Robert Harron); Fanny (Olga Gray); Dick Slade (Carl Stockdale); boarding house keeper (Jenny Lee); Maggie's mother (Ruth Handforth); Maggie's father (Tom Wilson); matron of jail (Loyola O'Connor). Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.

Maggie McDonald, daughter of a poor laborer, is a problem to her parents because of her romantic temperament. Her unbelievable stories finally make them think her an incorrigible liar, and as a punishment she is placed out to work in a boarding house. There she meets with Bobby, a young reporter, Fanny, a shoplifter, and Dick Slade, floorwalker in a department store, and really an accomplice of Fanny.

The boarding house drudgery does not cure Maggie of her lying proclivities and when Fanny and Slade are in danger of being caught for a bold theft, they escape arrest by fastening the crime on Maggie, whose reputation as a liar acts against her and she is convicted.

Bobby continues to believe in her, however, and while she is on probation, he works to clear her of the stain of guilt. He finally succeeds, but not until Maggie has brought redisgrace on herself by her persistent fabricating. Finally disheartened by her treatment at the hands of the world, Maggie determines to write her own story on paper and then take poison. She is finally sent back to the judge, who placed her on probation with a recommendation that she be placed somewhere so that she may be cured by her failing.

The story Maggie has written is turned over to the judge, who reads it and recognizes the girl as a genius for fiction writing. At the same time Bobby presents the evidence he has collected and which not only clears Maggie of the crime for which she is to be punished, but fastens it on Fanny and Slade. Maggie, unaware, of course, of the turn events have taken, takes the poison. She is eventually saved from death; the judge announces his determination to make her his ward and to encourage her in her writing and she and Bobby start to work together to turn out some masterpieces of fiction. The parents and acquaintances of the young girl who have been so ready to brand her, now wish to idolize her, but the judge will not allow them to either see her or profit by the gift they have all but destroyed.

Another Fire---
Another J-M Asbestos Booth comes through intact and the machine was unharmed—ready for use again and just as good as ever.

What a record of protection.

And if a fire starts within a J-M Asbestos Booth it stays there. The buildings and their contents are completely protected from fires originating around the machine.

You can have this protection in the form of J-M Permanent, Semi-Portable and Portable Booths.

J-M Permanent and Semi-Portable Booths are strongly made of J-M Transite Asbestos Wood and angle iron, easily put up and quickly taken down. Especially adapted for permanent installation in theatres and large halls, schools and churches—highly fire-resistant and insulators against electricity. Complete ventilating systems are supplied with these booths when so desired.

The Portable Booths are made of J-M Asbestos Cloth, tented over an iron frame, which rests on an asbestos mat. Can be set up in 20 minutes.

Made by the makers of the Original J-M Asbestos Curtain

The nearest J-M Branch has an interesting booklet. Write to-day.

J-M Asbestos Booths conform to all the requirements of the insurance authorities and the inspection departments, wherever ordinances have been passed compelling the use of a fireproof booth.

Music Scores

and what Exhibitors think of them

Music was my only salvation

Music was my only salvation to raise my prices from 10 to 15 cts. admission and still hold my patrons and please them even more than the low price. If these scores should be withdrawn I feel it would be a serious drawback to Paramount Pictures.

E. A. RUPERT,
Mgr. Dream Theatre,

The soul of the film

We have used your music on all Paramount Pictures since April and will say that scores to fit the action on the screen are the soul of the film. Too much cannot be said in favor of using these scores.

JAMES HENRY CLARK,
Mgr. Isis Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

A screw loose somewhere

I have been an exhibitor for thirteen years and believe I know what I'm talking about. All I can say is that an exhibitor that won't use specially arranged music when he can has a screw loose somewhere.

"LIBERTY"

THE GREAT UNIVERSAL SERIAL

A Tremendous Hit in Every State in the Union

Immensely Popular With Everybody, Because it Portrays Just Exactly What is Happening NOW in Mexico

READ THE ACCOMPANYING CRITICISM.

"LIBERTY" is cleaning up for Exhibitors in every State in the Union—because it is the only Serial now on the market that brings home to the Public, all the very things that have happened and that are now happening on the borders of Mexico. Hundreds of thousands of people are crowding the houses of hundreds of Exhibitors nightly—where "LIBERTY" is being shown. The Public knows what it wants. Since the very first episode, people are fairly clamoring for each succeeding episode. 20 weeks of wonderful Serial photo-play. 20 weeks of thrills—wild adventure—golden romance—returning 20 solid weeks of profits to all Exhibitors who have booked and who are still to book this Master Serial. These are "FACTS" not just idle conversation. Book "LIBERTY" thru any of our 59 Universal Exchanges.

First Three Episodes.

Written and Produced by Jacques Jaccard.

Reviewed by Frederick W. Rath.

THE first three episodes of this serial were given an initial pre-release presentation at the Broadway Theatre. The writer was fortunate in securing a seat directly in front of three ladies who, it soon appeared—one will overhear conversations in spite of one's self—were ardent "fans," and in no way connected with the motion-picture industry. They were representative of the class of photoplaygoers who follow serials. And it is safe to assert that their unbiased, critical comments are typical of that class.

The way it struck the three ladies was like this: They watched the picture eagerly, and when the thrills came they "Ohed" and "Ahed" and in other ways gave vent to their emotions; they sympathized with the heroine and applauded the hero and were displeased at the villain. All of which struck the writer as being the highest praise that could possibly be given any picture. For in order to so affect photoplaygoers a picture must have all the elements that go into the making of a successful film—an appealing story, well constructed and perfectly presented as regards direction, acting, technical work, photography, tinting, composition, and all the other things.

This film, judging from the first three episodes, has been perfectly handled. Tho story, laid in Mexico and on the border, though slight in basic theme, carries a great appeal. It shows the atrocities perpetrated on the Americans by the Mexicans, affords numerous opportunities for battle scenes and daring horsemanship—some of the horsemen take big chances and certainly earn their serial salaries—and provides many thrills and big moments. And each episodo cnds in such a way and at such a place in the story that the spectator must surely experience that I'll-havo-to-sce-the-next-episode determination. Which, in serials, shows proper handling.

The acting maintains a high standard of excellence. The players are well chosen for their respective parts. Mario Walcamp, as the horoine, to whom life is just one hardship after another, registers horror and holplessness with great effectiveness, and, in addition—according to the critical ladies who have, unknowingly, furnished the groater part of this review—she rides a horse "wonderfully well," and looks "too cute for anything."

BLUEBIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC)

Increasing popularity of BLUEBIRD Photoplays is proving the widespread appreciation of the now famous policy "The Play's the Thing."

This appreciation, coming first from the public, is now attested by that sincerest form of flattery—imitation—on the part of other producers.

The BLUEBIRD policy has proven, in something more than thirty releases, that not only better acting, but better all 'round entertainment is assured the moving picture patron, when star productions supersede star players.

The now famous BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing" has been explained to the general public through the medium of attractive half-page advertisements in the Saturday Evening Post. Reaching over ten million readers every week with the story of BLUEBIRDS, Exhibitors everywhere are reaping the benefit with every BLUEBIRD Photoplay shown at their theatres.

You can share in the same popularity to the profit of your house.

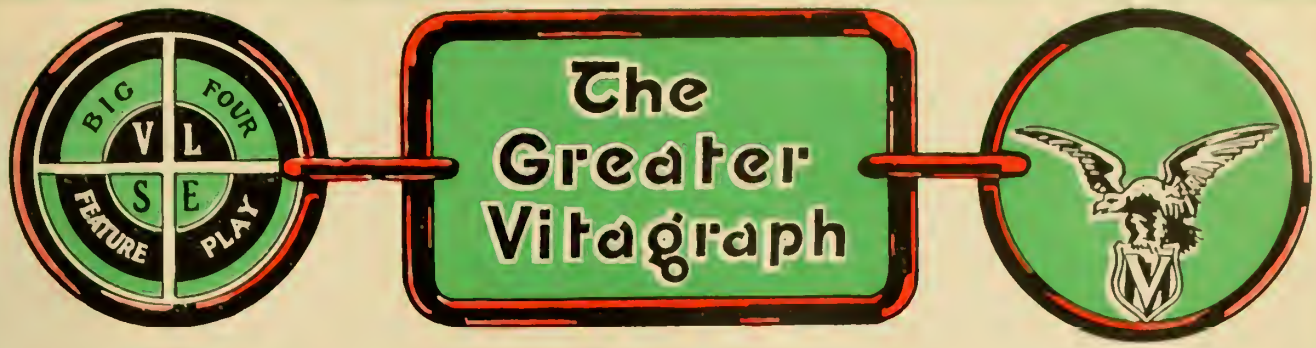
The One Complete and Consistent Service

For two years you have had the two greatest five-reel features produced each week, the productions of Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco and Pallas. On them you have built a solid foundation of success, because week in and week out you have had the best pictures in your town, the best people to see them, and as a result the best theatre in which to show them.

For eighteen months you have had Paramount Travel Pictures, first South America and Australia, and now the most popular ever offered, Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures.



For nearly a year you have had Paramount-Bray Cartoons, the surest every-week laugh producers your money can buy.

For over six months you have had Paramount Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen that has pulled your audience out of their chairs to take part in the entertainment.

Now you are to have Paramount Comedies

After two years of hard hunting, we have found comedies worthy of the Paramount Trademark. You can see the Black Diamond Comedy "Nearly a Deserter" at your exchange. Released October 2d.

The Welding of Two Gigantic Business-Building Forces.

THE name, "VITAGRAPH" has been all you have had to know about a film for the past twenty years.

The name, "GREATER VITAGRAPH" is a title which tempts the imagination.

The name, V-L-S-E stands for all that is Fair, Square and Upbuilding in moving picture business practices — for SERVICE — HELPFULNESS — COMMERCIAL EQUITY.

On September First Vitagraph and V=L=S=E Became One

Vitagraph brings to the absorption, unequalled resources in capital, capacity and experience. It offers the exhibitors of America the superlative productions of a twenty-five million dollar corporation.

To this allegiance, V-L-S-E brings a selling organization of twenty-three exchanges and a large sales staff, every one of whom has been carefully schooled for one purpose — THE FULLEST AND MOST CONSCIENTIOUS SERVICE TO THE EXHIBITOR.

To it also, the V-L-S-E brings sales policies which, by reason of their equity, have won for this company probably the greatest volume of good will ever achieved by any organization of any kind in a similar period of time.

The union of these two great forces into one compact, smooth-running WHOLE throws open the door of OPPORTUNITY to the exhibitors of America as it has never been opened before.

To

The Exhibitors of the United States and Canada

TWENTY years ago, the moving picture was born.

Twenty years ago the Vitagragh Company was organized, and for Twenty years the Vitagraph has blazed the way—

The pioneer for everything new in this great industry.

The same men who have stood at the Vitagraph helm during the past years—

The same bright minds that have worked to make Vitagraph the "GOLD STANDARD" in filmdom,

Are still at their posts.

BUT—

Eternal progress is eternal change.

Time and tide wait for no man, and

The passing of the years, sees the passing of old methods.

The wasteful system of many organizations under many heads endeavoring to produce a uniform program of uniform merit has passed.

Concentration and efficiency are the order of the day.

Vitagraph is concentrating that the Exhibitor may get the highest efficiency.

Vitagraph has arranged for a capital unheard of in motion picture finance.

Vitagraph has acquired the V-L-S-E and several important producing organizations, all of which will be concentrated under one management, so that

The highest efficiency may be applied to the production of the highest type of picture and Distributed in the most efficient way,

Therefore—

Exhibitor and Producer

Will profit by the concentrated effort of

To

The Exhibitors of the United States and Canada

TIME was in the motion picture industry, when the relations of the producers and the distributors on the one part, and the exhibitors on the other, were based on commercial enmity; when the producers and distributors did not know, and did not seem to want to know, the exhibitors, and vice versa.

Fortunately, a decided change has occurred. Now it is, that most everyone engaged in the three principal branches, seems to realize the moral as well as the financial value of commercial justice; that so intertwined are our interests, that a wrong perpetrated either from within or without, upon any one branch of the industry, equally affects us all; that we must know and understand each other, and our respective trials and difficulties; and that only actual co-operation, not pretense, can produce mutual respect, and promote the welfare of all alike.

It is self-evident that the exhibitors of the United States and Canada have recognized, since the inception of the V-L-S-E, its genuine policy of co-operation and commercial justice, and have returned it in full measure to the advantage both of themselves and of ourselves.

The announcement that the V-L-S-E becomes a department of the Vitagraph Company of America, means a decided increase in our ability to co-operate; for the handling of the product of but one great company, permits of concentration upon important service details. And it means that the desires, ambitions and tribulations of the exhibitors, will come direct to the producer, so that exhibitor and producer may work in the sincerest harmony. In other words from script to screen the manufacturer and the exhibitor will work together.

No change in the offices of the V-L-S-E, nor in their personnel will occur. The same permanent organization, with increased capacity, will co-operate with you.

We pledge to you that the door of this organization, and thus the Vitagraph door, will at all times be, as it has been in the past, open to the exhibitor, ahead of anyone else.

Barney Bernard

Creator of "Abe Potash" in "Potash and Perlmutter" Montague Glass play, makes his screen debut in

"Phantom Fortunes"

A five-reel comedy-drama
by Samuel Tauber
Produced by Paul Scardon

IS there romance in business? Look about you and see the fortunes that have been made in war speculation, miracles of sudden wealth that rival even the tales of the Arabian nights.

These are the visions of fortune that come to the simple, big-hearted clothing manufacturer that Barney Bernard plays in "Phantom Fortunes". Comedy, yes, but heartbreak too, when the swindle is revealed and his every penny is gone. Heartbreak, not for himself, but for his friends who lose with him.

But when the phantom fortunes go, real fortune comes to him, and there's joy and laughter and happiness in the end. It's a good, wholesome picture, this; a bit of life that has never been filmed before, and that never could have been filmed without Barney Bernard's inimitable humor, sympathy and deep understanding of his people.

The master drama of a super-criminal

"Through the Wall"

The great mystery story by Cleveland Moffett

Featuring Nell Shipman, William Duncan and George Holt

Produced by Rollin S. Sturgeon

HERE is a super-criminal, a fiend incarnate, a lord of the underworld, yet holding a high and respected place in society.

His mansion is a veritable chamber of horrors, an inquisition dungeon, into which he lures those who cross him in his career of crime. He comes and goes like a shadow, is here to-day and there to-morrow, ever a mystery, a wraith to his pursuers. They track him repeatedly, only to find themselves completely in his power.

The filming of this drama is a masterpiece of motion-picture production, so ingenious, so amazing is its purely mechanical side. And as a drama of mystery and daring imagination, it sounds a new note for screen possibilities.

No other crime drama of the films, no crook play of the stage may justly be compared with this six-reel Blue Ribbon Feature that heralds the day of Greater Vitagraph productions.

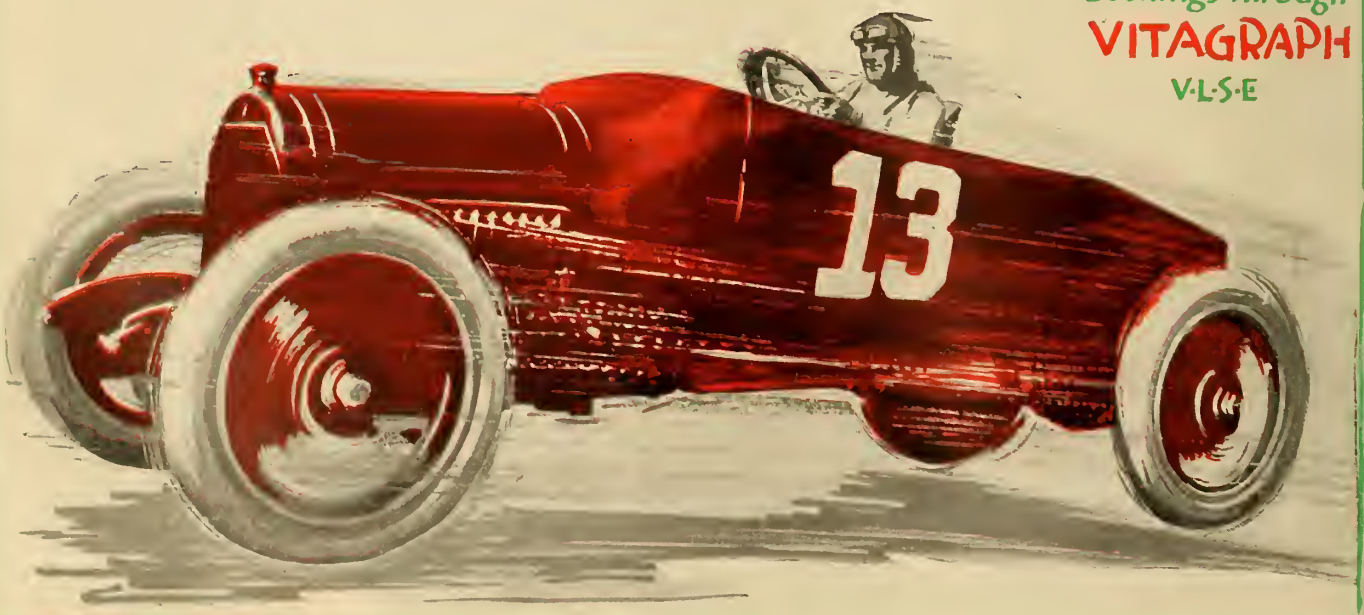
"The Scarlet Runner"

An Amazing Production

ONLY the unlimited resources of The Greater Vitagraph could have made possible this wonderful production. A fortune has gone into its making; it has taken over half a year of the untiring efforts of the producers. And the twelve different stories required twelve different companies of actors.

But the result has been obtained. "The Scarlet Runner," by reason of its twelve-times appeal—each separate and distinct but with Earle Williams always at the wheel—will set a new box-office record for serial productions.

Twelve two reel episodes



EACH episode being a complete story, "The Scarlet Runner" gives you

—twelve splendid love stories,
—twelve baffling mysteries,
—twelve beautiful heroines,
—twelve rousing adventures,
—twelve times the punch of the ordinary serial.

The entire series of twelve episodes is filmed and ready for you to see.

One episode released each week.

ARE YOU BOOKING

BEATRICE FAIRFAX?

Here is the testimony of one exhibitor who is

Tremont Theatre

New York, August 29th. 1916.

Mr. Joe S. Engel,
International Film Service, Inc.
729 Seventh Avenue,
Manhattan, New York City.

My dear Engel:-

Here's a "bumper" to BEATRICE FAIRFAX, another to the Fairfax series and let's have one more to the International Film Service.

The reason for this jubilee is that I played BEATRICE FAIRFAX in the above theatre last night to standing room only. When you take into consideration the restrictions placed on theatres owing to the epidemic, it is a remarkable tribute to the above series. In fact, it is the best attraction I have had in a year according to my box office receipts, and, what is still more pleasant to relate, the patrons were all pleased and are anxious to see the second episode.

Personally, I liked the picture because there is nothing forced or spectacular about it. It gives one the impression of looking at a little piece of real life taken almost haphazard from the busy teaming daily routine of a big city newspaper. I sincerely believe you have a winner and one that the exhibitors will surely be benefited by.

With best wishes for your success, I am,

Sincerely yours,

Edwin W. Tregay

A NEWSPAPER IN PICTURES

THE HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL is backed by the greatest news gathering organization in the world. Its pictures are gathered and edited by trained newspaper men.

THE HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL is advertised to the public in all the Hearst publications.

THE HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL boasts the only two news photographers with the European armies—Ariel Varges with the British at Salonika, and Nelson Edwards with the German army on the western front.

THE HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL has established its reputation by regularly showing the world's big news events in pictures as well as an exclusive high grade fashion section.

Wonderful Scenic Pictures New Feature of Split Reel

Curtis Pictures Called "Greatest Marvel of Motion Picture Photography"

Mr. Exhibitor, we know you want to show the people who come to your theatre the best there is.

You want to show them new ideas in pictures—pictures that are out of the ordinary—pictures that are above the accepted standards.

LET US SHOW YOU HOW YOU CAN DO IT.

Mr. Edward S. Curtis is admittedly the greatest of all photographers of nature and out-door life. He is more than a photographer—he is a great artist. His still pictures for years have been eagerly sought by wealthy collectors and art connoisseurs. It is not unusual for a portfolio of his photographs of Indian groups and Rocky Mountain scenery to bring FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS AT AN ART SALE.

Mr. Curtis is now devoting his great artistic ability with the camera to the production of motion pictures of nature's wonders.

W. STEPHEN BUSH, OF THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD, RECENTLY DESCRIBED MR. CURTIS'S SCENERY PICTURES AS "THE GREATEST MARVEL OF MOTION PICTURE PHOTOGRAPHY."

These beautiful film interpretations of America's natural scenery are to be released by the INTERNATIONAL FILM SERVICE, INC., as a part of its weekly split reel release.

In this release you have an opportunity to show the people who come to your theatre pictures of unequalled standard and artistic quality.

Combined with the Curtis pictures in this release will be 500 feet of animated cartoons by the world's most famous comic artists.

The artists whose animated cartoons appear in this split reel are known to millions of newspaper readers throughout the United States.

THEY MAKE MILLIONS LAUGH EVERY MORNING AND EVERY AFTERNOON. Those same happy readers are anxious to see on the screen the animated cartoons of their favorites among the comic artists.

In the split reel releases are the

"Jerry on the Job" by Hoban.

Celebrated cartoons by T. E. Powers.

"Krazy Kat" by Herriman.

"Happy Hooligan" and "Maud the Mule" by Opper.

The "split reel" release has already become a popular institution with the exhibitors and with the public. The new feature—the Curtis Scenic pictures—will be added to this reel for a first release on September 25th.

Don't miss this splendid single reel feature.

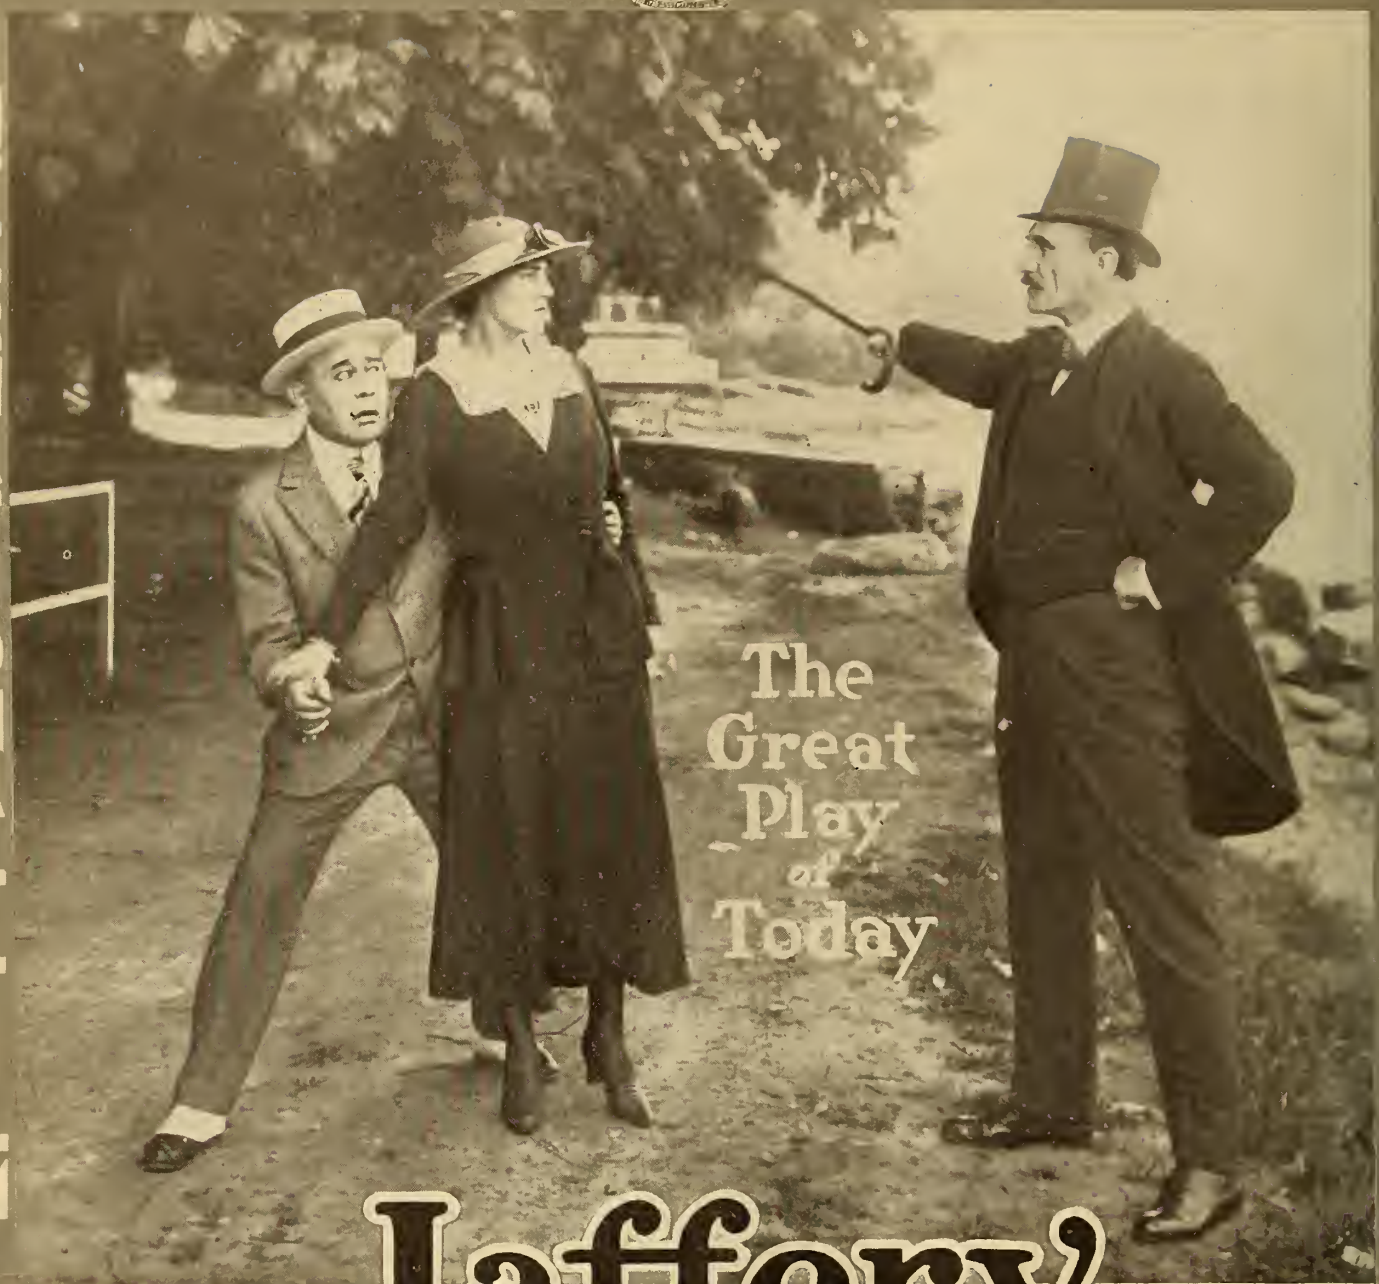
MYSTERIES OF MYRA

Of course you remember the great advertising and publicity campaign for "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA."

It is still fresh in the public mind. A great proportion of the people who read the novelization of "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" and were impressed by the advertising campaign, have not yet seen the pictures.

They want to see them.



Many exhibitors are now booking "THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA." These exhibitors realize that this is the time to reap the benefits of the full force of that great advertising campaign.

"THE MYSTERIES OF MYRA" has made a great deal of money for a host of exhibitors. It can be relied upon to make big money for other exhibitors who have not already booked it.

MUTUAL NEWS

"What's Going On In The Mutual"

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY THE MUTUAL FILM CORPORATION. 68 EXCHANGES

VOL. I. SEPTEMBER 16, 1916 No. 1

This Season Holds Big Opportunities For the Exhibitor

THE opening of the fall season of 1916 finds the exhibitor facing a most prosperous season. Wages are higher than ever before. Every factory and manufacturing plant is running at full capacity. The crops are bounteous and the products of the farm are selling at higher prices than ever before. Banks are fairly bulging with deposits. The great American republic is feeling "flush" and is seeking entertainment. Every exhibitor is bound to prosper accordingly.

Realizing the opportunity afforded, the Mutual Film corporation has prepared to assist exhibitors in every way. Never before were such tremendous feature productions available. A host of famous stars have for months been making Mutual Star Productions—big-feature pictures of exceptional quality. Now these subjects are ready for release. They may be seen now at any of the 68 Mutual exchanges. There are Mary Miles Minter productions, a series of five and six-reel features by famous authors, all starring the charming little actress, Mary Miles Minter; Richard Bennett productions, starring the famous star of the speaking stage, who made his film debut in the Mutual feature "Damaged Goods;" Kolb & Dill productions, featuring the inimitable pair of German comedians who have proved a riot wherever they have appeared; Florence Turner productions which bring back to the screen the famous star who was long known as America's foremost screen favorite—besides a score of other good things.

New Chicago Exchange.

The Mutual exchange in Chicago is now nicely settled in its new home, on the eighteenth floor of the Consumers building, on the corner of State and Quincy streets, and Manager B. F. Judell and his big corps of assistants are better equipped than ever to take care of patrons. A whole floor is occupied by the exchange and its various departments, but the boys have been so busy that they haven't even had time to look across Lake Michigan and see the whitecaps roll in against the breakwater, though a lot of the exhibitors found it an inspiring sight during the last hot spell.

One of the forthcoming William Russell Mutual Star Productions, "The Torch Bearer," is a thrilling story of newspaper life, and is full of punch and snap from start to finish.

"The Count" Is The Newest Chaplin

Proclaimed by everyone who has seen it "the best one yet!" Charlie Chaplin's newest feature offering, "The Count," is setting the whole country laughing. It is brimming full and running over with typical Chaplin antics, and just to make certain that he has overlooked no laugh-getters, the inimitable Charlie adds a few brand-new capers for good measure.

From the moment when Charlie first appears with his tape measure, in a tailoring establishment, until he vanishes from sight down the street after a day in high society, there is no let-up—one laugh piles upon another, until your sides fairly ache. In this two-reel offering Charlie resorts to his old-time makeup, with the familiar baggy trousers, the funny cutaway coat, his dinky derby, diminutive mustache, slender cane and Chaplin shoes. Supporting Chaplin in "The Count" are Edna Purviance, Eric Campbell, Leo White and Charlotte Mineau.

Exhibitors will be instantly able to take advantage of Chaplin's box-office value, for hundreds of prints are available at the Mutual film exchanges and immediate bookings can be secured.

Larry Trimble is the director of "Grim Justice," the Florence Turner Mutual Star Production released this week.

Mary Miles Minter American's New Star In Six Big Features

MARY MILES MINTER, the little lad who won fame in "The Littles Rebel" on the speaking stage and en deared herself to hundreds of thousand all over the country, has just made he debut in Mutual releases. Six Mutual Sta Productions in which Mary Miles Minter l the bright particular star, are about com pleted at the American studios in Sant Barbara, California, and more will ulti mately follow.

James Kirkwood, the man who ros to fame as Mary Pickford's director and who stands for the very best i picture production, was signed b President S. S. Hutchinson of the Ameri can Film company, and is producing th Minter Star Productions. The titles o the first six Minter productions ar "Youth's Endearing Charm," "Dulcie' Adventure," "Faith," "Dream or Tw Ago," "Lisette" and "Innocence."

"Youth's Endearing Charm."

The Minter Star Production just re leased is "Youth's Endearing Charm," and is an ideal vehicle for the wonder ful personality of this most youthful o screen favorites. The story is from the pen of Maibelle Heikes Justice, and gives Miss Minter a chance to appear as her own girlish self, sweet, unspoiled and pretty. Six reels are taken for the telling of how "Orphan Mary," a deso late little girl, after a long battle with starvation in the slums of a great city goes to an orphanage and at last wins the attention of a wealthy and kindly woman, who adopts her as her own. "Zippy," the little tramp dog, who shares honors with the star, wins his way straight into hearts. The beautiful exteriors taken in the Santa Ynez valley startle by their uniqueness.

Box Office Value.

In presenting to their patrons Mary Miles Minter in "Youth's Endearing Charm," exhibitors will be offering an attraction that will not only appeal to their daily clientele of "fans," but will also probably be able to win to their theaters hundreds of people who perhaps rarely visit motion-picture houses, but who will be attracted by the name of the little star they saw a few years ago on the speaking stage.

"His Brother's Keeper" is the title selected for the second Richard Bennett Mutual Star Production, the first of which, "The Sable Blessing," has just been released.

Facts and Comments

IT IS the common opinion of all film men who have given any thought to the subject that the film export from America to the rest of the world will undergo revolutionary changes after the war quite irrespective of the ending of the war. To discuss this subject in all of its phases would require far more space than we have at our disposal here, but to one aspect of the situation we must make a brief allusion. We refer to the Latin-American market. Do our American producers know or do they care to know that at this time there are more film buyers for South America in Italy and in France than ever before? So insistent has been the demand for films in Latin-America that Italy enjoys exceptional film prosperity in spite of the war. It is getting the best prices with a minimum of production. There have been sporadic Latin-American film buyers up here, but their welcome has not been what they expected. It seems incomprehensible to us that with the dwindling profits of the European market the American producer with one or two exceptions simply refuses to heed the opportunities of this new outlet for his productions.

EXHIBITORS in this city are jubilant over the announcement made by Health Commissioner Emerson, who said he would permit the motion picture theatres to admit children more than twelve years old on and after Labor Day. License Commissioner Bell has been notified. The original order it will be remembered prohibited the admission of children under 16. These two officials, Health Commissioner Emerson and License Commissioner Bell, have been sympathetic in their attitude toward the exhibitors and have realized the harshness of the original order, which has now been so substantially modified.

WE ARE indebted to E. R. Pearson, an exchange man in a Western city, for a series of terse, epigrammatic "drives" against censorship. We will print them at an early date but to give our readers a taste of their quality here is one that scores an easy bullseye:

If a newspaper continuously reflects an attitude naturally contrary either to the wants, education, tastes or practicability of a people, it shortly disappears from circulation for want of enough subscribers to make it pay.

Likewise, a theater that shows what people don't want to see must close for want of patronage. And the manufacturer and exchange circulating such films must close for want of profit.

Does there still live an "I" so egotistical as to think that the other hundred million are in danger of demoralization because that "I" doesn't censor Motion Pictures before the rest can see them?

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is glad to see the exhibitors of the three Maritime Provinces of Canada get together and organize for the promotion of the common welfare. The moving spirits in the plan evidently have the right idea as will be seen by the appeal for organization printed on another page of this week's issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We are stronger than ever in our belief that through the increase of the exhibitors influence in the industry the whole industry will be benefited.

* * *

KANSAS exhibitors in convention at Topeka have opened the fight against censorship in that state with a determination to wipe a particularly obnoxious and confiscatory law off the statute books. They are at a disadvantage in that they have a law to repeal, but that disadvantage is partly overcome by the general feeling throughout the state that censorship is being used as a means of collecting revenue rather than as a measure of correction. Proposed censorship measures have been generally looked upon as "strike bills" in other states, but it has remained for Kansas to turn censorship to this sordid use. Savors of blackmail.

Creative Method—Ibsen

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE have been artistic representations of the Ibsen dramas on the screen, remarkable for accuracy of types, settings and atmosphere, but no attempt has been made to profit from the methods he used, at least not so as to obtrude upon attention. It is not to be greatly wondered at that American audiences have not been invariably enthusiastic about his dramas—he drew from the social ferment of his time and place—because of our optimism. People here are up against the same restraints of native ability as in older countries, but our general environment is broader, and our circumstances as a whole people offer greater opportunity for the individual and keep the fires of hope ever burning.

Exactly the same spirit of protest may boil within us at times, human protest against wrong and injustice is universal among intelligent people, but we feel less hampered by institutions created in the past and unsuited to present social conditions. We feel a greater sense of freedom. Though we may not be free, the idea of liberty has been strongly planted in our hearts, and we know that is bound to grow in the sunshine of superior enlightenment.

The Ibsen message has not been without effect—he was American in his faith—he did not place the instinct of self-preservation above that human love which reaches beyond self—but it is his technique that concerns us in this new art, his tremendously impressive method of mirroring contemporaneous life in dramatic form. The dominant note in that method is critical judgment, ability to discover and pass upon the merits and faults of our existence as organized. Whether in tragedy or comedy, or in the expanse between, the Ibsen method relies on social criticism and its impress is profound.

Ibsen disassociated wealth from nobility, showing that large accumulations of money, when not resulting from chance or heredity, much the same thing, often grew out of avarice, cruelty and the meanest of human characteristics. That sweetness of compassion which makes life beautiful rarely grows in the gardens of the rich. Instead of attempting the hackneyed "situation" he depended upon penetrative interpretation of what he gathered from actual existence. Instead of reflecting the mere surface of human action and conduct, the theatrical method, he turned an X-ray on motive.

Instead of devising a situation, as might be done in farce comedy, he sets out to reveal and redeem, as serious art must, and lets his high situation grow of the characters and their circumstances. This is the natural way and the easiest way. Given a motif and strong characters with motives at variance and the big situation comes of itself, granting that the author's character conceptions are clear. What they have done in the past leads straight to a crisis so sure that it seems predetermined.

Are we falsely interpreting the pretenses of certain men who mask their villainy with public exhibitions of benevolence? Ibsen turns on his X-ray and shows them to be what they are, and the deeds they are covering furnish him with an abundance of interesting material. The successful dramatist must perceive where others are misled by false lights on the shore, his aim that of science, to get at the truth, but this implies a mind capable of contemplating dispassionately the perplexities of conduct and the complexities of character. If each age is to improve its people, we must have men who combine in themselves clear understanding of the age and its needs, together with ability to reach the people through some powerful medium.

"Not at all," says the young man who has picked up an idea marked 18-carat and imagines that there can be no false identification of value, "a play must not be a propaganda." He unconsciously propagates his own superficial grasp of the subject. Nearly every play called "great" has transmitted from the author to the people his doctrine, his belief, his system, his views of humanity as it is, or as it should be. Ibsen's announced ambition was "to depict human beings, human emotions, human destinies, upon a groundwork of certain of the social conditions and principles of today."

Ibsen's method is to first set forth his doctrine in brief memoranda. That for "A Doll's House" is "Modern society is no human society; it is solely a society for males." His next step is to search his memory, or the experience of others, for some story which might be made to fit the leading idea. His mind now begins to gather characters for the story. Starting with a theme, he makes up his mind in a general way what his drama will be like. He next notes down certain main points he wishes to make. He next attempts a general characterization.

He is to gather action around a woman of the day in "Ghosts." He says in a general way, "These women of today, ill-treated as daughters, as sisters, as wives, not educated according to their gifts, withheld from their vocation, deprived of their heritage, embittered in mind—these it is who furnish the mothers of the next generation. What will be the consequence?" Once his subject matter well in mind,—and here is where most dramatists fail,—he makes a synopsis, or a more elaborate memorandum, and begins to have an idea of his groundwork, but instead of driving straight at the play, he develops a scenario.

An application of this method to the big screen story would be to write a rude scenario of the action. In the first act the characters do so and so, in the second so and so, and so on, to determine, if for no other purpose, whether or not there is sufficient material for five reels. The writer may otherwise reach his crisis long before the fifth reel with a resultant amplification in the wrong place. This skeleton libretto of the five acts would also make for better construction, one in which elements of suspense are carefully guarded.

Ibsen worked in a purely scientific manner from his scenario forward to the first version of his play. The "scenario of acts" in the five-reel screen story would operate in the same way, though it might be subjected to radical modifications. It would foreshadow the action in a general way at certain periods. With the imagination aflame, one is apt to run over, or under, requirements, whereas creative ability would not be hampered by the necessity of limiting action, nor even by a needed amplification. The imagination can be trained to work in harness.

In the last revision of a script,—and there should be at least one,—attention should be concentrated on the little revelations of mind and heart which greatly enhance the finished interpretation. This is also an Ibsen method worth trying. Ibsen felt that he must know his characters down to the "last fold of their souls." Every author knows that he must actually live the lives of his principal characters, even through those experiences which precede action in the drama. Only through such an acquaintance can be attained intense dramatic effect.

Abuses of the Deposit System

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE present flagrant abuses of the advance deposit system cannot but result in loss to the firms that are guilty of them. I know of instances of this abuse occurring in every part of the country. Many exchanges are in the habit of collecting advance deposits by c. o. d. orders on the exhibitor's daily show. I know of one case where an exhibitor was compelled to pay a large sum of money claimed to be due as an advance deposit. He either had to pay the c. o. d. or go without his show. It turned out afterwards that no such sum was due, that there had been an error on the part of some one in the exchange. An apology followed and the exhibitor was promised a feature without charge to show the "good faith" of the exchange. The "free feature" came in due course of time loaded down with a c. o. d. for more than twice the ordinary cost of a feature.

Exhibitors complain especially about the advance deposit exaction in the case of serials. It is a well-known fact that many serials have started off with a grand promise of success only to tail off into commonplace. As matters stand now the exhibitor must take an entire serial and pay for every episode away in advance. Such methods are not only harsh and oppressive on the exhibitor, but they will in the long run hurt the producer and the exchange resorting to them. Burdened by such handicaps the exhibitors can make no money and will have no money to spend. The exhibitors are absolutely dependent upon their public. Now it has happened more than once that a serial showed a rapid decline in quality after a most auspicious beginning. The public will resent this rapid decline in quality and stay away. Paralysis strikes the box office on the serial nights. It is not only unfair but decidedly stupid business policy to expect the exhibitor to keep on paying big prices for what his patrons have emphatically rejected.

The complaints about abuses of the advance deposit system are too persistent and too numerous to be dismissed with the statement that "the fly-by-night exhibitor cannot be trusted." At this stage in the history of the motion picture "the fly-by-night exhibitors" are few and far between and altogether a negligible percentage of the great exhibiting body upon which this industry depends for its existence and its prosperity. When men who have been in the exhibiting business for years and who have always paid their bills promptly are bothered with sudden c. o. d.s, when owners of large theaters are having constant difficulty in getting back the full amounts of their deposits when they quit a certain group of producers there is something wrong with the producer and with the exchange rather than with the exhibitor.

It is all very well to say that this is a cash business and that the patrons pay cash in the first instance. The fact is that the profit, if any there be, must be sought in the average and that many a night of all the cash taken in not a cent can be set aside for the payment of the films. It is the end of the week or the end of the month which tells the tale and it then happens not infrequently that there has been no profit. Recently with the excessive heat and the infantile paralysis, profits have been dwindling at a rapid rate. The exhibitors do not want to use films without paying for their use, but they want to be free from exactions and extra handicaps such as advance payments for a month or more

The exhibitor is the foundation of this business and if he is what some exchanges think him to be: an habitual defaulter in his payments, the motion picture industry could never have lasted as long as it did and its future would be altogether precarious.

We are glad to see that the organized exhibitors of the country are going to take up the question of these abuses in good earnest. If the National League can put a stop to unjust and often unlawful exactions of this sort it will establish itself in the good graces of every man interested in the profession of exhibiting motion pictures to the public.

The Reader's Revenge

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE Moving Picture World never was and never expects to be a subsidized publication. It offers to its advertisers the largest circulation among exhibitors, it lends to every line of its advertising pages the prestige and confidence which it has earned in the course of its long and useful career. Its co-operation is gladly given to any cause or to any individual when the welfare of the entire industry seems to demand it, but we repeat that the Moving Picture World is not a subsidized publication. A publicity sheet cannot live without subsidy. Now every form of subsidy is more or less of a bribe or to phrase it more charitably a fund for the promotion of extraneous interests.

There is all the difference in the world between a subsidy and an advertisement though the distinction between the two terms is often lost sight of by myopic and callow press agents. The history of journalism from Gutenberg's day to the date of this issue of the Moving Picture World does not record a single case where an openly subsidized publication survived for any length of time. Hence the case of an openly subsidized publication is nowadays about as rare as a heat prostration in January. There still remains the more insidious and therefore more dangerous form of subsidy—the secret or the implied subsidy. We know that there are newspapers right in this city whose circulation and influence have fallen into pitiful decay just because of a suspicion in the public mind that they are either owned or subsidized by certain special interests inimical to the public welfare. Nomina sunt odiosa.

Dangerous as is the taint of subsidy to the daily paper it is absolutely fatal to a trade publication. Here it implies prostitution in all the abhorrent meaning of the word. When the advertiser is sure of a flattering review just because he advertises and not because he is honestly entitled to it his advertisement is such in name only; in fact it is the first part of a corrupt bargain; the foundation of a dishonest barter and exchange at the expense of the reader. No amount of sophistry can obscure this plain simple honest fact. The quick-witted readers, the successful men in the business will discover the fact quickly and without the aid of magnifying glasses. Eventually all the readers will find it out and the publicity sheet plucked of all its pretentious plumage by the pitiless hand of Truth will stand forth in all its nakedness. Then it is that the very men who paid for the prostitution with advertisements in disguise will gather around the pillory and jeer at the saddening spectacle. The publication which thus sells its soul has ceased to be of use to the men who debauched it and it is cast aside with words of scorn.

The reader's vengeance is bound to come to every subsidized sheet. It means nothing less than a total loss. Some times it is less swift than at other times but it is as inevitable as Fate in the Greek tragedy.

Montagu Revives Old Memories

Ancient Film History in Moving Picture World Convention Number Starts Him Going

The Editor Moving Picture World, New York:

Dear Sir—I have just received your convention number of July 15th. It is a long time since I have read anything that has interested me so much, as in the various articles dealing with the early days of the moving picture, I am reading of people whom in very many cases I helped to start in the business, or who started when I was selling films for Pathe in Chicago.

In the first place, if my letter is not too late, I would like to enter into the controversy as regards the first picture store show in Chicago, and to my mind there is no question, and never has been, but that the first house was the one owned by Harry Davis at the corner of State and Harrison streets. I well remember Aaron Jones opening his house next to the Palm House, and I think he will confirm that in order to open up he had to buy a large stock of mantles from the people who owned the store. He did an enormous business here, and in the minds of the pioneers of the business a house on this side of State street was considered the ideal location in the whole of the U. S. A. However, the property owners would not allow it to continue, and he had to move across the street.

Many of the people who are today magnates in the film business were then starting in a small way. I well remember Bill Swanson when he operated at this first store show. One had to be like a monkey and climb up a pole into what was a small iron closet at the top, where there was no room to move. What a difference between this and the palatial operating boxes of today.

One of the early pioneers also were the Aitkins, of Triangle fame. They started with a small interest in a little theater on State and Van Buren streets, and many a Sunday have I seen Harry Aitkin standing at the door asking people to walk in.

It may interest you to know that at that time when I was selling films for Pathe and had the whole territory west of the Ohio River, that it was naturally to my benefit to increase the number of purchasers of films, and I think Carl Laemmle will confirm that I persuaded him, as I did many others, to start in the rental business; in fact, Laemmle wanted me to become an equal partner with him when he started.

I always took the credit, and it may seem a tall statement to make, but I feel certain it is true, that I started more people in the film rental business than anyone else has ever done.

If you go back to those early days at the start of the store show, one should not forget the craze there was for this form of amusement all over the country towards the fall of 1906. Everyone who could raise the price of a machine and rent a small store started in the business; and in a small village in Texas, the name of which at the moment I cannot remember and which at the time was not marked on my map, there were fifteen store shows, all of whom were obtaining their films from Chicago, and in those days there were no exchanges in the South.

Remarkable as it may seem, there was one of the biggest renters at that time who was so overwhelmed by the number of new places that had cropped up that he used to open his mail in the morning and take out the checks, and throw the rest of the letters into the basket; and sometimes I have seen as many as twenty telegrams come to him in a day ordering film, none of which would be taken the least notice of.

Carl Laemmle will bear out that in those days when they only changed once a week in the country, when the end of the week drew near the renter would find himself with not enough film to supply the customers he had taken, and about Thursday he and the other renters would rush around to me and would say, "We want to buy 30,000 or 40,000 feet of film [as the case might be] in order to fill our orders"; and they would have to take whatever films I had left in stock, as in those days there was no one else from whom they could get their films, with the exception of the Vitagraph Company, which shortly afterwards started to keep a small stock in Chicago.

As representing Pathe I used to try to carry a stock of all films we had put out, although it was difficult, as in those days all the films had to come from Paris as there was no American factory.

I have often told the tale how I found myself getting landed with the scenics and films such as a bull fight, the marriage of King Alphonso of which Paris used to send me several copies. One week, in order to clear these out, when the film renters came around for their films, I had the good stuff packed away out of sight and told them to help themselves out of the closets, with the result that they took 85,000 feet of shelf film that week. Those were the days!

I must say there was a lot of enjoyment then attached to the film business, and practically most of the agents and manufacturers in Chicago used to meet each day for lunch. George Kleine, W. N. Selig, George Spoor, Johnny Rock, Jack Hardin (then representing the Edison Company) and myself nearly always lunched together, and although in strong rivalry with one another, compared notes and worked more amicably than one could imagine was possible, and your present correspondent, James McQuade, frequently joined us at the table and was heartily welcomed.

I do not know whether this letter will be published or not, but I should very much like to be remembered to all my old friends.

Yours very truly,
E. H. MONTAGU.

ELIZABETH BURBRIDGE WITH POWELL.

Elizabeth Burbridge, long known to film fans through her work in Essanay and Ince productions, has been engaged by Frank Powell and will appear in support of Creighton Hale, Linda A. Griffith and Sheldon Lewis in the first feature of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc.

Miss Burbridge early commenced her career before the camera. She worked as an extra for D. W. Griffith, went into dramatic stock, and returned to pictures to play leads for Lubin. She next was leading woman for Kinemacolor during the regime of the late David Miles, and also for the Frontier-Universal Company. After six months in comedy she signed with New York Motion Picture Company under Thos. H. Ince. An engagement for Mutual Masterpieces, in which she featured, followed, and she also played ingenue roles in several of the Triangle productions.

Essanay placed her under contract and in her first picture, "Blind Justice," in which she played opposite Henry Walthall, she scored a substantial personal success.

In addition to her activities before the camera Miss Barbridge has written, and, more important, seen produced, several scenarios.

AARON CORN JOINS SHERRY FORCES.

Aaron A. Corn has been added to the Wm. L. Sherry offices as salesman, covering Manhattan and the Bronx, New York City. Mr. Corn began work in his new position August 21 and has been spending most of his time receiving congratulations and well wishes from his friends among the exhibitors, where he is well known through his long connection with the picture business.

Mr. Corn comes directly from the International Film Company. Previous to this connection he was with the Pathe Company and is covering practically the same territory for the Paramount Program that he previously covered when with these companies. He is best known, however, as a theater manager, having successfully managed big theaters in New York City for several years before entering the exchange business. He is, therefore, in close touch with the exhibitor's problems and needs and just the man exhibitors want to see.

"MANNY" GOLDSTEIN RETURNS FROM TOUR OF EXCHANGES.

"Manny" Goldstein, assistant to M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Universal exchanges, has returned to the New York offices of the Universal after a ten months' tour through the west, visiting Universal exchanges. Manny's tour included Chicago, Pittsburgh, Denver, Salt Lake City, Butte, Montant, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Universal City, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, Des Moines, Wichita and a half thousand way stations around and between. Manny's task was to help local exchange managers boost their sales and to suggest publicity stunts to local Universal press agents.

Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay in Combination

New Organization Will Distribute All Feature Subjects Through the George Kleine Exchanges—Formal Announcements From Selig and Essanay

CONFIRMING the Moving Picture World's story, published in last week's issue, to the effect that Selig and Essanay had withdrawn from V-L-S-E and would in all probability form a new combination with George Kleine, comes an authorized statement from Mr. Kleine, made in Chicago, to the effect that the new organization was finally completed on Saturday, September 2, the several elements being Kleine, Edison, Selig and Essanay. The surprise comes in the inclusion of the Edison company, which had not been mentioned in the numerous rumors of the impending combination, and which now properly entitles the new organization to the appellation "The Big Four."

According to Mr. Kleine, negotiations for the inclusion of the Edison company had been under way for several weeks prior to the consummation on Tuesday, August 29.

The new combination will take over all the releases of the Selig and Essanay companies previously handled by V-L-S-E, and these, with the new product of the four concerns, will be distributed by the George Kleine Exchanges. In the near future important announcements will be made of features that will be released by the new combination. Plans have been already well laid for the entire year beginning from the date of organization.

As president of the General Film Company, Mr. Kleine announces that he had had actively in hand for some time past the fall program of that company, which will include important releases of Selig and Essanay in addition to the product of the Eastern manufacturers in short films. Mr. Kleine states that there is a fine prospect for excellent business from the General Film Company's program, and that if conditions warrant it, manufacurers will give just as much attention to short subjects as they will to features, and that so far as possible the shorter program subjects will be of feature quality. Mr. Kleine was particular to emphasize at the close of the interview that the Kleine-Edison-Selig-Essanay combination will release its features on the open booking plan.

Formal announcements from William N. Selig and George K. Spoor follow:

Selig's Statement.

William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, has verified the news that has been in circulation for the past week or so to the effect that the Selig Company has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E-, Inc., Mr. Selig has issued the following statement:

"The Selig Polyscope Company has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E and will release Selig Red Seal Plays, of five reels or more in length, through other channels, which will be announced in the near future. It can be stated that a number of very attractive and flattering propositions made the Selig Company are being carefully considered and in due time a decision will be arrived at which may not only be surprising but will also be interesting to all those interested in the motion picture art. The Selig Company leaves the V-L-S-E with the best of good feeling and we can only state that the decision to withdraw from that organization was not one hastily resolved.

"The Selig Company has in preparation and also ready for release a number of unusually excellent pictures. Among the five-reelers can be named 'The Country That God Forgot.' This production features Tom Santschi in a most worthy character part and he is well supported by such artists as George W. Fawcett, Mary Charleson, Victoria Forde and others. Marshall Neilan wrote and directed the drama which is cast in the atmosphere of the western desert. There is a hand to hand fight in 'The Country That God Forgot,' which to my mind is very unusual. This battle carries thrills and suspense and yet the audience does not see a blow passed."

The motion picture trade will be greatly interested in the future plans of the Selig Company.

Statement from Essanay.

Essanay has withdrawn from the V-L-S-E, Inc., the withdrawal to take effect September 16. This announcement has just been made by George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay company. Mr. Spoor gives "business reasons" as the cause for the withdrawal. He states that a new organization for releasing Essanay features will be announced in the near future. Mr. Spoor's official statement in regard to the withdrawal is as follows:

"On and after September 16, 1916, Essanay features will be withdrawn from the V-L-S-E, Inc., branch office, and thereafter will be released through another agency, which will be announced shortly."

This statement confirms the reports which have been printed recently in regard to the separation from the V-L-S-E and the realignment of companies under new releasing organizations. The trade is eagerly looking forward to the announcement of Mr. Spoor on the new releasing agency. Several rumors have been spread broadcast, but none has been confirmed by Mr. Spoor. He stated that an announcement of the new plans would be made just as soon as they had been perfected in detail. He outlined some of the plans for Essanay's coming work.

"There will be no abatement in the work of Essanay," he said. "In fact it will be conducted on a larger scale than ever before. And we aim to put out greater features.

"Essanay already has contracted for the rights on a number of large features and is planning to start work on them shortly. Two features are already under way and three others are completed for release through the new organization.

"'The Sting of Victory,' featuring Henry B. Walthall, supported by Antoinette Walker, which just recently was released through V-L-S-E, will, after September 16, go out through the new releasing company.

"'The Return of Eve,' which features Edna Mayo, supported by Eugene O'Brien, and 'The Prince of Graustark,' featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton, the novel by George Barr McCutcheon and a sequel to Essanay's feature 'Graustark,' have been completed and an announcement of their release will be made as soon as the new organization is perfected. These plays are both in five reels.

"Two other features are under way. They are 'The Chaperon,' taken from the stage success of Marion Fairfax and featuring Edna Mayo and Eugene O'Brien, and 'The Breakers,' by Arthur Stringer, one of the best of the Saturday Evening Post stories. It will feature Bryant Washburn and Nell Craig. These also will appear in five acts.

"Other features will be announced later. Several of these, already purchased, will feature Henry B. Walthal. Essanay has several features especially adapted to his genius and which, it is confidently expected, will be revelations in screen work."

Essanay's new studio, said to be the largest indoor, artificially lighted studio in the world, in conjunction with its other two studios, will enable it to carry on its plans for increased work with ease.

Features previously released through V-L-S-E, after the sixteenth of September, will be released through the new organization. These include Charlie Chaplin's greatest feature, the burlesque on "Carmen," "The Sting of Victory," "According to the Code," "That Sort," "Sherlock Holmes," "The Little Shepherd of Bargain Row," "The Havoc," "The Discard," "Vultures of Society," "The Misleading Lady," "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "A Daughter of the City," "The Alster Case," "The Raven," "The Crimson Wing," "The Man Trail," "The Blindness of Virtue," "In the Palace of the King," "The White Sister," "The Slim Princess" and "Graustark."

MARY BROOKS AND ALAN FISHER MARRY.

Mary Brooks and Alan Fisher are married. This does not mean much to picture fans, but when it is explained that Mary Brooks is Anna Little of the Flying A and Alan Fisher is Alan Forrest, then interest is aroused. The pretty marriage at Santa Barbara, August 19, was the outcome of a romance extending over two years.

Miss Little was given away by Richard Willis, her friend and business representative, while Rena Rogers (Mrs. Frank Borzage) and Rhea Mitchell made the necessary background and shed the usual happy tears on behalf of the bride. Frank Borzage handed Alan the ring at the proper moment. A supper was given at the Arlington Hotel, where Clarence Kolb and May Cloy joined the party, and a reception was given at the home of the couple later.

Greater Vitagraph Absorbs V-L-S-E Organization

Big Distributing Concern Will Remain Intact and Will Handle All Releases from the Vitagraph Producing Companies —Policy Unchanged

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of the Vitagraph Company, and Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V-L-S-E, last week confirmed the purchase by the former company of the interests of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies in the V-L-S-E organization. In addition to outlining the plans of operation of the V-L-S-E as a part of the Greater Vitagraph, Mr. Smith's statement contains the intimation of even larger things to come.

The absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Vitagraph interests, while actually in effect at the present time, so far as any additional releases of the Lubin, Selig and Essanay companies are concerned, technically does not become operative until September 16. The Lubin pictures which have been released through the V-L-S-E will remain on its program, although no new or additional Lubin features will be offered. Bookings on the Essanay and Selig pictures will continue up to September 16.

It is stated authoritatively that the amalgamation of the V-L-S-E and the Vitagraph Company will in no way affect the personnel of the distributing organization. The executive staff will remain the same, and the branch offices in the twenty-three cities with their complement of Big Four representatives will continue intact.

For the present, and up to at least the first of October, there will be released one feature per week. After that it is probable there will be offered two features per week, and in addition thereto sufficient shorter product to enable an exhibitor to obtain an entire day's service. It is stated, however, that this will be determined entirely on the basis of merit. In other words, if it is found possible to release two pictures a week measuring up to the superior standard which has been set by the Vitagraph, then the service will be eight productions a month. If, however, it is found that the high degree of merit determined upon might be in any way impaired, the service will be limited to four productions a month.

Another announcement of importance is that there will be instituted a widespread national advertising campaign to augment the value of the Vitagraph's already extensive reputation and well-known trade-mark, and to create for Vitagraph pictures the maximum consumer demand.

Discussing the Vitagraph's purchase of the interests of the other three companies, which have made up the Big Four, Mr. Smith said:

Vitagraph has acquired the V-L-S-E and several important producing organizations to be operated absolutely under its control because it is convinced that the best interests of exhibitors and of itself can be served only by having all of its activities, selling as well as producing, concentrated under one management.

The moving picture industry has grown too big, and the standard of the screen has advanced too far, for a producer to work in combination with other independent producers in the distribution of his product. Such a co-operative arrangement handicaps him, not only in the standardization of his product and in his advertising and selling service to his patrons, but also interposes a barrier between the most direct and sensitive responses to the exhibitors' needs.

When it was determined, some time ago, to increase the Vitagraph capitalization to $25,000,000, in order that we might insure the highest degree of merit for every one of our productions, we automatically determined at the same time to have our own distributing department in order that we might keep in the closest and most constant touch with the pulse of the public and the demand of exhibitors, and that we might be free to shape our course to the best advantage of all concerned, V-L-S-E was the natural selection for such a distribution organizaion. In the seventeen months of its existence it made unparalleled progress in serive to exhibitors and in the confidence and good will which it had gained from the trade as a whole. In transferring it as a department of Greater Vitagraph, we at the same time enlarge the scope of the V-L-S-E's possibilities for service and make it possible for that organization to do many things which it has long sought to do but which were manifestly impractical when it was acting as the selling agent of four independent concerns.

We have pledged to the representatives of the V-L-S-E, who now become Vitagraph representatives, that they will have the strongest offerings to present to exhibitors that have ever been placed in the hands of any film salesman that they will have pictures that are virtually self-selling, and that therefore they will be able to give the maximum of time to aiding their clients in making the most of these splendid productions.

We shall also be in a position to see to it, and exhibitors may be assured that we will see to it, that all advertising and selling helps and other mediums by which we may render the greatest possible service to the exhibitor, will be provided; that releases will be made on schedule time, and that all shipments will be sufficiently in advance—in short, that no step will be overlooked that will make for the maximum efficiency and the utmost commercial harmony.

To realize that the most important partner in the moving picture business is the exhibitor and that success is primarily dependent upon how closely allied he is with the manufacturer. It is this close and constant contact which has been sought in the absorption of the V-L-S-E by the Vitagraph Company—a contact that will make more intimate our knowledge of the needs of the exhibitor, in order that we, as a producer, may co-operate to an even greater degree. We believe that it will mark a new era in the motion picture industry, and that it will promote a degree of prosperity for exhibitors and for ourselves such as has never before been attained.

General Manager Walter W. Irwin of the V-L-S-E in discussing the amalgamation said:

Greater Vitagraph means greater V-L-S-E. The V-L-S-E remains intact—the same offices, the same personnel. It is geared to do big things, spurred to greater efforts by the knowledge it has back of it, and is a part of one of the world's most substantial and pre-eminent business institutions. Furthermore, it will now be possible for us to focus and concentrate the energies which were formerly divided in advancing the interests of four companies upon promoting the maximum results for the patrons of one organization, an organization controlling its entire service from script to screen. In other words, the only result to the V-L-S-E of this change will be that by virtually becoming a department of the Vitagrapht Company we multiply our possibilities of service, because we will be in constant touch with the producer, so that we will be able to make suggestions, and to eliminate any and all difficulties which are in any way a handicap to our patrons.

To the broadening of the principles of commercial equity which the V-L-S-E has always espoused, and the multiplication of our service to the exhibitor there will be added one of the most widespread and efficient national advertising campaigns ever instituted by any company in any field. We enter upon this amalgamation, therefore, not only with the unbounding confidence and enthusiasm for our own selves, but for what we shall be able to do for the many exhibitors with whom we have come into such friendly touch and for the large number of others whom we hope it is to be our privilege to serve.

FIGHT FILMS AGAIN BARRED.

Court Rejects Rephotographed Willard-Johnson Pictures.

Judge Augustus N. Hand in the Federal District Court, Friday, Sept. 1, refused a motion of the Pantomimic Corporation to restrain Collector Malone from seizing the film of the Willard-Johnson fight in Havana. The company, when forbidden to bring in the original film, had a duplicate made, the rephotographing of the original being made across the Canadian border line near Rouse's Point, N. Y. The admission of the duplicate was then sought on the ground that the secondary film did not violate the law prohibiting the sending by mail or express of prize fight films.

In his decision Judge Hand held that the rephotographing was an attempt to evade the statute. The argument that this process did not amount to bringing in the picture from Canada is met, Judge Hand said, by the unquestioned fact that a pictorial image, though not a physical object, was in Canada and is now in New York and that its presence here was caused by the traveling of rays of light starting in Canada and passing through a lens on the New York side, which gives a rceord representation here. So he believes this reason enough to deny the motion to restrain the Collector.

"CIVILIZATION" MOVES TO PARK THEATER.

"Civilization" moves from the Criterion theater to the Park theater at Columbus Circle, Sunday, September 10. This is necessitated by a prior contract entered into before Klaw & Erlanger realized that "Civilization" would be as strong an attraction in its sixteenth week as it was in its first. However, owing to the splendid transportation facilities at Columbus Circle, the Park theater is an ideal location for the great Ince spectacle "Civilization."

The same splendid equipment, now being used at the Criterion theater, will be transferred to the Park and installed by B. F. Porter, the expert who perfected the projection at the Criterion theater for Mr. Ince.

HARRY FOX GIVES LUNCHEON.

Harry Fox, leading player in the International Film Service serial "Beatrice Fairfax," gave a luncheon at Wallack's restaurant, New York, Thursday, August 31, to the members of the trade press. The collation was sumptuous and the diners did ample justice thereto. Those present were Harry Fox, Earl Gulick, W. W. Johnston, Basil Dickey, Theodore Wharton, E. B. Hatrick, Wid Gunning, James Beecroft, Wen Milligan, Charles Condon, Jim Milligan, A. L. Haase, Fred Beecroft, J. E. MacBride, J. K. Burger, Peter Milne, A. H. Shirk, T. E. Oliphant, Manny Chappelle, J. I. Greene, Mr. Kracht, T. C. Dietrich.

Directors With Dramatic Instinct Needed

William Parke, Producer of "The Shine Girl", Discusses Photoplay Requirements—Conclusions Drawn from Twenty Years on the Stage and One Year in the Studio

WILLIAM PARKE does not belong to the old school of photoplay directors; rather he belongs to the new school that is not bound by conventions merely because so-and-so in some bygone day started making pictures in such-and-such a fashion. He is a progressive director who in one year of studio experience with the Thanhouser Company has turned out a surprising number of good pictures in a surprisingly short time. And the best of them all, up to date, is "The Shine Girl," released by Pathe under the inviting line of "The Peg O' My Heart" of the screen.

William Parke.

Picture people do not know much about Mr. Parke and his work as yet; but it is a safe venture that they will soon. Some twenty years ago he went on the stage determined to succeed, and he kept climbing up the ladder until he became stage manager for actors such as E. H. Sothern, Richard Mansfield and Arnold Daly. For four seasons he was stage director for John Craig's stock company in Boston; next he conducted the William Parke stock company in Pittsfield, Mass., on a plane that excited favorable notice throughout the country; then, to top off an energetic theatrical career, he prepared seven "Potash and Perlmutter" companies for the road. With this task accomplished, he went to the Thanhouser studio to learn how photoplays were made, and now the perseverance and energy that carried him so far on the stage are at the service of the new art. He is not satisfied with producing good pictures; he wants to make the best.

Recognizing a limited exeprience with screen drama, Mr. Parke talks modestly, expressing conviction only where his theories have been tested and found practicable. "To me," he said, "the most hopeful sign in the picture situation is the fact that photoplays which were considered good enough a few years ago will not pass muster to-day. There has been improvement, but there must be still more, and a great deal depends upon the caliber of the directors. We need better acting in order to interest an audience in the characters in a story, for that after all is what counts when thrills and spectacles have reached their limit. And to get better acting we must have directors with a strong dramatic sense, which is inborn, not acquired, and has nothing to do with a knowledge of mechanical requirements in photographing a scene.

"Probably you recall instances where actors you know to be effective on the stage have been disappointing on the screen. Generally the actor is blamed if he drags through a picture in a listless manner, or he is exonerated on the grounds of not photographing well. I believe that nine times out of ten the fault lies with the direction. The best way to get a convincing expression is to stir thoughts in a player's mind that will be reflected naturally on his features. A mechanical repetition of given gestures means little unless there is feeling behind it, yet in the methods adopted in most studios where the day passes wearily in unnecessary waits and protracted rehearsals there is everything to deaden a sensitive artist's emotions. He goes through the scene in a perfunctory manner and does not at all give the best that is in him.

"Then consider the matter from another angle. The man who makes a picture is at once the player's director and his audience. On the stage there is the inspiration derived from the spectators on the other side of the footlights; also there is dialogue that means something, and the atmosphere is conducive to the mood demanded at the time. It is the business of the director to know what these moods should be, to appreciate the temperament of his players and to awaken a responsive spirit without which successful dramatic interpretation of any kind is impossible. This cannot be done by shouting commands to be fulfilled with slight appreciation of their meaning.

"While I believe that trained players are a requisite in the leading roles of a picture, it is often possible to get the best out of 'bits' with people who possess the dramatic instinct, but know nothing about acting, something that cannot be done on the stage. I think this was evidenced in 'The Shine Girl.' A character that stands out because of correctness of type was played by an aged Italian boot-maker found on the east side of New York. When he came to the studio he had no idea of what was expected of him and he could not understand a word of English. I played the part myself, laughed when I wanted him to laugh and scowled at the proper moment, and after a few trials he followed in a most convincing fashion. In making 'Prudence the Pirate' I had a somewhat similar experience with a boy selected from a group of youngsters hanging about the studio. As soon as he had forgotten his embarrassment he acted the part far more satisfactorily than would most of our trained stage children."

Mr. Parke is insistent upon the necessity of more intelligent acting in pictures because only through life-like portrayals may a photoplay become human, and it is the human quality, above all else, that he wants to achieve.

Farewell Luncheon for Terry Ramsaye

Confreres of Mutual Publicity Head on Eve of His Departure for Chicago Express Regret at Losing Him.

TERRY RAMSAYE was the guest of honor at a luncheon tendered him at the Claridge on August 29. Mr. Ramsaye, who is the head of the publicity department of the Mutual Film Corporation, was slated to leave New York at the end of the week to take up his work at the new headquarters of the Mutual in Chicago. There were thirty-five of his brother advertising men, film men and trade press representatives seated about him when Arthur James, toastmaster, announced Hopp Hadley as press agent, Harry Reichenbach as advertising manager and Carl Pierce as business manager. Each of these, as well as Lesley Mason and Fred Gunning, paid their compliments to Mr. Ramsaye, congratulated him on the quality of his work, expressed the hope that he would be able to break down the Chinese wall around a certain one of the Chicago newspapers, and assured him there was a hearty welcome awaiting him should events so turn that he came back to New York.

Mr. Ramsaye—old Terry Ramsaye, the Rewrite Man, as Hopp Hadley described him—replied briefly to the expressions of good will, saying he had not had time to get around as much among his associates in film advertising circles as he would have liked. He wanted them to know, however, that he heartily appreciated the compliment implied by the presence of so many of his brother workers.

Those present included Arthur James, Terry Ramsaye, Hopp Hadley, Harry Reichenbach, John C. Flinn, William Wright, Sam Spedon, C. Lanning Masters, Harry King Tootles, Fred Gunning, Paul Gulick, Nat Rothstein, Julian Solomon, Lyman O. Fiske, Jacques Kopfstein, Bill Barry, Benjamin P. Schulberg, W. P. Milligan, Pete J. Schmid, Henry James, Harry Ennis, Carl Pierce, O. H. Harris, R. M. Vandivert, E. R. Schayer, Lesley Mason, Wallace Thompson, James Milligan, Victor M. Shapiro, Charles Burr, Albert A. Cormier, Charles R. Condon, Gerald C. Duffy, P. A. Parsons, Allen L. Haase and George Blaisdell.

CRANE IN ADIRONDACKS.

Having completed his final picture for the Paragon Company, in which Lew Fields was starred, Director Frank Crane is taking his first vacation in three years and is making a tour of the Adirondacks. Mr. Crane has had several offers for his services, but will make no definite plans until he returns to the city.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

MINNESOTA EXHIBITORS MEET.

Attend Luncheon at Hotel West, Minneapolis, to Talk Over Trade Policies.

ABOUT fifty members of the Minnesota branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest assembled at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Monday, August 26, to be guests of the M. P. A. N. W. at a mid-day luncheon and to attend a meeting later in the day. The luncheon was free. The meeting did much to instill into the exhibitors a fighting spirit very necessary at this time.

Thomas Furniss, Duluth, who could have been the president of the national league if he had desired the honor, was the chief speaker at the meeting. Mr. Furniss in plain, simple English explained the policies and hopes of the newly organized National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and urged the support of all Minnesota exhibitors. Mr. Furniss explained the Kitchin bill and told of the work being done to stop its passage in Congress, praised Mr. Elliott, the secretary of the new association, and gave credit to Messrs. Brady, Zukor, Irwin, Ochs, Hamburger and others prominet in the affairs of the new association to date.

Following Mr. Furniss' speech I. Ruben, of the firm of Ruben & Finkelstein, Minnesota's largest exhibitors, gave a short talk full of spicy remarks which left an impression upon the minds of those assembled. Mr. Ruben made a strong plea for co-operation and stated that no unjust legislation or anything else could be fought unless the exhibitors fought as one organization instead of as individuals. Mr. Ruben and Mr. Furniss were both given several rounds of applause. Theodore L. Hays, well known Twin City theatrical manager, also spoke. President J. G. Gilosky, of the Northwest Association, presided at the meeting.

The action of the operators' union, of the censors and stage employees was also discussed at length. Secretary William Koenig, of the Northwest Association, had charge of the arrangements for the luncheon. About one-third of those who attended the meeting and luncheon were from outside of the Twin Cities.

TO EXHIBITORS OF THE MARITIME PROVINCES.

Call for Meeting to Be Held on September 16 at Halifax.

St. John, N. B., August 24, 1916.

Dear Sir:—

During the week of August 12 a very enjoyable and highly profitable gathering, representing motion picture interests, was held in this city, more in the nature of a welcome to F. H. Richardson of the Motion Picture World.

As an outcome of that gathering, the idea of thorough organization was presented and crystallized in committees, the undersigned representing New Brunswick, others being appointed for Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The idea of this letter is to bring before the New Brunswick fraternity the advisability for all who can possibly attend a return gathering to be held in Halifax, September 16 (Fair Week), to do so.

It is the intention at this meeting to effect, if possible, a three-province association, for the protection and better direction of the industry as represented in the Maritime Provinces.

Since more than half a million of money is invested in motion picture real estate in this territory, and hundreds of men are earning a livelihood out of this new form of entertainment, since indeed it is a big industry, we feel that those engaged in it should stand unitedly.

As a community of people, as a "vote" we are strong enough to demand a careful hearing when unfair impositions are brought forward by legislative bodies.

Furthermore, oppressive censorship, the caprice of officials, and numerous impositions have been forced on us in the past that were not accorded other businesses, all of which make it imperative that we demand more consideration. The best way to get this recognition is by organization, "in unity there is strength."

If we can show the legislators that we are striving to do the right thing, that our business is not the gold mine many of them think it is, that we are entitled to all the protection that a right thinking government can throw around us, then we will dispel the many undesirable impressions members of Parliament have regarding our interests.

It is to further the above that we must get together. The larger cities are already quite clear from the old time idea of the "movie" game, but smaller places still suffer from it.

And then again, if when oppressive legislation is proposed, we send a competent committee of motion picture men to the seat of government, to explain our case, we do so as a united body, ready to cast our votes and the influences of our curtains and theaters into our cause.

At this Halifax meeting the operators will probably also hold an organization session, and more than likely make an effort to get into the international union. The exchange men will probably hold a separate meeting. So altogether we look for some genuinely good benefits from this movement just launched.

TRY AND HAVE YOUR HOUSE REPRESENTED in some way.

The Halifax boys promise us a good time, and it is about the proper moment for those interested in the motion picture business to understand one another better, and get into more co-operative harness.

Yours for Organization,
WALTER H. GOLDING,
Chairman for N. B.

P. S.—Please advise the Secretary at your earliest convenience if we can plan on your attendance at the Halifax meeting.

STEVE C. HURLEY,
Secretary.
P. O. Box 388.

SELIG SUBJECTS ON GENERAL FILM.

William N. Selig announces some unusually excellent dramas to be released in regular service of General Film Company. "In the House of the Chief" is a three-part Diamond Special featuring Eugenie Besserer, known as "The Ellen Terry" of the movies and who is supported by a cast of players that includes Vivian Reed, Charles West, Sidney Smith and Al W. Filson. The drama was produced by T. N. Heffron from the story by I. K. Friedman. "In the House of the Chief" is a thrilling drama of the underworld, and will be released Monday, October 2. "The Canbyhill Outlaws" is a Tom Mix drama of western life released Saturday, October 7.

"The Temptation of Adam" is a three-reel drama featuring Kathlyn Williams and an all-star cast. It is an unusual story in every detail, abounding in exciting climaxes and intense action. Miss Williams is at her best in this drama, which, produced by Al Green, presents beautiful scenic effects. "A Mistake in Rustlers" is a thrilling western dramatic production with Tom Mix performing many of his most hazardous exploits.

MISS BRADY IN "THE GILDED CAGE."

Alice Brady had eight hours' respite between her last scene in "The Gilded Cage" and her first in "Bought and Paid For," upon which she is diligently engaged in the star role at present, yet it was not so much of a respite at that. The final touch upon "The Gilded Cage" was effected at just midnight, and the call for Miss Brady and the other members of the "Bought and Paid For" cast was up for the next morning at eight.

"The great feature of a motion picture star's life," said Miss Brady as she entered the studio the next morning, "is that it is so restful."

Billy the Exhibitor

By E. T. Keyser

He Tries Intensive Agricultural Clean-Up Methods in the Picture Business

WHEN my friend Billy opened his picture theater there were two other houses in town, each trying to see which could run the greatest quantity of junk for a nickel. Judging by their nightly footage both could qualify as first-class centipedes, but the entertainments were about as satisfying as a trade association banquet to a member who had neglected to absorb a previous and nourishing luncheon.

Whenever the enthusiasm of the long suffering "fans" began to wane, it was stimulated by a "country store," consisting of shopworn groceries taken in trade for program advertising space.

Just who made a profit on the transaction was a mystery until it was discovered that the local druggist always put in a rush order for digestion tablets on the day following each distribution of antique eatables.

There was no chance for Billy to forge to the front as an animated meal ticket, so he decided to try the plan of spending as much thought on program selection as his competitors did on their free feed orgies and to discover if people would not be willing to pay real money to gaze at pictures that did not look as if they had been left out in the rain without an umbrella.

Today Billy is getting ten and fifteen cents for program and twenty-five cents for features and the other houses are dark.

Billy was in his lobby the other night extending the glad hand, his countenance decorated with a cheerful smile that expanded each time that he noticed the totals growing on the ticket vending machine.

"How are they breaking?" I asked.

"Fine," he admitted. "Every tradesman who had 'comps' in exchange for window privileges has been boosting the show to his customers and the editor of the Bugle, having decided that it must be a mighty good 'pic' to take so much advertising space, devoted the southwest corner of his Mothers' Page to voicing his conviction.

"It cost something to advertise this feature, but every dollar that I've spent in telling what a corker it is seems to be coming back with another dollar in tow."

"Making a killing?" was my query.

"Wouldn't exactly call it that," confided Billy. "I'm making a good, clean profit on this run, but the killing won't be until I show it again.

"You see, I've advertised this picture until a big bunch of people couldn't stay away, but there is a bigger bunch still who did not feel like giving up a quarter for the first run or fancied that I was over-stating matters.

"When they hear from those who attended just how good it was, they will be some disappointed, and when I screen it again, some months hence, the disappointed ones will be on line at the booth. Besides, those who can not see a quarter now will jump at the chance later, and a big percentage of those who see it now will want another look.

"I'll get the picture cheaper by that time, and, as my present advertising campaign and the people who will talk about tonight have put the picture on the map, there will be mighty little expense for publicity and I will clean up the real profit of the efforts that I am making now.

"I was brought up in a farming section and I'm using the farmers' method of raising a fine crop of turnips on the land fertilized for an earlier crop that has already brought in a profit."

I'm not much of an agriculturist myself, but Billy's dope sounded good to me, good enough to warrant my taking advantage of his parting invitation to come around again and have another experience meeting.

Straight Tips For Press Agents

Chicago Newspaper Sends Circular Letter Describing Its Preferences in Matter of News.

IN a circular letter to publicity managers of film companies the motion picture editor of the Chicago Examiner says much in a few words. It will interest or may interest all who have to do with the preparation and passing upon publicity copy of motion picture companies. Here are a couple of paragraphs from the letter:

"We shall appreciate it very much if arrangements are made to send us 'live' news of the film industry in the speediest time possible. Sometimes in our morning's mail we find 'news' printed several days or a week previous in some other sheet. This condition is bad and should be remedied easily without overtaxing the resources of your department.

"We believe the best method of getting across publicity is by sending it short. Reams describing the detailed routine of your studios are of no interest to us or to the public. Besides, it steals our time and makes us hate the work."

GAUMONT ANNOUNCES "THE VAMPIRES" IN NINE EPISODES.

Even before the flood of orders had begun to pour in upon Mutual Branches for "Fantomas," the Gaumont series in five episodes of three reels each, the Gaumont Company had planned to follow these thrilling screen-stories with a second series equally as effective under the general title of "The Vampires, the Arch Criminals of Paris." This second series will be in nine complete episodes of three reels each. They will be released weekly; and as the last "Fantomas" picture will reach the screen October 5, it is likely that the first "The Vampires" episode will be released soon afterward.

Again the American exhibitor is offered a series which is already a proved success. "The Vampires" has been exhibited abroad with marked success. When released by Gaumont abroad it broke all records at the Gaumont Palace, Paris, the largest cinema theater in the world, and duplicated its success in Marseilles, Lyons, Bordeaux, Toulouse, Tours, Nantes, Angers, Rouen, Orleans and other important cities in France. "The Vampires" was released in England by the Gaumont Film Hire Service as "The Crime Investigator." It is a series of detective stories, which follow the fortunes of a reporter of a Paris newspaper in his efforts to unravel the mysteries surrounding the criminal exploits of the Vampires, a notorious gang of criminals. The scenes, full of exciting incidents, are typical of the methods of French criminals.

COLLEGES TAKING UP STUDY OF PHOTOPLAY.

Announcement that the Lasky Company is to produce the Columbia University prize photoplay, "Witchcraft," by R. Ralston Reed, has created an interest in photoplay writing among the dramatic classes of other universities. The success of the Columbia competition, which was conceived by Samuel Goldfish, will prompt the Lasky Company to extend its facilities of production to the winning photoplays written by students of other colleges.

In the past the study of stage and dramatic art has been given considerable time and attention in the curriculums of various universities. From some of these colleges successful and well-known dramatists have been graduated. From the class of Dr. Pearce Baker of Harvard University such successful dramatists as Frederick Ballard, Edward Sheldon and other young Americans have been able to enter seriously a profession of playwriting in competition with older and more experienced men.

Columbia Univerity was the first of the big colleges to establish a class of photodramatics. It is likely this autumn similar classes will be started by Yale, Harvard, Chicago and other large educational institutions.

ANOTHER NEW COMPANY.

The latest addition to the field of moving picture production is the Crescent Film Company, which has been organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, with its principal office at Pittsburgh. The following officers were elected: H. T. DeViney, president; James L. Porter, vice-president; Abe Hansell, treasurer; John I. Pratt, secretary; Cliff B. Nelson, general manager.

It is the intention of the company to manufacture one-reel comedies under the direction of Mr. Nelson, the well-known comedian, formerly playing "Big Time" vaudeville, and one of the younger lights in musical comedies. The comedies will be in series form, and will be called "Muggsie, the Messenger Boy." Five are already complete, and show Muggsie, played by Cliff Nelson himself, in various occupations, all of which are rendered extremely amusing by Muggsie's endeavor to do things for which he is not fitted. The first release is "Muggsie at the Bat," which will see the light of day from the exhibitor's standpoint some time during the next month.

"Witching Hour" For Frohman

Amusement Corporation to Produce Famous Augustus Thomas Play—John Mason May Appear in It.

AFTER two years of refusal and disdaining offers that exceeded five figures for his dramatic masterpiece, "The Witching Hour," Augustus Thomas, noted playwright and director general of the Charles Frohman interests, has turned over to the Frohman Amusement Corporation the film rights to this powerful play, and that vehicle will be the next production of the Frohman company.

"The Witching Hour" enjoyed a three-year run at the Liberty theater several years ago. From the inception of the multiple reel feature producers have been offering Mr. Thomas large sums for the screen rights to this play, but Mr. Thomas has resisted every offer. He was firm in his belief that "The Witching Hour" could be revived and that it would run again on Broadway. Recently, however, William L. Sherrill, head of the Frohman Corporation, induced Mr. Thomas to enter into serious consideration regarding the screening of the piece, with the result that contracts were closed last week, which permits the Frohman Company to produce the picture.

Efforts are going forward now, through George Irving, of the Frohman Company, to secure as many of the original cast as he possibly can to portray their original roles.

John Mason, who starred in the piece during its long run, is engaged to open soon in "Common Clay," which he starred last season. If arrangements can be made so that Mr. Mason can divide his time between the theater and the studio, Mr. Sherrill will endeavor to prevail upon him to play his original role. In the event that conditions are such as to preclude his doing so, C. Aubrey Snith will undoubtedly be seen as the gambler. Edith Taliaferro will (in all likelihood) be seen in the ingenue part.

A deep element of hypnosis and psychology obtains in the story, and in order to get logical and correct effects for this detail George Irving, who will stage the piece, is to confer with Hugo Munsterberg and Professor Hyslop, the two foremost authorities in America on the little known elements.

Imperial Censorship for Britain

Home Secretary Gives No Details, but Belief Prevails It Means End of Parish Supervision.

London, August 17.

THE momentous announcement is made today by the Home Secretary that an official censorship of moving picture films is to be established. No details as to constitution or administration of the new office are contained in Mr. Samuel's bare statement. Upon these points conjecture is rife in the trade. One thing, however, is certain, that the new censorship will be compulsory for every manufacturer of films and not, as imagined by some, an official recognition of the present voluntary system of the British Board of Film Censors.

The entry of the official censor will mean the exit of the parish censor, for the previous statements of the Home Secretary to different sections of the trade along with his circular letter to local licensing authorities do not foreshadow the remotest likelihood of a British parallel to the state censorship evil of America. A the same time it may be necessary to pass a special Parliamentary bill to dispossess these local authorities of their existing right to censor films within their own respective areas. A full appreciation of the necessity of this has doubtless been the most important factor in the Government's decision. J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

EBENSTEIN NEW MOSS GENERAL MANAGER.

H. R. Ebenstein, until recently manager of the film exchange of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, has been appointed general manager of that organization and has assumed charge. Mr. Ebenstein's wide experience and knowledge of the motion picture business make him a particularly valuable man in this position, in view of the fact that the newly announced state rights plan of Mr. Moss will require an organizer of no mean ability successfully to launch it.

Mr. Ebenstein is an efficiency and organization expert. For the World Film Corporation he installed an efficient collection system.

Later he organized the film exchange for Mr. Moss.

Mr. Ebenstein is contemplating an extensive trip, covering a large portion of the United States, with the idea of assigning franchises where conditions indicate the greatest good can be derived for all parties concerned.

Much Publicity for "Fall of a Nation"

Press Department of National Drama Corporation Prepares Unusual Amount of Material to Publicize Dixon Film.

HENRY MacMAHON, general press representative of the National Drama Corporation, has prepared an unusual array of of publicity matter to inaugurate the opening of the campaign for the distribution of "The Fall of a Nation," which will be released through the V-L-S-E exchanges on September 18. In the list are a dozen different kinds of publicity matter, the initial cost of which for material runs up to $12,000.

There are three six-sheet posters, one of which, representing the refugee family on Long Island, is in five colors—a fine example of poster art. Then there are three three-sheets and three one-sheets, all pictorial, besides a mass of block and letter material, banners, etc. Two elaborate lobby displays are 22 by 28 inches and 8 by 10 inches. Original music scores prepared by Victor Herbert have been arranged for any number of pieces. Illustrated heralds, fine examples of the printer's and engraver's art, will be ready for distribution by exhibitors. There is also a four-page throwaway reprinting some of the favorable press notices the big Thomas Dixon subject has occasioned.

One of the more notable of the collection is a twelve-page press sheet, printed on one side of the paper only, containing press notices, newspaper stories, interviews with Mr. Dixon, stories of the men and women who took prominent parts in the making of the subject, all profusely illustrated. Then there are advertisements, all blocked, and mortised for the insertion of dates and other particulars. The book was compiled and written by Mr. McMahon, Wallace M. Powers and Willard Holcomb. Exhibitors will find in these varied elements of publicity an unusual amount of publicity aid.

LUCILLE LEE STEWART IN BLUE RIBBON.

Under the direction of Ralph Ince, Lucille Lee Stewart has forged to the front as a dramatic screen star who can "get over" her scenes. In "His Wife's Good Name" she is wholly charming and has opportunities for displaying her talent as well as a number of beautiful gowns that she wears throughout this Blue Ribbon Feature.

Miss Stewart's cast includes Huntly Gordon, Jessie Miller, Frank Currier, John Robertson and William Lytell, Jr. The story of "His Wife's Good Name" is a powerful one. The wealthy father attempts to bribe his son's wife to keep to herself and forget the romantic marriage which has wrecked his plans for his son's future. The innocent wife is tricked into attending a party, supposedly given in her honor. Under the influence of the men she believes to be her husband's friends, she is persuaded to drink and is soon acting foolishly. How she works out her salvation, wins over her husband and his stern father provides the theme of the play. It sparkles with thrilling and dramatic situations. The scenario is by Josephine Lovett.

"DOT" KELLY MARRIES REAL ESTATE MAN.

Dorothy Kelly, the Vitagraph star, was married quietly to Harvey Hevenor, a real estate man, on Monday evening, August 28. The ceremony was performed at the home of the Rev. Albert King Morris, of Jersey City, N. J.

The couple's meeting was romantic. Mr. Hevenor admired the star's work on the screen, and three years ago wrote for her photograph. Miss Kelly answered his letter personally and the correspondence developed into an acquaintance a few months later. They have been engaged since last May.

This is the bride's first marriage. She is twenty-two years of age and her husband is forty. At present they are living at the Montague Hotel, Brooklyn. Miss Kelly has not permitted her marriage to interfere with her screen career and is to be found daily at Huntington, Long Island, working on scenes for "The Secret Kingdom," a forthcoming Vitagraph serial release.

MARIAN SWAYNE JOINS ARROW COMPANY.

Miss Marian Swayne, well known to the American stage for her performances as Effie in "The Blindness of Virtue," as Cicely in the Wilde play, "The Importance of Being Earnest," and as the Squaw in "The Squaw Man," has become a member of the Arrow Film Corporation forces in Yonkers, N. Y. Miss Swayne was associated with the screen for some time, having played a year with Blache and a year with Gaumont. She appeared in her first motion picture role under Howell Hansel's direction. On her return to the screen, after several years of stage successes, Miss Swayne again finds herself under his direction, this time with Arrow.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

The First Private Showing of "The Crisis" Given at Pittsburgh.

WILLIAM N. SELIG gave a private presentation of "The Crisis" in Pittsburgh, Pa., on Sunday, August 27, at the Pitt theater. Mr. Selig made a special trip for the event, which was given prominent mention by the Pittsburgh press. The Pittsburgh Dispatch devoted large space to the merits of the big photoplay and stated in part, in the issue of August 28:

"A private showing of 'The Crisis,' produced by the Selig Polyscope Company, was given at the Pitt theater yesterday afternoon, a large part of the audience being from the ranks of moving picture, theatrical and newspaper circles. The picture is a masterpiece in the way of screen art, having the elements that make for a big success—interesting and cohesive story, plenty of action, fine acting and fine photography.

"The story of Churchill's novel has been scenarioized so capably that the excellence of the original has been retained. The acting is superb. The battle scenes are spectacular and finely executed. A horse and rider tumbling down hill is one of the most spectacular features ever caught by the camera. It elicited continued applause at yesterday's showing.

"William N. Selig, famous producer of pictures and producer of this one, was in Pittsburgh and saw the picture at the Pitt. He is enthusiastic about it.

"'If I had any doubt,' said Mr. Selig during the course of a chat, 'that "The Crisis" would not meet with great success, it was certainly dispelled when I saw some theatrical men upstairs (pointing to the Pitt gallery) using their handkerchiefs during Fawcett's death scene, and at other places during the action.

"'The first dramatic performance of "The Crisis," you will recall, was made in Pittsburgh by James K. Hackett, who produced the play on the stage. I am perfectly satisfied with the acting in this film. My idea was to get away from the star system, to aim more at ensemble acting. I think I have succeeded. The people present here today, judging by their applause, all seem to like the picture; but wait until they see it presented with the accompaniment of the special musical score prepared for it!'"

Second Annual Ball of Chicago Reel Fellows' Club Announced for November 10.

M. G. Watkins, secretary of the Reel Fellows' Club, of Chicago, announces that the second annual ball of the club will be given on Nov. 10 in a prominent Loop hotel. Mr. Watkins, brimming over with enthusiasm, declares that the event will be the most elaborate photoplay affair of the year, and something worth remembering.

The committee on arrangements includes Richard C. Travers, prominent among Essanay players; H. C. Miller, manager of the Moyer theater; Frank J. Flaherty, of the Chicago office of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and M. G. Watkins, manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation.

Richard C. Travers and some popular leading woman of another producing company will most likely lead the grand march. Many screen stars, both in the East and the Midde West, have already pledged that they will attend the ball, which promises to be the most notable photoplay event of the season. Henry B. Walthall, Bryant Washburn and Edmund Cobb, of Essanay, and other well-known stars will be present.

Extraordinary efforts will be made to net as large a sum from the big affair as possible, which will be added to the fund for a new clubhouse, which is badly needed. At present the club has quarters in the Hotel Morrison, but just as soon as more suitable quarters can be found in some central location in the Loop, a change will be made.

It is announced by the officers of the club that a big show will be given in one of the leading Loop theaters for three nights, some time in January, 1917, to add still further to the clubhouse fund. In the cast will be Richard C. Travers, Henry B. Walthall, four leading men from other companies, and three well-known leading women of the screen. It is expected that this show will have sufficient drawing power to pack the theater selected for the three nights' run.

Throughout the winter the club hopes to offer other big features that will attract the public in large numbers. The proceeds will be added to the clubhouse fund, which, it is hoped, will soon reach $50,000, the amount required for the club's new home.

Shortly before the big show is put on in January, 1917, a watch-the-clock campaign will be started. A large clock will be put up in a prominent place, somewhere in the heart of the Loop district, and everytime a contribution to the clubhouse fund is made the big hand will point to the full amount secured, and will keep moving until it reaches the $50,000 mark.

Thomas Marshall for First Assistant State's Attorney in Cook County.

Thomas Marshall, First Assistant State's Attorney from 1910 to 1912 inclusive, is again a candidate for the Republican nomination for that office in Cook County.

Mr. Marshall is making his campaign along most original lines as, instead of attempting to speak to voters all over the city personally, he is making use of the screens in moving picture theaters to speak for him.

Mr. Marshall first sought and obtained the indorsement of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and the exhibitors in Chicago are enthusiastic in his support. At the present time Mr. Marshall is making as many as 150 meetings a night in fifty of the best moving picture theaters of Chicago. This is done by means of a reel of film which shows his early life as a machinist, and his later successes at the bar. The pictures also define his political views, which are based on high principles.

Mr. Marshall has made the following pledge to exhibitors and to other people in the moving picture trade: "I shall use the whole force of the office of State's Attorney to secure full protection for the photoplay industry, and from what I have learned I do not hesitate in saying that I believe the present system of censorship to be unconstitutional and void. I shall seek an opportunity to secure an adjudication of its vaidity from the Supreme Court of Illinois at an early day, and if necessary I will ask the United States Supreme Court to pass upon the questions now presented."

Mr. Marshall has promised to use the full force of his office, in case he is elected, to protect the moving picture industry from outside attacks, and he will direct his skill as a lawyer to the matter of the validitv of moving picture censorship. It is his opinion that the present methods of supervision are unconstitutional and void. Mr. Marshall's opinion in this behalf must be considered important, in view of the fact that he has succeeded in the Supreme Court of Illinois in having five separate, state-wide statutes held unconstitutional.

Mr. Marshall states that houses which never before permitted a political film to be shown on their screens have gladly extended him the favor, so that he may present his case fully to the public. It is expected that Mr. Marshall will come in a strong winner on Wednesday, September 13, which is primary election day in Chicago, and that his success will afford another demonstration of the power of the moving picture in elections.

Chicago Film Brevities.

An increased volume of business at the offices of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., at 109 North Dearborn street, this city, has made it necessary to move the shipping, film and poster department to 168 West Washington street, in order to give greater room for the executive offices. Manager I. Van Ronkel informs me that the floor space at 168 West Washington street is now five times as large as the executive offices, which speaks well for his energetic and successful management.

Aaron J. Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and Max Ascher, left for New York City Wednesday, August 30. It is understood that important business connected with their interests in the Central Film Corporation will be transacted.

George P. Hamilton, vice-president and general manager of the Century Film Corporation, of Roundup, Mont., stopped over in the city Monday, August 28, on his way to New York. The company recently finished an eight-reel feature entitled "Inherited Passions," in which Miss Dot Farley and Charlie Mulhall appear in the principal roles. The film includes many Western scenes, including a great cattle stampede. Mr. Hamilton directed the picture. It will be remembered that Mr. Hamilton was superintendent of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company's plant for a number of years, when the moving picture business was in its early stages of development.

Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Co., Inc., and his son, Hobart, left for New York by auto one day last week. It is expected they will spend several weeks in the Metropolis.

At the laying of the corner stone of St. Ignatius Church, at Loyola University, in Rogers Park, this city, recently, a moving picture of the ceremonies was made. It is the intention of the Rev. Father B. M. Johnson, pastor of the church, to add to this original film from time to time by making moving pictures of interesting events in the lives of the members of the congregation. By this means he hopes to preserve a record that will enable members of the parish in the future to see themseves as they appeared when they were children, and also to view in action their friends and relatives who will have departed into the Great Beyond.

Admirers of Thomas Santschi will be glad to learn that he has been assigned the part of Boris in "The Garden of Allah" to Helen Ware's Domini, in the same spectacle. Others in the cast are Al. W. Filson, Eugenie Besserer, Harry Lonsdale, James Bradbury, Cecil Holland and Camille Astor.

Among the many rumors that have been circulated in film circles recently, and appearing in print, was one claiming that Wm. N. Selig had sold the entire rights of "The Crisis," in the United States and Canada, to a certain buyer. In answer to this Mr. Selig states that it would be much wiser if publishers who find space for such rumors would take the trouble to verify them. "There is absolutely no truth in this statement that I have so disposed of the rights of 'The Crisis,'" said Mr. Selig, in an interview. "Authoritative announcement regarding the release and disposal of 'The Crisis' will be made at the proper time."

The publishers of "The Crisis," written by Winston Churchill, are preparing an unusual line of publicity for their photoplay edition of the book. One sheet posters in several colors are in course of preparation. These posters will carry scenes from the Selig photoplay, together with pictures of the leading stars, including George W. Fawcett, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Matt. Snyder and others. Every store carrying a line of books will be furnished with these posters, together with beautiful slides describing the book and the photoplay.

Word received from the Pacific Coast, at the Chicago office of the Selig Company, states that Tom Mix has used the entire town of Newhall, Cal., for moving picture purposes. Tom is the big popular favorite in Newhall. He is not only Mayor of the town, but commands the town council. "The Light of Western Stars" is now being filmed and scenes in Newhall were essential. The entire main street of the town was vacated in favor of the Selig company of players and the principal buildings were also placed at their disposal.

Orchestra Hall has secured from the private collection of H. J. Wurzburg some rare prints of Hawaiian scenics, types and surf-riding sports made by the famous Hawaiian photographer, R. K. Bonine. The volcano of Kilauea, in action, is shown in a single reel, taken at a time when the molten lava was at its extreme height and at close-ups which show the bubbling fountains of hot lava both night and day.

The Colonial theater, this city, was reopened Thursday, August 31, by the presentation of "Jaffrey," the first of the Gold Eagle features released by the International Film Services, Inc. It will have a run of nine days, and will be succeeded on September 9 by "Ramona," which Aaron J. Jones has secured for a run.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago, for the ensuing week:

Studebaker—"The Velvet Paw" (Brady), with House Peters and Gail Kane in the leading roles, and the seventeenth chapter of "Gloria's Romance" (George Kleine), entitled "The Telltale Enveope."

Fine Arts—Mae Marsh and Robert Harron in "The Little Liar" (Fine Arts).

V-L-S-E Theater—"The Footlights of Fate" (Vitagraph), featuring Marc MacDermott and Naomi Childers.

Orchestra Hall—Dustin Farnum in "The Parson of Panamint" (Paramount); "Scenes of Hawaii" a Paramount-Bray animated cartoon, and Marjorie Dodge Warner, soprano soloist.

LaSalle—"Where Are My Children?" (Universal).

When Della Connor Smiles

EVERYONE connected with the George Kleine Studios is kept in a happy mood these "dog days" by the bright smile and silvery laugh of Miss Della Connor, vivacious blonde and charming ingenue who plays opposite Harry Watson, Jr. in "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer." If, on a bleak and rainy Monday you reach the studio with a grouch against nothing in particular and everything in general (as is often the case) it is soon dispelled when Della, with her high-pitched cheery voice and twinkling blue eyes, greets you with a "Morning Mac" and "Howdy Bill." And one has to know Della but a short time to appreciate the truth of this statement. She may be well termed an Apostle of Joy, for her belief in looking at the bright side of things at all times cannot be shaken. But do not think for one moment that Della has avoided the serious problems of life. Most of her spare time is spent in her modest cottage located in the suburbs of New York City, where she takes great pride in the making of many palatable delicacies. Yes, boys, Miss Connor is married, and she is quite proud of the fact that although many years of her young life have been spent in the theatrical world her domestic education has not been neglected.

Della Connor.

Miss Connor will undoubtedly be remembered by many as one of Gus Edward's proteges. For over a year she was prominent with the Pathe Freres organization. Her relations with George Kleine have been crowned with marked success, her work in "Officer 666," "The Scarlet Road" with Malcolm Duncan and Anna Nilsson, and "The Danger Signal" with Arthur Hoops, being especially commendable. Her work in "The Mishaps of Musty Suffer" has added a host of admirers to the long list she had previously acquired, for they were quick to realize her one of the most versatile screen beauties of the present day.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By G. P. VON HARLEMAN and CLARKE IRVINE

ESSANAY TO START PRODUCTION ON THE COAST.

Will Establish Studio in Los Angeles and Reopen Plant At Niles, Cal.

WE ARE informed that the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will soon establish a motion picture studio in Los Angeles or some near-by point. It is expected that a studio site will be secured in Hollywood for the new company and production to be started at a very early date. Max Linder, the international-known French comedian, who was the originator of comedies for Pathe in Paris, is now on his way to this coast, together with members of his company, which includes directors and cameramen, and he will be in entire charge of the productions.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay, has been planning for a year or more to locate a comedy company out here, but it was not until recently that he was enabled to secure the talent and services of Linder.

Mr. Linder contemplates making a comedy different from anything yet attempted in America, and much slapstick will be employed. George Stone, former well-known legitimate star, will soon be sent to Niles, where he will open the old Essanay studio and produce some Western pictures.

NEVADA FILM COMPANY TO PRODUCE "THE PLANTERS."

John Ince, managing producer for the Nevada Motion Picture Company, arrived in Los Angeles this week with his assistant directors, cameramen and other helpers. On September 11 the company will embark for Guatemala Central America, where scenes for a multiple reel production will be taken.

There will be about eighteen persons in the company, which will sail for the Central American Republic, and they will be absent more than twelve weeks. Tyrone Power will be featured in the big production, and he will probably be supported by Edith Sterling and Hal Cooley. The other members of the company will be selected this week.

"The Planters" is the picture to be produced by the Nevada Film Company, and is said by many critics to be one of the finest stories of Amerian literature. The story calls for a Mexican setting, but on account of the trouble in Mexico, Guatemala was selected as a location. Rubber plantations, mountain and desert scenes, together with mobs of Indians and Mexicans, may be obtained there with a little effort, and these are a necessary part of the production.

C. J. Ward, the business manager of the company, who is in the city at present, is planning the details of the trip, and he says he believes "The Planters" story will film spectacularly equal to "The Birth of a Nation," and will be a competitor to any of the "big" pictures now being exhibited.

SELIG CARAVAN GOES TO DESERT.

With over three hundred stars, players, extras and technical workers, a company of Selig players have gone to the desert. They went to Oxnard, on a desert north of here, to make scenes of "The Garden of Allah" on the sand dunes at the Lehmann ranch at Hueneme. The desert and oasis scenes will be made here. Their production will take about ten days.

A special train of five passenger coaches, three baggage cars and two freight cars brought the company to Oxnard. Special scenery, ten or more camels, donkeys and horses were brought.

The principals of the company will make their residence at Hotel Oxnard while the film is being made. The large number of helpers will camp near the scene of the production.

The director said this morning that Miss Helen Ware, Tom Santschi and Mat V. Snyder will have star parts in the film drama, a great part of which is made up of atmosphere. Night scenes will be made one night during the time the company is there.

A report from Oxnard says: "The Universal company advertised for 300 people to assist in pictures to be made this week on the sand dunes. Owing to the conflict in dates with the company now here, the Universal postponed its coming for two weeks. This morning about 200 people had gathered to apply for work in the pictures. They dispersed in disappointment when told that the company would not come this week."

PROMINENT SEATTLE EXHIBITOR HERE.

J. G. von Herberg, financial head and moving spirit of the Greater Theaters Company of Seattle, is in Los Angeles. Mr. Herberg has come to the film capital, he says, that he may study and familiarize himself with the producing end of the game.

"There's nothing like knowing one's business from A to Z," says von Herberg, "and that is why I have decided to spend several days here studying all the ins and outs of this great industry, which I believe is still in its infancy."

Mr. von Herberg started in the picture game five years ago with a small storeroom and plenty of nerve and sound business judgment as his only assets. From this small beginning he has climbed to the top of the exhibitor's ladder with the development of the Greater Theaters chain. This controls four of the largest of Seattle's theaters, including the new $350,000 Coliseum, rated as the most magnificent motion picture palace in America. The company is now building another $250,000 house at Butte and has other outside interests.

"In this day and age, when everyone from the cradle up reads the newspapers, the picture show manager need not expect success until he learns the value of newspaper advertising," said Mr. von Herberg.

This company found that to reap the benefit of national advertising of film companies it was necessary to carry big ads in the daily newspapers to secure local benefits. This advertising was first started when the company owned one theater. Then the profits made possible through publicity were used to build another house and, never letting up on the newspaper advertising, the profits from the two theaters were then turned into a third, and so on.

"And in this connection I might add that a theater management can never expect to reap the maximum profits until big space is used in the newspapers. If you have something important to say, use big type and page ads. It pays."

SAN DIEGO EXHIBITORS FIGHT ENCLOSED REWIND ORDINANCE.

San Diego exhibitors have had to fight to put an ordinance down that was going to compel them to use enclosed rewinders.

Framed by the city building department, this ordinance making radical changes in the picture ordinance was thrown into the discard by the council.

Members of the Council took this action after listening to arguments by local picture and vaudeville house-men. It was shown by J. M. Dodge, of the Spreckles theater; R. E. Hicks, of the Plaza and Cabrillo, and others that the proposed amendments would work a hardship on local managers. Hicks charged that one portion of the ordinance relating to "enclosed rewinding machines" in booths, indicated that persons having these machines for sale advocated the changes. He said that one theater manager had been approached by a concern selling this apparatus.

A building department employee declared that the building department knew nothing of any concern attempting or desiring to see such apparatus. He said that the proposed amendments were based on the new rules of the board of fire underwriters, and for no other reason. He read the provisions of the underwriters' code to prove his contentions. The moving picture men contended that these rules were only carried out in New York City. They asserted that the amendments proposed here would put them to great expense, and said that their places already are entirely safe under the present ordinance.

L. A. EXCHANGE MANAGERS MEET.

At a meeting held here this week by local film exchange and sales managers, infinite tact, the ability to judge human nature, a complete knowledge of the business and a thorough acquaintance with the city in which one operates, are among the attributes required by the man who would place motion picture films, according to R. E. Taylor, local manager of the International Film Service, who addressed the Salesmanagers' Association meeting at a local cafe.

"The field, a comparatively new one, offers unlimited opportunities to the man of initiative and ability," said Mr. Taylor, who discussed in detail the problems faced by the film people today.

C. M. Simmons, manager of the Mutual Exchange, talked on the same subject, and Stuart Morrow, organizing secretary, who presided, outlined the objects and ideals of the organization, recently started.

This is one of the first meetings of this organization and we ought to hear more from them in a short time.

LOS ANGELES FILM BREVITIES.

J. Warren Kerrigan and a number of the players of his company while returning to Universal City from Eureka, Cal., where they filmed a number of scenes for his current production, "The Measure of a Man," were near to death in a collision at sea about fifty miles north of San Francisco. They were aboard the coastwise passenger steamer "City of Topeka," when at 1:30 o'clock in the morning they were thrown from their berths and a dash to the deck followed. It was found that a lumber schooner had attempted to run across the bow of the passenger vessel and it was struck amidships. However, both vessels kept afloat and the "City of Topeka" limped safely into San Francisco Harbor.

Harry Carey, who plays one of the featured leads in "The Underling," a Universal production under the direction of Henry McRae, was thrown against a railroad track this week and his shoulder severely injured while performing a perilous stunt in one of the scenes. An x-ray photograph of the injured shoulder, made by Dr. Lloyd Mace, surgeon in charge of the Universal hospital, developed the fact that a bone had been fractured.

Another man on the sick list at Universal City is Herbert Rawlinson, who was rather severely injured while pulling off a fight scene before the cameras. No man in films enjoys a battle more than our friend Herbert, and it was while engaged in a thrilling fight that he sustained a fall, tearing the ligaments of his knee and seriously bruising the muscles of his leg.

By a strange trick of fate the company directed by William Worthington, was working at the Los Angeles County Hospital at the time, so the injured actor was conveyed quickly to one of the surgical rooms by the attendant. There an x-ray examination was made and it was found that while no bones were broken, the ligaments and muscles were badly injured. Although suffering great pain, Rawlinson was taken to his home, where he will remain until his injuries are healed.

Sir Herbert Berbohm Tree has completed his performance in the Triangle version of Rupert Hughes' "Old Folks at Home," and the eminent English actor-manager, accompanied by his daughter, Miss Tris Tree, has departed for New York, where he will arrange for his passage to England. Before leaving for the East, Sir Herbert was the guest of honor at a farewell dinner given in his honor by Director Chester Withey, who directed Tree in "Old Folks at Home." Present at this dinner were a number of Fine Arts celebrities. "Old Folks at Home" is in an almost completed state. There are several good acting parts in the story and a cast that will do these roles justice were selected by Director Withey.

Director Raymond B. West is making extensive preparations for the forthcoming filming of a sensational railroad collision. The collision will be staged for scenes in the current Triangle play in which Dorothy Dalton, Howard Hickman and Enid Markey will be presented in a tri-star combination. Already, Director West has conferred with railroad heads in Los Angeles with the result that the collision is expected to prove the most spectacular piece of work ever staged for the screen. The scenes will be obtained by sending two passenger trains crashing together in a head-on collision on one of the spur tracks adjacent to Los Angeles.

With a company of nearly two dozen players, Director Walter Edwards left for the Sacramento River in Northern California, where he will stage many of the interesting scenes for a new Triangle play by John Lynch, in which Frank Keenan is being starred. The scenes will be filmed aboard an old ferry boat which has been chartered by the Ince organization. It is an old stern-wheeler of the Mississippi River type, being, it is said, nearly sixty years old.

In the production of the fifteen episode serial, "The Lass of the Cumberlands," featuring Helen Holmes, Director General J. P. McGowan is this week making use of the famous Hopi Indian reservation and a large portion of its people. The Hopi reservation is one of the least known of all the lands now occupied by Indians in this country because of its difficulty of access. Within its confines are encamped the last remaining members of the once powerful Hopi tribe, now approximately 1,400. The company is camped there temporarily and with the completion of the scenes to be made there, the first episode of the big serial will be completed.

These are busy days at the Kalem. The railway company is hard at work on the erection of a two-story frame building that is to be a feature in "Election's Peril." This building will be burned down in the course of the production of this film. The regular company is still working on "The Girl from 'Frisco." The eighth episode of the series is now under production. It is entitled "The Battle in the Dark" and deals with the fake Hindoo mystics. Miss Kirkby, who has been playing leading parts in "The Girl from 'Frisco," left for New York the other day, whence she will go to Jacksonville, Fla., to take leading parts with the Jacksonville Kalem Company.

J. Edward Hungerford, who has a number of big films of the American to his credit as adaptor, has left that film and is living in Los Angeles doing free lance and continuity work.

Charles Clary is now a miner, having jitneyed to certain gold mines in California on which he has an option. For several days he was a regular miner—high boots, corduroy trousers, wide-brimmed hat and all. On his return he proudly exhibited what he declared was a nugget, and one could almost see flashes of the gold it contained. Mr. Clary's work in the Lasky Farrar picture for the remainder of that week was indeed a happy performance.

H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of Balboa, writes that "That courtesies extended to Balboa by you and your admirable paper during the past year have not fallen upon ungrateful hearts, and it is the purpose of this letter to express to you our appreciation of your consistent kindness."

Well, H. M., we appreciate your appreciation.

If you do not think "publicity pays," write and ask little Bennie Zeidman, the Fine Arts publicity man, who has accepted a flattering offer from F. J. Balshofer, of the Yorke-Metro Hollywood studio, to take charge of the latter's press department. Zeidman, who is nationally known as "Bennie of Lubinville," has been associated with David Wark Griffith for the past two years, first with the Reliance and Majestic, and remained with the famous producer after he joined the Triangle, and started to make Fine Arts pictures. The young publicity purveyor leaves the Fine Arts Company with the best wishes of the entire studio, and Chet Withey.

Bessie Eyton has returned from Chicago and is back at her favorite stamping ground, the Selig Zoo studios.

The Vogue Film Company is making plans to construct a large glass-enclosed studio near their present location, and Manager J. R. Crone plans to make it the finest of its kind on the Coast.

G. P. Hamilton, of the Century Film Company, and his company of players of Roundup, Mont., who have been completing a seven-reel picture in Los Angeles, have returned to Montana, where a second feature film will be started, to be completed in Los Angeles later in the year.

While working in the finishing scenes of a three-reel underworld story entitled, "Three Armed Maggie," Miss Betty Schade, the well-known Universal leading lady, fell from a flight of steps and broke one of her arms.

Anita King, the Lasky star, who will shortly be seen with Theodore Roberts in "Anton the Terrible," has gone into business, and soon a substantial corporation, of which she is the head, will introduce itself into the busy marts of commerce. When Miss King made her transcontinental automobile trip last summer, she preserved her complexion, and in spite of the elements encountered, arrived in New York with the same fair complexion. So many people have inquired the ingredients of the preparation she used, and she has prepared so much of it for her friends, that she has finally been induced to place it on the market. So shortly, "The Anita King Complexion Cream for Motorists" will blossom forth. She has engaged a responsible physician to compound it for her, but will handle it entirely through correspondence. Send in your money!

Donald Crisp, directing for the Clune Co., has gone into the deep recesses of San Gabriel Canyon to take the final scenes of "The Eyes of the Word," which will succeed "Ramona" as the next Clune production. Three weeks or more will be consumed in the work. The company took along a camp equipage as complete as that of a regiment. Their locations are far off the traveled roads, and were only reached by stage and burro after the automobiles were sent back. The players will have a privacy in their work that has become quite rare for film actors. Projection equipment and laboratory outfit are part of the camp supplies.

Chaperoned by maids and mothers, four of the Los Angeles society girl pupils of Ruth St. Denis appeared as Oriental dancing girls in the second Lou-Tellegen picture which is now being directed by Ed. J. Le Saint. Miss St. Denis trained the girls in this dance especially for the Lasky company.

Frank Lloyd, the director who did such excellent work with the Morosco and Pallas companies, has joined Fox and will head one of these companies in Los Angeles. Mr. Lloyd is delighted with his new affiliations and is looking forward to producing some big films.

The Hendricksons, well known in Redlands, have leased the Wyatt theater for the coming season. Plans are being made for improvements so that big feature productions may be shown. Two "Power's 6-B" motor-driven projecting machines wil be used in the theater and in the balcony a machine booth, absolutely fireproof, will be built. They have also made plans for a 2,000-seat Airdome, which they expect to erect next spring and operate.

Frank Simpson has leased the National theater, 450 South Main street, to G. E. Van Guysling for a period of five years four months and eleven days, from August 20, 1916, at an approximate rental of $50,000. The new management plans to immediately close the theater for a general renovation, re-opening it under a new name September 1.

W. G. SMART LEAVES BIOGRAPH.

When a man has stood the trials and tribulations of a technical expert in a moving picture studio for nine years without a rest, he is well entitled to a genuine vacation. At least, that is the way William G. Smart, until recently technical expert and supervisor of all stage settings, properties, etc., for the Biograph Company feels about it. During the past nine years Mr. Smart was directly responsible for all the massive settings so attractive in Biograph pictures, the chief of which, perhaps, were the settings in "Judith of Bethulia."

While with the Biograph Company, Mr. Smart cooperated with such prominent directors as D. W. Griffith, James Kirkwood, W. Chrystie Cabanne, Frank Powell, Mack Sennett, Eddie Dillon, Lawrence Marston, Barry O'Neill, and many others. In fact, while the Klaw & Erlanger subjects were being produced he "worked" with nine directors at one time.

Mr. Smart recently severed his connections with the Biograph Company and is taking a well earned rest. What his plans are for the future is not known, although it is not very likely that the motion picture industry will lose the originator of attractive stage settings in pictures.

Emotional Mood in Music

Louis Maurice, Conductor of "Civilization" Orchestra, Finds The Accompaniment of Photoplays a Fascinating Study.

THE importance of music in bringing out the emotional appeal of a photoplay is being recognized on every hand, with some authorities rating it as high as fifty per cent. in estimating the elements that contribute to the success of an elaborate screen production. For some time past there has been an effort to interest the best composers in preparing scores for motion picture accompaniments, and the next logical step was the engagement of skilled conductors to interpret the music in unison with the screen portrayal. As the stage has contributed directors, writers and actors to the photoplay art, so it has contributed musicians of the first caliber, and high among these stands Louis Maurice, conductor of the orchestra accompanying Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" at the Park Theater, and general musical director in control of other orchestras engaged to accompany the showing of the picture on the road.

Louis Maurice.

There is scarcely a theatrical producer with whom Mr. Maurice has not been associated during his long career. During the many years he was with David Belasco he prepared the music for such productions as "The Darling of the Gods;" then with Charles Frohman, Henry Miller and others, he continued achievements that established him in the confidence of theatrical men. As a composer, too, he has won renown with many popular songs, the latest being "The Boomerang" march, the "Erstwhile Susan" waltz and "The Great Lover" waltz.

Having had such experience, following a musical education in Brussels and Paris, Mr. Maurice brought a thoroughly matured art to the service of motion pictures and henceforth he intends to make the betterment of music in photoplay theaters his chief work. "It offers a broader field, it is more interesting and the demand for good conductors is going to increase," he said in speaking of this decision.

Mr. Maurice first showed his exceptional aptitude for the task of blending music and photoplays at the Knickerbocker Theater where he conducted the orchestra during the run of Triangle pictures. It was here that he recognized the possibilities of the new field and after his success at the Knickerbocker, Mr. Ince looked to him to provide "Civilization" with an adequate musical setting.

"The infinite variety of a big photoplay is at once a conductor's inspiration and problem," said Mr. Maurice in speaking of his work. "Take 'Civilization,' for example. It passes from one emotional mood to another in the flash of a scene and the transition in the music must be equally rapid. If a conductor does not feel a picture he simply cannot get results from his men. He must know every note of the music and every scene in the drama, and then it is no easy problem to get the desired results from his orchestra.

"You would be surprised at the difficulty I have experienced in selecting conductors for the road productions of 'Cilvilzation.' Leaders who have something of a reputation have failed completely in bring out the spirit of the picture. When they do not instinctively respond to the moods of a drama it is quite hopeless, and even when they do, many rehearsals are necessary before the orchestra is up to the standard required by Mr. Ince. This reaching the emotions of an audience through sight and sound is a fascinating study and the more artistic photoplays become, the greater will be the demand for true musicians."

ANOTHER HOUSE ORGAN.

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation is issuing a house organ, called the Unicorn Banner, containing the stories of the films released. H. J. Streyckmans is the editor.

"The Fear of Poverty"

Five-Part Thanhouser Production Featuring Florence La Badie Creditable Addition to Pathe Gold Rooster Program.

Review by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE second of the Agnes C. Johnson stories to appear on the Gold Rooster program evidences the same carefully devised characterization, and the same remarkable insight into things human. There is the same tendency to picture life in snatches rather than to arrange facts in conventional story form, and the effect is good because the central idea is made clear.

Scene from "The Fear of Poverty" (Thanhouser).

Florence LaBadie is the featured member of the cast, playing a double role, that of mother and daughter. Miss LaBadie is to be especially commended for her portrayal of these two distinct chacters—the one that of the girl reared in poverty, who later realizes her desire for wealth, accompanied by a fear of poverty which saps the sweetness from every joy, and the other that of the daughter whose mother, in constant watchfulness that her daughter should want for none of the luxuries of life, aids in the development of a selfish nature. The tragic result of her marrying a supposedly wealthy social parasite rather than the poor but manly artist is a fitting climax to the story.

In the supporting cast are George Marlo, Edwin Stanley, Ethyl Cooke and other competent players. The production has had the advantage of careful staging, and, as would be expected from the nature of the subject, is of excellent moral tone. The scenes, taken on New York's east side, are well chosen and interesting. There is plenty of opportunity in the play for all concerned, the rusult being that the flow of action is continuous and easy.

"Little Miss Happiness"

June Caprice and Harry Hilliard Have Leads in Love Story —It Is Artificial, but Has Suspense.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WITH a situation in a picture that the author of the script the director and players could hardly believe in, one need not be surprised to find artificially drawn characters. In the recent Fox picture, "Little Miss Happiness," most of the characters are forced to picture the story first and be true to humanity afterward as much as they can. That quite a few of them do manage to get real human moments now and then into their parts is to the credit of all concerned.

The plot, written by Clarence Harris, evidences just enough grey matter to make it acceptable—many people will like it—but it is not largely original nor mostly convincing, nor free from padding. It is just pretty fair. John Adolphi produced it and there are many good bits in it, especially in the latter half. The sets are apt to be pretty and sometimes they are appropriate to the story, sometimes not. There are scenes that don't help much; there are parts of the story that are skimped and parts that are dragged out. It is a commercial offering and is commendable as such it will serve.

June Caprice and Harry Hilliard have the leads in the love story set in a village. The first has a conventional close-to-nature part, the sweet, unspoiled flower kind. She lives with a grandmother, very pleasingly played by Sara Alexander. Hilliard plays the business-like, manly son of the village usurer, very conventional, whose wife is a motherly person, sensibly acted, who wins sympathy. Their other child, a daughter, played by Zena Keefe, has to carry the burden (the part of life's sorrow) as a kind of second heroine; she is but principally to furnish the baby which the heroine claims as "hers," for didn't her best friend give it to her to keep while she sought for her husband? The picture gets the situation all set out, then it hurries up the happy ending.

"The Shielding Shadow"

First Four Episodes of the New Pathe Serial Give Promise of Exceptional Entertainment Values.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

FOLLOWING the example of other serial productions released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., "The Shielding Shadow," which offers itself to the public gaze in fifteen parts, is fraught with those moments of thrilling suspense that the before said public expects and hopes for.

This serial is being made by the Astra Film Corporation, with Louis J. Gasnier and Donald MacKenzie comprising the directing staff, while pretty Grace Darmond, Ralph Kellard and Leon Bary are the featured members of the cast. Its first four episodes are entitled respectively "Treasure Trove," "Into the Depths," "The Mystic Defender" and "The Earthquake." Its story, written by Randall Parrish, has been scenarioized by George Brackett Seitz, takes the form of extreme melodrama, boasts much of the artistic in its manner of staging and is thoroughly absorbing. Grace Darmond, in addition to being otherwise captivating in appearance, dresses the role of Leontine Walcott, in love with Jerry Carson, a young writer, and practically forced by her father into a loveless marriage with Sebastian Navarro, a Spaniard, exquisitely.

The tragedy of the story thus far hinges about the death of one Diego, a tool of the Spaniard, during a fight between he and Carson over a forged note in which Carson is purported to have said that he would settle a certain debt after his marriage to Leontine. Carson, arrested on circumstantial evidence, is sent to serve a life term in prison, but effects a thrilling escape when he takes the place of a dead body about to be buried at sea from aboard the prison ship, cuts the rope binding the lid of the coffin and rises miraculously from the bottom of the sea. On the report of his death Leontine is persuaded to marry the Spaniard to save her father from a financial break.

The "shielding shadow" is a mysterious personage who undertakes to right the wrongs of the main characters of the story. Various interesting types appear in the course of the serial, among them One Lamp Louie, another tool of the Spaniard, writer of the forged note and incidentally the only living person other than Carson who witnessed the death of Diego. He is therefore a source of terror to Nevarro, and at the point where the earthquake breaks into the game the serious point at issue is a confession which the "shielding shadow" has hypnotized him into writing.

The opening episode will be released Oct. 1.

ish life, is delightful of its kind, and affords one of the best screen comedy-dramas of recent production.

In the cast assisting Mr. Bernard is Mrs. Moscowitz, who appeared with him in "Potash and Perlmutter," and who in the present instance plays in fine style the affectionate Jewish wife of Zalmon Pinsker, clothing manufacturer, whose dealings with the English fakirs and miraculous escape from financial ruin through the perfidy of his bookkeeper are the source of much amusement. There are also James Morrison in the role of Bob Deering through whose well-meant advice Pinsker meets his troubles, Lester Bernard as Ike Mandell, the false-hearted bookkeeper, Edward Elkes as Abie Lefkowitz, a competitor of Pinsker's in seeking to obtain the fake war order, Adele DeGarde as Molly Sherman, telephone girl, and sweetheart of Deering, Mary Maurice as Mrs. Gallagher, L. Roger Lytton as "Red" Dorgan, fake commissioner, and Robert Gaillard as his associate.

Paul Scardon has produced the picture, and we believe we are safe in predicting for it unusual popularity. The presentation of Jewish characteristics both in domestic and business life as portrayed by Barney Bernard could scarcely be improved on. The play has been remarkably well cast. Each character is a distinct type, the individuality of which has been well sustained.

"The Vampires"

New Gaumont Serial Starts Off With Startling Weirdness—First and Second Episodes Unusually Absorbing.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NINE episodes are destined to cover the newest in Gaumont serials, two having thus far been viewed by the press, entitled respectively, "The Detective's Head," and "The Red Notebook," both giving promise of further developments of weird and thrilling character.

The story of the serial hinges around the effort of the star reporter of a Paris news publication to fathom the mystery of the Vampires of the streets of Paris. Previous to his taking a serious part in the work that has been carried on for some time by the secret service, a famous detective has mysteriously disappeared, and it is reported that the headless corpse of the detective has been found somewhere on the outskirts of the city. The reporter gets his first clue in a castle in which he has requested to stop for a few days with one who professes to be Dr. Nox, a friend of his father's.

The strange happenings that night include the robbing of a feminine guest of her jewelry, the dropping of a mysterious note to the reporter in his bed, and the discovery of a secret panel above the head of his bed disguised as a picture, and the following day of the discovery of a box in this aperture over the bed in which is found the head of the dead detective. Following quickly on the footsteps of this comes the mysterious death of Mrs. Simpson, the guest at the castle, who on a call at the magistrate's office is left with Dr. Nox in an adjoining room. On the return of the authorities to arrest Dr. Nox he is found missing, and his clothing lying beside the dead body of the woman.

And so this serial which will be released on the Mutual program in the near future moves wonderfully onward to the second episode, which treats of the translating of the contents of the Red Notebook found in the raided den of the Vampires. The reporter feigning illness is still at work on the case, and his mother barely escapes assassination at their hands.

We predict success for this serial, which is well produced, and holds the interest of the spectator through every inch of the film.

"The Velvet Paw"

Story of Washington Political Life Is Given Excellent Production by Maurice Tourneur—Paragon-World Release.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN ALL of its physical aspects this five-part Paragon-World photoplay is unfallingly true to its subject—the subject being Washington, the Washington of avaricious senators and congressmen, of unscrupulous lobbyists, of beautiful women and a few young idealists who are ready to save the country if they are given only half a chance. Streets and buildings made famous the country over by means of picture post cards are used as a background for most of the action; there is a detailed depiction of congress in session; in fact, there are no shortcomings in suggesting the atmosphere demanded by the story.

These scenic attributes are by no means the only or even the chief virtues of "The Velvet Paw," but they add materially to the worth of a really first-class production in which House

Peters, Gail Kane, Ned Burton and Frank Goldsmith play the leading roles. It is the sort of a photoplay that should go particularly well in a season of political campaigning when there is much talk of graft, and candidates explain to their constituents just why they are the only fit men to represent the public. The moral of the story written by Paul West and adapted by Gardner Hunting seems to be that honesty, if not exactly the best policy in Washington, may be made to pay if a stalwart young orator is its champion.

In the opening reel the case of honesty seems almost hopeless. An inventor with a device that might prove of inestimable value to the United States navy is unable to get fair treatment from the authorities because he refuses to play the game their way. But he has a clever, pretty wife who undertakes to win over the all-powerful Senator Barring. When the discouraged inventor kills himself, the penniless wife becomes a lobbyist for the senator and his crowd, using her influence with recalcitrant legislators when open bribery fails. Mary Dexter (the Velvet Paw) ruins one ambitious young congressman after she has made him fall in love with her, and is following the same tactics with another when love causes a sudden change of heart. She cheers him on to victory as he defeats the nefarious Child Labor bill.

Mr. Peters, in both appearance and manner, gives a convincing portrayal of the aggressively honest statesman, while Miss Kane possesses enough beauty and charm to make her influence over man credible. Mr. Burton fulfills the public's idea of a scheming senator, who smokes large cigars continuously. The story is plausible and at times dramatic.

"Under the Gaslight"

Augustin Daly's Play Is Adapted Into a Stirring Screen Melodrama—Released by Biograph.

Revlewed by Lynde Denig.

THE acting of Lionel Barrymore, playing a low and altogether brutal character of the underworld, is enough to raise this three-part picture above the class of ordinary melodrama. His performance is forceful in the extreme; he fairly lives the part of the man who abuses his wife and children with equal readiness, and assists in the scheme whereby his infant daughter is substituted for the child of a wealthy family. Mrs. Marston, as the wife, is an able second in presenting the family brawls, enacted in scenes of the most depressing squalor, whereas others in a long cast are unfailingly suitable to the characters introduced.

We have Irene Howley as the young woman of unfortunate parentage, who, owing to the substitution of babies, grows up in the belief that she is an heiress, while the rightful heir to the fortune, the innocent victim of many machinations, is portrayed by Millicent Evans. Miss Howley's performance is particularly worthy of note because of her skilled use of facial expressions in conveying emotions. Isabel Rea may always be counted on to present an attractive appearance on the screen; then in other roles of varied importance there are such able players of early Biograph fame as Thomas Jefferson.

Complex as the plot becomes in the photoplay adaptation, it is developed with commendable clearness, and if an audience is looking for either action or thrills they will be found in sufficient quantity. Director Lawrence Marston gained some of his most startling effects in the last reel, most of which was staged on or near a river dock where a number of crimes are attempted and nearly accomplished. For a final thrill, a man is tied to the rails of a track in front of an approaching train that he may be rescued not a moment too soon. There is more real melodrama in these three reels than is generally found in a five-reel production of the same nature.

"The Diamond Runners"

Lively Detective Melodrama in Five Reels, Featuring Helen Holmes.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ANIMATED and moving vigorously, "The Diamond Runners" depicts a new phase in detective melodrama and is more than a mere vehicle for Helen Holmes. The entire cast is good, the types well selected and opportunity better balanced than in a play written exclusively for a star. Miss Holmes has an attractive personality, and the ease with which she responds to demands upon her ability as an actress indicates experience and fine training, but she has something yet to learn. She trusts so much to the situation that she often fails to give it emphasis. This is possibly due to a desire on her part not to overact, but all minds in a mixed audience are not rapid ones in the matter of comprehension, and it is better to intensify mental revelation on that account.

The story relates to the operations of an organized gang of diamond smugglers, and no little ingenuity is shown in developing their methods of carrying uncut stones from the mines to the market, but it looks like an elaborate and expensive process, filled with peril, particularly when there is opposed to the clever crooks an equally clever band of detectives alert to every movement made. Suspense is carefully maintained, however, and a small love story interwoven, but, as in all cases where the love story is of secondary interest, it fails to stir sympathetic interest. It is often demanded in detective stories that "some love interest" must be injected, but it must be more than injected at random—it must rival the satisfaction of curiosity in the solution of the crime problem. In vivacity and capable treatment, "The Diamond Runners" finds its chief merits.

"The Country that God Forgot"

A Gripping Photodrama of the Far West by Selig, Featuring Mary Charleson, Thomas Santschi and George W. Fawcett—Written and Directed by Marshall Neilan.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"THE Country That God Forgot" tells the story of a man's great love for his wife, of that wife nearly wrecking her own life and his by failing to understand her own heart, and of a loyal partner whose friendship is stanch and true in the face of death itself.

Marshall Neilan has succeeded in concentrating all one's attention for over an hour on a God-forsaken, arid waste of desert, interminable in its monotony of sage brush, cactus and sand, all because we witness amidst the loathsome dreariness the testing of a heart-sick, little woman who longs to see the great, pulsing, outside world of which she knows nothing. And much as has been written of Western life in this country, one cannot fail to be impressed that the story is somewhat different from any that has been read, and that it grips strongly at the elemental life that is in each one of us.

The opening scene gives us the atmosphere of the story in a flash, and then the desert waste fades out and we see the little woman of the story looking out wistfully and hopelessly into the future. The lonely little cabin in which she is maid-of-all-work for her husband, Steve Brant (Thomas Santschi), and his sturdy partner, Cal Hearn (George W. Fawcett), is typically Western both inside and out. Its loneliness, above all, comes home to us with the sense of a numbing pain. Little wonder is it that Mrs. Helen Brant welcomes the stranger, Cralg Wells (Chas. Gerrard), who has come from the busy world outside, and that she listens to his wonderful descriptions of the things that take place in it with the wrapt attention of a child who hears for the first time the tale of Aladdin's lamp.

Director Neilan has furnished us a typical interior of an old-time Western gambling saloon as Mrs. Brant tells Cralg Wells the story of her origin and of her marriage to Steve Brant. The scene is true to the life. The faro layouts, the roulette wheel, the players, the young women habitues and the widely differing types of men present will bring back recollections that had faded out to many an old timer. Mr. Neilan's method of introducing to the spectator the three partners—Steve Brant, Cal Hearn and Mike Donovan—will be appreciated for its novelty. We first see them on horseback, trotting along a road, with a little burro in the rear bearing their camping outfit. Each man, in turn, is taken by a close-up as he trots past, so that the introduction of the players who impersonate them appears naturally in the story.

Scene from "The Country That God Forgot" (Selig).

The fight in the gambling room, in which the three partners participate, is very well directed and sustained. When Steve Brant (Thomas Santschi) forces the Mexican who had precipitated the quarrel into an inner room, and then follows him and locks the door, the spectator is held in as great suspense as was the crowd in the gambling hall. After fifteen minutes Steve comes out alone, considerably disfigured, with his clothes in tatters. We all know that the other fellow got what was coming to him, without having seen a blow struck. Besides, censorship has been appeased.

Mary Charleson's Helen Brant will appeal to all admirers of talented acting. In the final scene, where Helen lies between life and death, with her husband at her bedside praying the first prayer of his life, "Oh, God, I ain't never asked you for nothin' before, but please don't take her from me," one is tensely held by the fear that she may never come back.

Thomas Santschi and George W. Fawcett share equal honors in the five characterizations of Steve Brant and Cal Hearn. When Cal places his own savings for years in the same sack that contains those of Steve, so that Helen Brant and the man who has stolen her from her home may have a nest egg to start them in life, one's heart throb catches on something that makes the tears come. "Divide nuthin'! It all goes in!" mutters Cal, as he scoffs at Steve's wish that only his own gold should go to Helen.

The pursuit and capture of Craig Wells are exciting. His death at the hands of the lynching party Director Neilan has been careful not to show. We see the doomed man ride away into the night with his captors, and we see the latter return with a riderless horse!

"The Social Secretary"

Bright and Attractive Five-Reel Comedy, Featuring Norma Talmage, Released by Fine Arts.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A GENUINE high comedy, admirably constructed and handled with skill, "The Social Secretary" is among those plays hardest to write and easiest to criticize in a fault-finding mood, but it escapes censure through plausibility, through charm of presentation and through the remarkable interpretation of Norma Talmadge and a support of unusual intelligence. It gets over with a "zip" in spite of the fact that some of the material, the country girl's adventures in the city as a typist, is far from new. It is new in method and it fairly sparkles at times with that spirit of vivacious entertainment sadly lacking in most screen stories. It is kept within comedy lines by plausibility, never straining for melodramatic effect, yet there is an element of suspense and no little amount of adventurous incident.

Miss Talmadge rises high in her interpretation of a pretty girl who is obliged to "uglify" herself in order to hold a situation in New York as a typist. We know that she will change this guise toward the end, but she gives an artistic demonstration of the value of clothes and makeup as a setting for beauty. Now that she has done so well, one feels that no better type could have been chosen for the role. In every scene where she appears, her characterization is so vivid that the story gradually becomes her. She has probably never given a better character interpretion, attractive, intelligent and fascinating from the beginning of the story to its happpy conclusion. Most fortunately, all the other parts are in harmony, making a complete and satisfactory performance.

"The Dawn Maker."

While "The Dawn Maker," a five-reel Triangle-Ince, featuring William S. Hart in a new role, is a consistent and poetic tragedy, and Mr. Hart plays the role of a half-breed with pathetic dignity, the story does not contain enough material for five reels, and it drags toward the crisis, where it should be most intense. The ruling idea, that of showing a powerful and ambitious man who feels the call of two races within him, who is now influenced by his savage instincts and training and again by the resistless forces which have made the white man a creator of world empire, is a magnificent one, but Mr. Gardner's development of the idea is not up to his full powers as an author. He carries it along lines so commonplace and so often used that he misses some big opportunity.

The story of a half-breed who loves hopelessly a white girl and finally rescues her and her manly white suitor from death in a snow trail by tragic self-sacrifice has been done with more vim in smaller proportions. On this account, and because the end is all-too-easily foreseen, the story lacks suspense. Mr Hart performs effectively, straight up to the opportunity afforded him, showing that he has large ability instead of that limited to the western tough reformed by the eastern angel. He needs a bigger and better medium.

Three Kalem Releases

"The Treasure of Cibola," Sixth Episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco," "Meter in the Kitchen," a One-Reel Comedy, and "The Hoodoo of Division B," a New "Hazard of Helen."

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Treasure of Cibola."

THE spirit of romance pervades the sixth instalment of the Robert Welles Ritchie serial, although the author has not neglected to work in a leaven of modern melodrama. "The Treasure of Cibola" was hidden in a cave in New Mexico by the Aztec Indians, before the days of the Spanish Conquest.

Scene from "The Treasure of Cibola" (Kalem).

Coronado, a Spanish adventurer, learns of the treasure from Chia, an Aztec maiden, and the two perish in an attempt to loot the cave. Barbara Brent finds the history of the treasure in an old book, while on a visit to a mission. She scents an adventure and makes up a party to visit the cave. A rascally promoter, who is trying to cheat her father, accompanies the lady, and the two nearly meet the fate that overtook the Spaniard and Chia. A tribe of Navaho Indians, who are supposed to venerate the spirit of Coronado and who know of the cave and its contents, add color to the story.

The picture has life, a large diversity of well-chosen locations, and is spiritedly acted by Marin Sais, True Boardman, Frank Jonasson, Ronald Bradbury and Hart Hoxie.

"Meter in the Kitchen."

All the trouble in this one-reel comedy is caused by that familiar domestic tragedy—the lack of a quarter to cram into the insatiable maw of the family gas meter. Everyone is left in the dark, at a critical moment in the plot, except the spectators, and they are treated to some clever lighting effects during the ensuing action. The story tells of a costume designer who is saved from despair by a motorman. Ivy Close is the designing young person and Henry Murdoch is the trolley pilot—an absolute guarantee that passengers on his car find the going anything but smooth. The reel is novel and run on a rapid schedule. Robert Ellis, William McKey and Mary Taylor-Ross have important assignments in the cast.

"The Hoodoo of Division B."

The hoodoo, in this number of the "Hazards of Helen," is an engine with a bad reputation for getting ditched or breaking down several times a week. A new superintendent insists upon the engine being sent out; the air brakes refuse to work, and a smashup is prevented by Helen, at the risk of her life. She chases the runaway train on another engine and brings it to a stop, after a series of feats that (to quote from our old friend, the circus poster) "must be seen to be appreciated." Helen Gibson is supported in her death-defying stunts by P. S. Pembroke, G. A. Williams and George Routh.

World Film Making "The Revolt."

"The Revolt," one of the biggest of the Shubert Broadway successes, is now being made into a five-part motion picture feature by the World Film Corporation, with Frances Nelson, Arthur Ashley, Clara Whipple, Frank Beamish and George McQuarrie in the cast. And, Little Madge Evans.

times before, but it is handled very cleverly, and the way in which the unsophisticated little maiden gets into the stock market and save her lover from ruin was both dramatic and amusing. The thought to make a rope of pearls the instrument of wrong, and the weapon of atonement is very effectively carried out in the story.

As usual in Lasky productions, atmosphere, settings, and light effects were generously in evidence, and helped materially "to put the picture over."

Miss Ward presented a pretty problem in female psychology, and she presented it most charmingly and entertainingly. In general the playwright has followed frankly melodramatic lines, and at times we could almost hear the hissing of the "villian." There is always a large and grateful audience for filmplays of this kind.

"The Big Sister"

Famous Players Picture with Mae Murray in an Engaging Character—Film's Best Asset Is Its Pretty Scenes.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

IT takes a stiffer mainspring to run a motion picture than to run the same story in a book. The new Famous Players picture, "The Big Sister," has a good level book plot, but it isn't steep enough for a picture. The level is commendably high, no doubt, yet it doesn't give the spectator the swing of motion, the emotion, that he wants and looks for in every theater. It lacks the integrating construction, the interrelationship of incident that makes a big, human situation grow and develop right before us so that we are made to feel vividly that we as humans are full of mystery and that cause and effect hook us up to many strange fortunes and dooms. The author shows a commendable desire to look at his facts and to be honest in solving situations, as, for instance, Betty's leaving the city with little Jimmy when "Nifty" begins to trouble her. He lets truth end his story and continues it, not under the patronage of All-Creative Jove, but by following that capricious goddess, Chance, to whom he sacrifices by making a rich man's automobile run over Jimmy, which leaves in our hands the probable ending of the story.

It is a likeable picture, full of pretty scenes and is pleasant, for there is nothing in it to harrow one. Mae Murray is charming as the diminutively big sister of Jimmy, played by Matty Roubert. Armand Cortes plays "Nifty," the gangster, whose job in the picture is to drive Betty toward good fortune, though at the right time he can also turn his hand to delay. Harry C. Browne plays the rich man with a beautiful place on the Hudson, who is to marry Betty, of course. Florence Flynn and Joe Gleason, as lovers with smaller difficulties, provide acceptablo buttressing to the main plot. Tammany Young amply fills a human sympathy part and he it is who provides the spectator with revenge on "Nifty" for all his terrible doings. Ida Darling and J. Albert Hall have substantial roles and do well. The producer is J. B. O'Brien who has had better material to work with than this and who has done much better work, though in this picture his work is excellent.

"If My Country Should Call"

Five-Reel Red Feather Release Tells of Mother Love Versus Patriotism in Time of Warfare.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS Red Feather offering, adapted by Ida May Park from a story by Virginia Terhune Van De Water, and very ably directed by Joseph De Grasse, finds a great deal of dramatic material in the subject of a mother's opposition to her son's enlistment. The theme is not what would be termed an entirely pleasant one, but the story has a happy ending and is commendable for its unusual qualities. Dorothy Phillips gives a smooth, forceful presentation of the mother part, getting her effects without strain or theatricalism. Jack Nelson is also pleasing as the son.

The story begins in one generation and runs well into the following. It pictures the marriage of a young American girl to an Englishman who is noted for his personal courage. The mother abhors warfare, but when her son has grown to manhood she meets a double test. The husband goes to England and enlists and the son desires to go to Mexico. The mother, torn by her fears, administers a heart depressant to her son, which prevents him from enlisting. It has the double effect of losing him the girl he loves. Tragedy is in the air. The son denounces all womankind, and the mother is about to kill herself, when—presto!—it turns out to be a dream. The story then reverts to former scenes and takes up the thread of events.

As stated, this rather harrows the feelings at times, but it is modern and dramatic. It presents problems that have been threshed out in the hearts of many women during the past two years. The presentation is acceptable throughout. The cast is pleasing and includes Lon Chaney, Gretchen Lederer, Frank Whitson, Clyde Benson, Helen Leslie and Adele Farrington.

Five-Part Military Drama for the Bluebird Program, with Harry Carey and Edith Johnson in the Leading Roles.

WHILE there is no lack of action in this production, and the subject based on the Mexican situation is timely, there is at the same time a lack of clearness in the outline of the story as it develops in the picture.

Harry Carey in the role of a young doctor, who has discovered a serum for the cure of gangrene which is of great value to the army, does effective work. Edith Johnson plays opposite to him as the daughter of Garcia, a Mexican diplomat, and later as a spy in the employ of Jose, an unstable fellow, who has deserted his own party and taken sides with the stronger faction. It is at that point in the story where he causes the son of Garcia to be shot that he forces Nina, one of the daughters of Garcia, to become associated with him in order that her sister may be saved from worse than death at the hands of the Mexican soldiers. In the Nomonza military hospital, in the guise of a nurse, Nina steals valuable papers for Jose, and later is temporarily saved from being shot as a spy by the intervention of the young doctor for whose sake she has risked her life in experimenting with his serum, and

In the cast besides those already mentioned are Ruth Clifford, Miriam Shelby, Marc Fenton, Bill Human, L. C. Shumway, E. N. Wallack, L. M. Wells, Ray Hanford and Lee Hill. Henry McRae has directed the picture.

Just because it never occurs to them to send in their stuff is no reason why others should not. Among recent issues is one from the Imperial, in West Philadelphia, a small four-pager done in green on white stock. Two out of the three cuts are poorly printed and the printer has a happy time seeing how full of type he can get the rest of the page, though now and then he does leave a little white space. The display is so poor that it would be better to put the entire program on page three, use page four for the underline and page two for house talk or a chat about the coming program. The first page uses a stock mortised cut, but the effect is by no means bad, as the ornamentation is not overdone but the inside pages are too casual in their effect. Merely the titles and stars are announced and the days are not dated, nor is there any descriptive matter whatever. Between badly set type and small type that is made readable, the choice lies with the latter, and most printers can set body type intelligently.

The Garrick and Grand, Norristown, share a four-pager. The Garrick has a good idea in the marginal note, but spoils it by setting it all in capital letters, making it difficult to read. It would be better if set in body type and the lines pulled together to leave space top and bottom. The reading matter is unconvincing. In announcing The Sorrow of Love the text is given to the fact that this is the second time that Miss Barriscale wears a black wig costing $200. That is hardly calculated to bring business to the house. It might interest a few, but more will want to know about the play, if their interest is to be engaged. Much the same thing shows in the top Grand box. It does not say that the story of Reggie is unusually funny, but merely tells that Mr. Fairbanks plays for the films only because he was promised that he would be allowed to create his own parts. It is a waste of white paper to try to make business on such facts. Tell about the films under discussion in such a way as to make people want to see them and the money is well spent, but no one cares about black wigs and magnates' promises. Both are artificial. It would pay to hire some newspaper man to write the copy.

The Pelham gets more white space, but the composition looks cheap. The management is alive, however, and calls attention to the fact that one picture was made in the immediate vicinity of the theater. But if a second title is run it is merely announced and not commented upon. A little study of the subject will enable the manager to write much better copy and perhaps induce his printer to better the display.

Welcome Back.

The Majestic Monthly, of Columbus, Ohio, is back after a summer vacation, and if it is not "higger and better than ever," it is merely because it is large enough and could not well be bettered. It takes real editorial skill to get out a program magazine such as this, a twenty-four page issue that is all original matter save a portion of the synopses. It is a magazine and not just a program; something to be read with interest and as carefully varied as to its contents as the news-stand type of magazine. We note in the office boy's page this confession of downfall:

> Whatdoyethink of our editor goin' and gittin' married after holdin' out as long as he did. Wasn't it the limit? All the single guys around here stood around and chuckled when it happened, but believe me, there's nothin' funny about it. When the bug bites you you're gone. You can talk about the infantile paralysis [illegible] takin' you quick, but it ain't got nothin' on the gittin' married thing. You set around in a hammock and hand a girl a lot of bunk about how you'd like to have your own home and how cute she'd look fryin' potatoes in a little four-room flat, and the first thing you know you're handin' the preacher a ten-spot and checkin' your trunk to Niagara Falls. The big chief thinks he's safe, but take it from me, they all fall sooner or later.

Here's the large right hand of fellowship and sympathy. We hope that his double blessedness will not impair his efficiency in the editorial chair. On the same page appears this paragraph:

> When it comes to downright nifty gals you've got to hand it to the little lady that works a shift on our Chickering. She hain't missed a day since we opened, she's always on time, and she's never out of humor. We call her the daughter of the regiment cause she's the only girl about the place. Here's what she can do: Play the piano, cook, darn socks and make her own clothes. She's got enough fellers shinin' around her to fill up the regiment at Camp Willis. Take it from me, the guy that lands her is going to get a prize. He's got to be a live wire and be able to bring home the bacon, 'cause she ain't got no time to fool on dead ones.

Evidently he wants to spread the matrimonial craze. Tipping on that "regiment" as to her abilities in the sock-darning and dress-making line will help. Funny how those newlyweds are filled with the "go thou and do likewise feeling." It wears off after a time.

His Third Program.

O. A. Angelbrecht blames his program on us, but we are willing to take the blame and more like it. He writes:

> Under separate cover I am sending my third anniversary program. It is the third program I have published, and if I get results from this I will get out a program weekly, but will have to put some outside advertising in it to help pay for it, as this cost too much for a weekly.
> I am sending you this program, as I know there is a lot of room for improvement and I feel that your criticism will be a big help to me.
>
> I must give you credit for this number as it is, for I have been studying your book on Picture Theater Advertising and also your column in the World.
> All the reading matter was got up in one column width, as it will all appear in the newspaper during the week.

His house is the Gem Theater, Temple, Tex., and the program is a souvenir of the third anniversary. It is an 8x10-inch issue, eight pages and colored cover, twelve in all. A reproduction of the middle pages will give a better idea of the layout than will a description. Mr. Engelbrecht did not get that layout from P. T. A. It seems to be his own idea, but he follows the rules of P. T. A. in throwing the program to the outside margin, using regular column width to save composition costs, dating his days and the rest and he has made an uncommonly good application of the rules to his own idea of make up. This width and depth for the program gives a better display than the usual column width, page depth program. Note his special musical number at the bottom, which is changed daily. The front white page carries a well written card of thanks and anticipation, not fulsome, not egotistical—just modest and dignified and appreciative. The text is not all held to the house. It is given the reader to make him interested. He reads about pictures and the players and in doing so he cannot help seeing those display programs. It is more a film weekly than a weekly program in the proper sense, and the items are well chosen. Our only comment by way of suggestion is that he started too big. It will cost money to hold to that form and he cannot afford to back down. It would have been better to have started with an eight, but with so good an issue, if Temple is at all alive, there is no reason why he should not sell his space on the cover pages for enough to pay the entire expense of the edition, or at least the greater portion of it, and if the town is large enough it should show him a small profit in the long run, because he is getting out something that will be read all the way through and that, therefore, it will pay to advertise in. Not all programs show a profit to the advertiser, but when the stuff will be read, if it makes an appeal, the house program is better for the trade advertising than the daily paper. It stays in the home longer, is read when one has leisure to read—instead of being hurriedly scanned for the news and then thrown aside, and it is more thoroughly distributed, reaching many the daily paper does not reach. That is about all we can offer in the way of comment, that and the suggestion that the front cover page be remade to carry a larger house title. The cut used is too small and too far down the page. It should rise to the top and be better displayed. If all of that matter is also run in the local paper through the week, probably the composition cost is cut down considerably.

Bad Morality, but——

The Famous Players' Exchange, Philadelphia, is one of those with a helpful house organ. It is only a four-pager printed in a passionate purple, but it almost gives three or four good hints. Here is one. The morality is poor, but the idea is good. Vary your stuff now and then. The item reads:

> One of the biggest advertising men in this country once told the editor of "Pointers" that no advertising idea was original. It was a broad statement to make, inasmuch as we always considered him an originator. He was candid in stating, however, that everyone of his ideas were "stolen." A clever advertisement is nearly always copied in all parts of the country—we do it ourselves. For instance: In writing your copy for next week's shows, just take a Saturday Evening Post and look over the ads. The one that strikes your fancy will in nearly every case prove satisfactory if you just substitute your own copy.

> Your friends can see pictures at any theater, —But Paramount Pictures can be seen only in the best theater.
> There's a Paramount Theater Here
> ORPHEUM THEATER

To give you the idea: Opposite is a sample ad which could be used in nearly any form. The editor happened to be glancing through a magazine and saw the ad. It struck his eye on account of the brief wording and white space. The copy in the upper right hand corner read: "Your friends can buy anything you can give them—except your photograph." In the bottom of the ad was the key line "There's a photographer in your town. Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y." Just try this idea, and see if you cannot get up some very attractive copy. Anyone can do it, and no one will mind your having stolen the idea—and—striking ads are read quickly.

Mail List Stuff.

The Rowland and Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, just ooze suggestions. The latest is a chaser for the mailing list. They announced that the Film Forecast for the Regent would not be continued to the addressee unless he filled in and returned the post card inclosed. This is old stuff. Some such checking up at intervals is essential if the list is not to be burdened with deadwood. The novelty lies in the chaser. The week following instead of a portrait cut in the front page frame was this:

> NOTICE!
> For the convenience of those of our patrons who overlooked returning the postal card requesting the Film Forecast be mailed each week, we are again sending them the Forecast with card inclosed. Should same not be in your copy, will you please use coupon printed on inside front cover page?
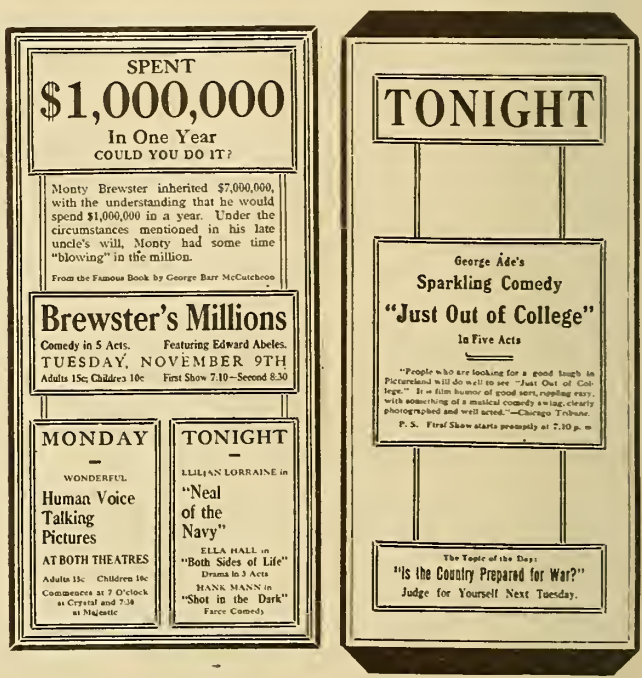
> THANK YOU!



No one is going to overlook that. And while we are at it we may as well reproduce the text that was used in making the request. It is a double mailing card, perforated, but printed for mailing only on the return half. This is addressed on one side and gives the proper blanks for name and address and remarks on the other. This text appears above:

> WE ASK YOUR AID.
> Requests that "The Film Forecast" be mailed each week are being received in such numbers that we will be compelled either to refuse further requests or eliminate all but those we know desire the "Forecast" mailed. . . .
>
> Will you assist us in our aim to serve each alike, by returning attached card in case you wish your name continued on our list?
> The Rowland and Clark Theaters.

Just tuck this away in your ideas file against the time you need it, for you will need it some time if you stay in business and—in reverse—you'll be more apt to stay in business if you need it.

Udells.

Here are a couple of Dave Udell advertisements from the Majestic, Paxton, Ill. They illustrate some good box work, though paneling is apt to mean extra expense for composition. But sometimes the extra cost for panel work means the difference between an advertisement that is seen and one that is not. The form on the right is particularly good where you have to fight a mass of black type advertisements. If the cost of paper keeps on going up Exhibitors will have to turn more and more to the newspapers instead of programs and throwaways, and it will pay to commence to study newspaper layouts now, if you have not already done so.

Carpenter's Scheme.

George Editor Carpenter, now that he has become a real manager of a real theater, is getting out some good ideas (though he has forgotten to send us any) and one of these appears in a recent Real Reels. In effect, it is no more than the fashion show on a small scale, small enough to match your town. You arrange with the large stores to loan their dresses and models, get up a pretty stage setting, and let models promenade across the stage as they do in some of the news weekiles. Announcement should be made of the dress model and the store loaning the garment, and if some practical woman can give a brief description of the style, so much the better. The announcing can be done by cards or slides. In the preliminary work you advertise the store and make the store advertise you, and you both win and at the same time pack the house with women and their escorts. The scheme is of value only when the styles change in the fall, winter, before Easter and as summer approaches, but it is good for a boom four times a year and can be made a feature each time. You must do a little hustling for it, but if you play it right you can make it something that will pull from the other nearby towns.

Humor.

One of the funniest things we've seen lately was in the V-L-S-E Pals in the shape of a form letter from the assistant advertising man of one of the constituent companies telling Tom North how he could get up newspaper advertising for the daily papers if an exhibitor asked him. And North printed it, though he knows more than his correspondent and could give him a large earful and only be starting in.

A Pink V. P.

The Garfield, Chicago, sends in a vest pocket program 2½x4½. The choice of color is not a happy one, for pink seldom works well, and this is rather a dead-looking pink. In four pages it runs the program for the week and the underline with descriptive matter for the house on the front page. Naturally it looks crowded and it would be better to use a five-point for the running lines if possible, but it does very nicely as it is and is handy and hard working. As an example of art printing it will take no blue ribbons, but it gives a lot for the money and the printer did not botch the job. That much matter in the space and some printers would lead to crime, but this looks pretty well. The house uses a simple means of checking up its mailing list. The envelopes are rubber-stamped with the address and the words "Return postage guaranteed." If the matter is not delivered, the house is notified, it sends a stamp for the return and marks that name off the list. This is something that many do not know, and yet it is one of the simplest forms of check and is almost automatic in its working.

Never Again!

We just stopped to remember that some time ago we published a portrait of Charles Decker, of Grand Junction, Colorado, and never heard from him again. We wonder why?

A Promise.

Ralph Ruffner says he is going to send an idea pretty soon. He is long overdue, but perhaps he will make good this time. Meantime is his old side kick fast asleep? Not a word from Bagley since he left Spokane.

Up to An Eight.

After cutting out programs for the summer and putting them back again, the Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., comes out with an eight-pager for a Famous Players' week. Can you remember back to the time when we used to have "Pathe Week" and later on "Biograph Week." Those were the happy days, indeed, when a feature was a one-reel done with new trimmings and the double was still unknown. It's harder to get up a "week" now that really counts, for features are common and are almost unknown. Why not try to get hold of some of the best ones of four years ago and have a "one reel week?" The result may surprise you. It's worth a trial, anyhow.

British Censorship.

From a batch of press clippings sent in by an Exhibitor, it is very evident that Great Britain is facing the same sort of struggle against officious and perhaps official interference that we have been. Exhibitors there, however, are not tied to a set program; they can pick their films with regard to their needs and it is possible to avoid the too lurid. There is only one way to fight a fanatical demand for censorship, and that is with sane argument and ridicule. Give the kiddie matinees that are already becoming popular, show a regular program that does not offend, and the great mass of the public will be on the side of the Exhibitor.

Very Neat.
